There is no evidence given that Mr. Stanton told Mr. Sumner any details other than were daily reported in the public press. But this evidence of Mr. Sumner is important, because it shows that while he was secretly associating with other prominent Republicans, and was secretly preparing the resolutions by which it was designed to accomplish the ruin of Mr. Toucey, Mr. Stanton sought and obtained a midnight interview with Mr. Sumner, who was no less than Mr. Seward identified with the bitterest foes of the administration of which Mr. Stanton was a member, and by which he was implicitly trusted.

Did not all these acts of Mr. Stanton tend to sustain the position which I have been challenged to maintain?

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman understand that the President and his Cabinet at that time were engaged in efforts to preserve the Union?

Mr. WHEELER. I do, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Were not these gentlemen with whom you say Mr. Stanton conferred engaged in efforts to preserve the Union?

Mr. WHEELER. That is a question which history must determine.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not your opinion?

Mr. WHEELER. Though it is undoubtedly true that the masses of the people of both parties anxiously desired the preservation of the Union, yet it must be admitted that some of the prominent Republican leaders were vastly opposed to the pacific measures by which Mr. Buchanan and his advisers hoped to avert its threatened disruption.

Mr. Buchanan, and I think a majority of the Northern people, felt that in the alarmed and excited condition of the country the Southern States should be assured protection in their constitutional rights under the administration of Mr. Lincoln. And the gentleman will admit that these Republican leaders declined giving these conciliatory views any consideration. The difference was this: Mr. Buchanan sought to save the Union by constitutional measures and by conciliation, while many Republican leaders openly advocated the attainment of this end by the force of arms.

Either method would have succeeded; the latter was finally adopted. I will show you that Mr. Stanton says himself that Mr. Buchanan was doing all he could to preserve the Union; and he applauds every act of Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that the efforts of these other gentlemen did result in preserving the Union?

Mr. WHEELER. That is a question we have not time to discuss to-night. The combined efforts of the people of the North restored the Union, but they were aided by a large number of soldiers from the South. The number of soldiers in the Federal Army from the Southern Sates was about equal to the entire strength of the confederate army.

Mr. HEPBURN. If that is true, why do you say Mr. Stanton was conferring with the enemies of the administration?

Mr. WHEELER. Because the political enemies of the Democratic party were the Republican party; the political enemies of the Republican party were the Democratic party.

Mr. HEPBURN. Were not all engaged in the same purpose—working for the same end?

Mr. WHEELER. Both parties in all times are engaged in doing all they can for the greatness and glory of their country, but they pursue different methods. Mr. Buchanan and the Democratic party sought to preserve the Union in one way, as I have shown, and Republican leaders determined to pursue another policy.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROUT. At that time was not the bulk of the Democratic party drifting into the rebellion?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir. The Democratic party of the North crushed the rebellion. After the war was precipitated they were as earnest in their efforts to restore the Union by that means as they had been to preserve it by pacific measures.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman allow me one other question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROUT. Did Mr. Stanton ever testify to the loyalty of Secretary Toucey?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir; I will show you that he did.

Mr. GROUT. Was that before or after he dispersed the war vessels of the United States into distant seas upon one manner of empty errand and another?

Mr. WHEELER. I am coming to all that. I will show you that Mr. Stanton certifies that Secretary Toucey did not do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WHEELER. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. You testify to Mr. Buchanan's fidelity to the Union?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir. Will any man in the United States question it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not a fact that a committee of Congress, of which Mr. Tappan, of my own State, was a member, waited upon Mr. Buchanan during the incipiency of the rebellion, requesting him to take immediate action to suppress the rebellion, and that Mr. Buchanan replied he knew of no power under the Constitution that would warrant him in undertaking to coerce a sovereign State? Is not that a matter of history?

Mr. WHEELER. I will say in reply that the history of that time shows that some of Mr. Buchanan's advisers contended for that position; but I will show that Mr. Stanton says that those advisers while so advising were opposed by Mr. Buchanan, and that Mr. Buchanan insisted on taking action and did take action. I will come to all that in a short time.

Mr. Tappan was a member of the committee of thirty-three. Some fifty resolutions were proposed by members of that committee of a conciliatory character. Mr. Tappan and Mr. Washburn were the only members as I recall it who offered resolutions which opposed guarantees, compromises, or concessions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it not a matter of history that Mr. Buchanan made that reply to that Congressional committee? Does not the gentleman know the fact as a matter of history?

Mr. WHEELER. It is a matter of history that at that time many of the leading people of the country regarded the use of coercive measures as a very questionable policy, and they all contended that every effort of conciliation should be first exhausted; and Mr. Stanton's letters to Mr. Buchanan show that he concurred in those views, and that such a policy controlled the first forty days of Mr. Lincoln's administration.

I will read some extracts from Mr. Buchanan's message to Congress of December 3, 1860:

* * * That the election of any one of our fellow-citizens to the office of President does not, of itself, afford just cause for dissolving the Union; and that;

In order to justify a resort to revolutionary resistance, the Federal Government must be guilty of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of powers not granted by the Constitution.

He denied that "secession" could be justified as a constitutional remedy, and asserted that—

Such a principle is wholly inconsistent with the history as well as the character of the Federal Constitution.

It is true he said that the duty of the Executive was to execute laws, not to enact them; but he appealed to Congress for the necessary legislation, and said:

Congress can contribute much to avert it by proposing and recommending to the Legislatures of the several States the remedy for existing evils which the Constitution has itself provided for its own preservation. This has been tried at different critical periods of our history, and always with eminent success.

In his message to Congress of January 8, 1861, Mr. Buchanan said:

At the opening of your present session I called your attention to the dangers which threatened the existence of the Union. I expressed my opinion freely concerning the original causes of those dangers, and recommended such measures as I believed would have the effect of tranquillizing the country and saving it from the peril in which it had been needlessly and most unfortunately involved.

* * * I also declared my opinion to be that, even if that right existed and should be exercised by any State of the Confederacy, the executive department of this Government had no authority under the Constitution to recognize its validity by acknowledging the independence of such State. * * *

The fact can not be disguised that we are in the midst of a great revolution. In all its various bearings, therefore, I commend the question to Congress as the only human tribunal under Providence possessing the power to meet the existing emergency. To them, exclusively, belongs the power to declare war or to authorize the employment of military force in all cases contemplated by the Constitution; and they alone possess the power to remove grievances which might lead to war, and to secure peace and union to this distracted country. On them, and on them alone, rests the responsibility. * * *

I, therefore, appeal through you to the people of this country to declare in their might that the Union must and shall be preserved by all constitutional means. I most earnestly recommend that you devote yourselves exclusively to the question how this can be accomplished in peace. All other questions, when compared with this, sink into insignificance.

The present is no time for palliatives; action, prompt action, is required.

A delay in Congress to prescribe or to recommend a distinct and practical proposition for conciliation may drive us to a point from which it will be almost impossible to recede.

I think these citations from Mr. Buchanan's message clearly indicate his attitude upon this question.

CABINET CONFIDENCES INVIOLABLE.

I think I may say there never was a man so lost to proper sentiments as not to feel the extent of the impropriety of sitting in Cabinet council during the day, advising with his chief and colleagues, and professing to aid them in their plans and policy, and then sitting in midnight conclave with the chiefs of the opposing party, and by various agencies secretly informing them of the Cabinet confidences and thereby aiding them in efforts to thwart the plans which he and his chief and his Cabinet colleagues had perfected during the day.

Mr. GROUT. What do you mean by "opposing parties," when you have said both parties were trying to save the Union, the Republican party and the Democratic party?

Mr. WHEELER. I say Mr. Buchanan was trying to save the Union.

Mr. GROUT. What do you mean?

Mr. WHEELER. And Mr. Stanton was trying to thwart his plans, and thus to neutralize his efforts.

Mr. GROUT. You do not claim the Republicans were trying to overthrow the Union when the Republicans were trying to save the Union?

Mr. WHEELER. I made no such intimation. I spoke of the Democratic party as one party and the Republican party as the other party.

The Republicans sought to maintain the Union by force of arms; the Democratic theory was to obtain the same result by guarantees and concessions.

Mr. Buchanan's opinion as to the binding force of the obligation resting upon those occupying these confidential relations is very forcibly expressed in a private letter which appears in the Life of the ex-President, by George Ticknor Curtis, volume 2, page 581, from which I read:

Since the origin of the Government there has been no case of violating Cabinet confidence except one, and the great man who was betrayed into it by violent prejudice was destroyed. It is moral perjury, and no Cabinet could exist if the consultations were not held sacred.

And upon page 588 of the same work I find another letter in which the same subject is referred to. I read:

In all free countries fidelity to the head of the government on the part of the members of his cabinet, whilst belonging to his political family, has ever been considered both a point of honor and duty, and has rarely, if ever, been violated. While at liberty to contract new political engagements, if they should betray to their new friends or the public what had transpired in the old cabinet, without the consent of its head, they would be held justly infamous.

The dates of these letters—the first one being dated February 10, 1862, and the second May 17 of the same year—show that Mr. Buchanan could not have known positively that any member or members of his own political family had been guilty of the violation of Cabinet confidences which he so vigorously condemns, for the truth regarding the relations of his Attorney-General, Mr. Stanton, with the Republican leaders was not made public until a long time afterward. We learn that about this time (January 16, 1862), in referring to Mr. Stanton, Mr. Buchanan wrote:

He [Stanton] was always on my side, and flattered me ad nauseam.

And Mr. Buchanan was not singular in this opinion of Cabinet confidences.

MR. STANTON'S SENSITIVE DELICACY.

I have a letter, dated March 10, 1861, written to Mr. Buchanan by one of his Cabinet officers, who it seems desired to place on record his utter detestation, loathing, and abhorrence of such impropriety (I will not use the word treachery). This letter would indicate that the writer appreciated that what transpired in a Cabinet meeting was sacred and that no one member could or should refer to it outside of that meeting for fear he might unwittingly say something that would reflect upon or do his brother Cabinet officers injustice, and the writer seems to take the high ground that even though it might be for the good of an imperiled country for him to give information to President Lincoln, yet for the reason I have mentioned he would feel it his duty to refuse to say anything regarding Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet councils unless all his brother Cabinet officers were present.

The delicate and refined sensibilities expressed by the writer indicate that he, for one, wished his late chief to understand that all that had transpired in the Cabinet while he was a member was regarded by him as sacred and inviolable.

Mr. Speaker, who would you suppose this man of such delicate sensibilities could have been? Which one of Mr. Buchanan's ministers do you suppose wrote and signed this letter, and thus, as shown by Mr. DAWES, Mr. Sumner, Mr. Seward, and Mr. Howard, administered such an overwhelming rebuke to the man who while he was a Cabinet officer did violate propriety and trust to an infinitely greater degree than could have been involved in a compliance with the request made by Mr. Seward and Mr. Lincoln?

Really, many very high-minded gentlemen would fail to see the impropriety of a prompt and unhesitating compliance with their request.

It seems that Mr. Seward, the Secretary of State, and President Lincoln sought to obtain information regarding what was called an "informal truce," which Mr. Stanton said had been indorsed, or favored, or at least concurred in, by General Scott and the Secretary of War, Judge Holt.

This information was important to them, as affording them official information regarding the existing status of the relations between the confederate and Federal authorities.

I believe there are few men who have been Cabinet officers who would have hesitated a moment, but I cite this letter to show the sacred regard with which some men maintain the sanctity of Cabinet councils, and their unwillingness to trust themselves, in the absence of their associates, to even refer to anything which transpired in Cabinet meetings.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, who do you suppose expressed these delicate sentiments? Who do you suppose wrote this letter?

I will exhibit the record.

I will send it to the Clerk's desk. I will ask him to read the signature.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Read it yourself.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well; the letter is signed "Edwin M. Stanton."

Mr. GROUT. Read the letter now.

Mr. WHEELER. I have read a part of it.

I have read the first paragraph which refers to the Star of the West, and the second paragraph which states that General Scott never urged the sending of any force to Sumter. I will now read what follows.

Third. A third point relates to what General Scott calls an informal truce entered into by you with certain persons from seceding States, under which the re-enforcement of Sumter and Fort Pickens was suspended. My recollection in respect to that transaction is that Mr. Holt and General Scott concurred with you in that arrangement, which, when proposed in Cabinet was opposed (approved?) by Judge Black and myself.

In his conversation with me Mr. Seward mentioned that Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet, when this subject came up, would desire me to be present, and also Mr. Holt. I told him that if all of the late Cabinet were requested to be present I would have no objection, but I did not think it proper unless all were present. He said that of course the invitation would be extended to all. As I never heard anything more on the subject, I suppose that they have found it only necessary to consult Mr. Holt, who continued acting as Secretary of War.

I desire to call particular attention to the word "opposed," which I think is a typographical error, and should be "approved."

I will state my reasons for this opinion:

First. Judge Black is known to have "approved" Mr. Buchanan's policy—certainly he did not oppose it.

Second. In a letter from Mr. Stanton to Mr. Buchanan, dated March 16, 1861, Mr. Stanton says:

I do not think there will be any serious effort to assail your administration in respect to Fort Sumter. That would imply a coercive policy on their part, and hostility to your pacific measures. The tendency of General Scott's remarks was rather to impute blame to Mr. Toucey than to any one else. And as Mr. Holt and the general concurred in everything done or written, their concurrence will defend you.

Third. In Curtis's Life of Buchanan, (volume 2, page 583) I find a letter from Mr. Buchanan to Mr. Stanton, dated February 25, 1862, in which, evidently referring to Mr. Stanton's letter from which I have quoted, he says:

Your particular attention must have been drawn to this subject a few days after the 4th of March, 1861, because in your letter to me of the 14th of that month, you state your recollection to be, that Mr. Holt and General Scott concurred with me in that arrangement, which you say, "when proposed in Cabinet was approved by Judge Black and myself."

It is contended by some that this is a matter in which I have no interest, and which I can not with propriety discuss.

I emphatically deny this assertion.

BUCHANAN'S POLICY COMMENDED.

At that time (January and February, 1861) we had peace in every corner of our land, and I was interested in, and desired the maintenance of, that peace as much as any other citizen. And it was my belief, as well as the belief of the majority of the best citizens of the United States, that adherence to the pacific measures of Mr. Buchanan would have preserved peace and secured the integrity and perpetuity of the Union. This was the opinion of Mr. Buchanan and of his Cabinet, and it seemed to be also the prevailing sentiment with Mr. Lincoln and his Cabinet when the new administration first came into power.

Judging from his letters to Mr. Buchanan, written during the early part of Mr. Lincoln's administration, this appears to have been the opinion of Mr. Stanton also.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? I made an engagement to leave in the train, and can not stay much longer, otherwise I would not interrupt him at this point. The gentleman in starting out in his remarks referred to my calling attention to the RECORD. The question I wish to ask is, whether the gentleman from Alabama in correcting the RECORD simply claims he struck out the word "arch," or that he corrected it in other respects beside that one instance?

Mr. WHEELER. I may have changed the grammar, and likely did so, but I did not change the sense. That is the privilege all persons in this House take. It is the universal rule.

Mr. BRUMM. My point is this. We want to get at the facts in the case, and that is the reason why I made the point. It is, whether the gentleman did not change the sense and essence of his remarks outside of striking out the word "arch?" Did he not do that in this respect: In his original remarks he said Stanton said and did conspire, and in changing his remarks he said that Stanton sought to conspire.

Now, inasmuch as a conspiracy always involves two or more, the very point of the controversy, when you say "Stanton and others," is not that a change of the sentence? Because if he sought to conspire, that he might have done alone, but if he did conspire, then others with whom he was in connection were as guilty as himself.

Mr. WHEELER. Whatever there may be in that technicality my change showed the impression I wished to make.

Mr. BRUMM. You say you did change it so as to say he sought to conspire and not that he did conspire?

Mr. WHEELER. We always do make changes, as the gentleman knows, so as to express our meaning.

Mr. BRUMM. The fact is the notes of the reporter show you did change to that extent.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to see them, but there is nothing material in the correction referred to.

Mr. BRUMM. I have the original, and will have them read if necessary.

Mr. WHEELER. I must resume my argument; I must press on. I will read now from the same letter of Mr. Stanton to Mr. Buchanan:

I am perfectly satisfied that Major Anderson will be withdrawn. Scott agrees with Anderson as to the force required to relieve Sumter, and evidently favors withdrawal of the troops. The same thing will no doubt be done in respect to Fort Pickens. The Montgomery commissioners have not yet applied for an audience. Various conjectures are made in respect to whether they will be received. I am also convinced by the general tone prevailing here that there is not the least design to attempt any coercive measure. A continuation of your policy to avoid a collision will be the course of the present administration.

From another letter of Mr. Stanton to the ex-President, dated Washington, March 16, 1861, I read:

The embarrassments that surrounded you they now feel, and whatever may be said against you must recoil as an argument against them. And in giving reasons for their action, they must exhibit the facts that controlled you in respect to Sumter.

Under date of April 3 the same correspondent writes his former chief:

The first month of the administration seems to have furnished an ample vindication of your policy and to have rendered all occasion of other defense needless.

In a letter dated May 16, 1861, Mr. Stanton gives Mr. Buchanan a glimpse of the interior workings of the new Cabinet. I read:

The negotiations carrried on by Mr. Seward with the confederate commissioners through Judge Campbell and Judge Nelson will, some day perhaps, be brought to light, and, if they were as has been represented to me, Mr. Seward and the Lincoln administration will not be in a position to make sneering observations respecting any negotiations during your administration.

DIRECT METHODS THE BEST.

The gentlemen justify these acts of Mr. Stanton because they say they were done to aid the cause which they say was God's cause.

Let me tell them that God never required any agencies which were not pure and honorable in accomplishing his purposes.

Even imperfect and frail human beings prefer direct and open methods, and scorn success attained by unworthy means. Lincoln would have abhorred a man who proposed to destroy a friend to achieve a purpose.

Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Rosecrans, McClellan, Buell, or Canby might have employed and used a spy to enter their opponents' camps, but they would have loathed his presence and distrusted him. No cause in the history of the world was ever benefited by such methods.

In morals and politics, as in law, insincerity or fraud injures, if it does not destroy, whatever it touches, and Holy Writ itself instructs us that we are not permitted to do evil that good may come.

It is an insult to the cause supported by Mr. Lincoln and General Grant to even suggest that it required such aid as was secured by Mr. Stanton's professing confidence and friendship for his associates and colleagues with his lips while his heart and head were engaged in efforts to accomplish their disgrace and ruin.

That the cause of the Union survived such questionable, unmanly, and unchivalric practices is the strongest evidence of the skill, courage, and devotion of the officers, soldiers, and statesmen who gave to its service only that which was true and noble.

Mr. PERKINS. If it will not interrupt the gentleman I would like to ask why, if that was his judgment, the Southern members should have left the Cabinet at that time?

Mr. WHEELER. Because they thought it right to do so.

Mr. PERKINS. I know, but why did they leave?

Mr. WHEELER. Because the country expected and every Southern man regarded it as his duty to leave.

Mr. GROUT. Did they feel it necessary to organize and equip troops, as was being done?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know about that; I was not there at the time.

Mr. GROUT. But you know it was being done.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; I recollect the last thing I saw in the New York Herald was that an attempt was made to enlist troops, and that they succeeded, after four weeks, in getting one private, while they had applications for four thousand offices.

Mr. GROUT. They were more successful in South Carolina.

WHY WAS THERE NO CLEMENCY?

Mr. WHEELER. The circumstances attending the execution of Mrs. Surratt recurred to my memory. I recalled the assertion of President Johnson that the recommendation for mercy and executive clemency was not presented to him, and that he did not know that the court had signed a recommendation for mercy until after the execution.

I had before me the statute which authorized the appointment of a Judge-Advocate-General, pursuant to which Judge Holt was appointed, and which contains the words:

And no sentence of death or imprisonment in the penitentiary shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the President.

The recommendation by the court for executive clemency was the most important paper in the case. This paper was, at least should have been, in the custody of the Judge-Advocate and Secretary of War, and the law made it the imperative duty of the Secretary to place it before the President.

This duty President Johnson says was not performed, and a woman since proven to have been absolutely innocent of the charges brought against her was executed.

I have had no time to investigate, but must trust to memory for most of these events. I recall Mr. Merrick's speech on the John Surratt trial. Mr. Merrick repeatedly charged that this recommendation to mercy was never placed before Mr. Johnson. This charge was made, and the district attorney was challenged to bring a refutation of the charge, and during all of this discussion, lasting nearly two weeks, the charge was never refuted. If this charge had not been true, its falsity would certainly have been established during that trial.

President Johnson was within a stone's throw, and if the charge was not true its refutation by his evidence could easily have been secured.

Mr. Merrick asked:

Who stood between her and the seat of mercy? Has conscience lashed the Chief of the Bureau of Military Justice? Does memory haunt the Secretary of War?

I will refer now to the case of Fitz-John Porter.

MR. LINCOLN DECEIVED.

In court-martial proceedings which require the approval of the Executive the law makes it imperative that the evidence be placed before the President, and if an abbreviated summary of the evidence is substituted it should be truthful, not garbled or false, and as this statement is transmitted to the President by the Secretary of War it becomes his duty to see that it is such a presentation of the evidence as will insure justice to the accused as well as to the Government.

Governor Newell, of New Jersey, a personal and political friend of Mr. Lincoln, referring to Mr. Lincoln's action in the case of General Porter, testified in these words:

Mr. Lincoln stated that he had not been able to give that personal attention to the cause which its merits required; that he had accepted the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General and of the War Department as the basis of his action; that if any evidence exculpatory of General Porter could be introduced he would be very glad to give him an opportunity to have it presented; that he had a high regard for General Porter personally and as a soldier, and that he hoped he would be able to vindicate himself in that way.

Here we have the statement of Mr. Lincoln himself that these two men acting together had caused him to accept their view and opinion as the basis of his (Mr. Lincoln's) action.

It will be observed that Mr. Lincoln acted upon the opinion of Mr. Stanton and Judge Holt. Mr. Stanton was a Cabinet officer and almost constantly had the ear of the President. What verbal opinion he expressed to Mr. Lincoln we can not know, but Congress called for and obtained the written opinion which was transmitted by the War Department to Mr. Lincoln.

This paper from the War Department and Judge-Advocate-General is now before the country, and it was this paper, together with such verbal opinions as Mr. Stanton expressed to the President, which Mr. Lincoln said he accepted as the basis of his action; and I felt that this written opinion alone, even without the probably more damaging and extravagant verbal opinion, fully justified my statement that Mr. Stanton conspired with Judge Holt to drag down an officer.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama with his consent. We all want to read this carefully and the reply, and we can not listen to this to-night without overworking ourselves. Would it not be entirely proper to print the balance?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed to-night.

Mr. PRICE. I understand the gentleman is not using the exact language he intends to print, but only extracts from it; and we want to read it carefully, so as to know how to reply.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Let him proceed now.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman may rest assured that all I say will appear in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the proceeding is by unanimous consent. The gentleman can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. After he gets the floor by unanimous consent he can then proceed.

Mr. PRICE. I beg pardon; he can not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not decide that question in advance, but has an opinion upon the subject.

Mr. WHEELER. The facts in this case have been so recently and so fully presented to the House and are too familiar to all to render it necessary to recapitulate them at length. It has been clearly demonstrated that General Porter was unjustly condemned, and wishing to repair, so far as possible, this grievous wrong to a gallant officer, the Forty-eighth Congress passed a bill restoring him to his rank in the Army. The bill was vetoed by President Arthur upon the ground that its phraseology was such as to give it the effect of an interference with the prerogatives of the Executive.

All the circumstances attending the appointment of Judge Holt to the position of Judge-Advocate-General, the first important duty he performed in his new office, the manner in which he conducted the trial of General Porter, the continuous and habitual disregard of his duty in putting leading questions to witnesses, all tend irresistibly to produce the impression that the object of the trial was not the punishment of an offender, but the disgrace of an officer "who did not conform to his views or sustain the line of policy he had inaugurated."

THE TRIUMPH OF DECEPTION.

And the means by which effect was given to the sentence of the court-martial still further confirms the presumption of prearranged determination to work the ruin of this officer at all hazards.

It was, as we have seen, the duty of the Judge-Advocate-General to submit, with the finding of the court, the evidence, or a full, fair, and impartial summary of the evidence, upon which that finding was based. The record of the proceedings and this summary were transmitted to the President by the Secretary of War.

This was the first court-martial of real importance held during the war. Whether it was organized to protect and maintain the efficiency of the Army, or whether, as has been charged, its object was merely the degradation of the accused, the Secretary of War was too deeply interested in the case to permit us to believe that he failed to read the evidence from day to day as the trial progressed. The summary of the evidence prepared by the Judge-Advocate-General would necessarily exert a potent influence on the President's action in the case, and the Secretary of War was too anxious to be assured that his subordinate had discharged his duty efficiently to have possibly allowed the summary to pass through his hands unread.

Now, let us see how this summary of the evidence, prepared by the Judge Advocate-General, read by the Secretary of War, and by him transmitted to the President, mangled the case of the accused.

TRUTH AND MISREPRESENTATION.

Referring to the 4.30 p. m. order (the one important order in the case) and the time of its delivery to the accused, the summary of the evidence led the President to believe that it had been clearly proved the accused could not have had less than two hours of daylight in which to make the attack, when in fact the order was not delivered until sunset.

To arrive at this misleading conclusion the compilers of the paper appear to have rejected the positive testimony of five officers, namely: General Sykes, Lieutenant-Colonel Locke, Captain Monteith, Lieutenant Weld, and Lieutenant Ingham, "who deposed that the order was not received until about sundown," and accept the opinion of an orderly, who, six months after the occurrences, testifies as to what he "thinks," and the evidence of General Pope's brother, whose cross-examination showed that his evidence was based upon mere surmise and opinion.

Mr. GROUT. Is not the time when that order was received fixed by the note from Warren to Sykes as having been previous to 5.40 p.m.?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; there is no such evidence.

Mr. GROUT. There is positive proof of that fact in the note from Warren to Sykes, which speaks of the orders passing between Morrell and Pope in front and the movements in response to the 4.30 order.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall not go into that subject now, but—

Mr. GROUT. The note from Warren to Sykes, of which I speak, appeared in the "Rebellion Records," and shows the order from Pope was received by Porter long before 4.45 p. m., whereas the sun did not set that day till 6.36.

Mr. WHEELER. I will inform the gentleman that Warren was not a witness on Porter's trial, and that General Sykes's testimony is on page 177 of the court-martial record, and he swears that the order arrived "as near sunset as he could remember," and there is nothing in General Morrell's testimony to contradict this; on the contrary, he confirms it.

Mr. GROUT. No; we have had enough of the Porter business already. It has all been gone over.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall not go into that now.

Again, from the statements of the summary the President could not escape the conclusion that on the 29th of August a furious battle was raging within hearing of the accused, and that he stood idly by and listened to the sounds of the conflict for the five or six hours preceding half past 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when in fact there was no general battle on the 29th of August, but only a series of sharp and obstinate engagements by small fractions of the Army, and even these did not begin until late in the afternoon.

To illustrate: This paper, sent from the War Department to the President, and upon which he relied, said:

The accused had, for between five and six hours, been listening to the sounds of the battle raging immediately to his right. Its dust and smoke were before his eyes, and the reverberation of its artillery was in his ears.

This statement was laid before President Lincoln by Mr. Stanton and Judge Holt when the evidence of Major-General John F. Reynolds, which showed its utter falsity, was staring them in the face. I will read from General Reynolds's testimony (court-martial record, page 170):

Q. On the 29th, before 4 o'clock p. m., what was the character of the battle—artillery or infantry?
A. Principally artillery.
Q. About what time did the infantry fire commence in force and volume?
A. As near as I can recollect it must have been between 4 and 5 o'clock, probably 5 o'clock; that is, I refer to the part near me. There may have been infantry firing on the right which I could not hear.

General Reynolds's troops were nearer to General Porter than any other portion of General Pope's line of battle, and he was 3 miles to General Porter's right, and he says if there was infantry firing it was so far to his right that he could not hear it. Now, if there had been firing on the right Porter was 3 miles farther from it than Reynolds.

Generals Schofield, Terry, and Getty, in referring to the 29th of August, say:

That battle consisted of a number of sharp and gallant combats between small portions of the opposing forces. These combats were of short duration and were separated by long intervals of simple skirmishing and artillery duels. Until after 6 o'clock only a small part of the troops on either side were engaged at any time during the afternoon. Then, about sunset, one additional division on each side was engaged near Groveton.

And with regard to the events of that day General Grant says:

Until 1881, when I re-examined for myself, my belief was that on the 29th of August, 1861, a great battle was fought. * * * Now, on a full investigation of facts, I find that the battle was fought on the 30th of August; that your (Porter's) corps, commanded directly by you (Porter) in person, lost a greater percentage than any other corps engaged.

But to completely expose the falsity of this deceptive paper upon this point, all of Pope's orders and his correspondence with his corps commanders were before the court, and none of these letters or orders speak of a battle prior to half past 4 o'clock, or of the army as doing anything else than either marching or preparing to fight.

Again: From this summary the President was positively informed that the command of the accused numbered thirteen thousand men, when in fact he had but about nine thousand, and it also stated that only a small force of the enemy was in his front, when in fact he was confronted by nearly if not quite three times his own numbers.

The Stanton and Holt paper says:

There is some contrariety in the evidence as to the force of the enemy by which the accused was opposed. The weight of the testimony is that it was small—decidedly so in the early part of the afternoon.

* * * * * * *

It is believed that at no time on the 29th could the accused have been confronted by a rebel force exceeding seven thousand—a little more than half the strength of his own corps. The strong probability is that the force was not so large.

The fact is, the evidence showed that Longstreet's corps and Stuart's cavalry were directly in Porter's front. It was positively known further that these bodies of the enemy were estimated at from twenty-five thousand to thirty-five thousand men. Col. E. J. Marshall, of Porter's corps, who was engaged with the enemy at one point, testifies regarding them (page 268 court record):

It was a very large force, and they were drawn up in line of battle as they came down. * * * Their position was a very strong one, and they were certainly in force at that time twice as large as our own force—all of Porter's corps.

These are only specimen bricks of this adroit aud skillful misrepresentation of material and essential facts in the case. The whole paper is not merely misleading, it is instinct with deception throughout, and it is not surprising that it imposed upon an honest, unsuspicious trustful man like Mr. Lincoln.

So good a lawyer as the Secretary of War, familiar with the evidence as he must have been, could not possibly have bestowed the least critical examination on such a paper without detecting its manifest partiality, its glaring injustice to the accused, and yet it was solely upon the representations of this paper, coupled with any verbal opinions the Secretary may have advanced, that Mr. Lincoln approved the sentence of the court.

I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to other authorities, and I will read from Montgomery Blair.

Mr. GROUT. Who is Montgomery Blair?

Mr. WHEELER. He was Postmaster-General under that administration. This is a letter written by Mr. Blair to General Porter, which we find in the Porter case, page 531:

When they tried you, the War Department wanted to excuse Pope's defeat and their share of the business. That honest and able man, Secretary Welles, in his defense of Mr. Lincoln, tells how Stanton met the emergency. He charged the blame on McClellan. He demanded of Mr. Lincoln his instant dismissal. He tried to engage the whole Cabinet in it. He tried to get them all to sign a paper drawn by him to compel Mr. Lincoln's consent. But Mr. Lincoln thought McClellan only could rally the army, and he went to him and asked him to resume the command. That put a check on the business until McClellan was finally removed; and then the charges were worked up against you.

I will also read a paragraph from Hon. Gideon Welles's work, entitled "Lincoln and Seward," page 193, which refers to the paper mentioned by Mr. Blair:

I declined to sign the paper, which was in the handwriting of Stanton, not that I did not disapprove of the course of the general, but because the combination was improper and disrespectful to the President, who had selected his Cabinet to consult and advise with, not to conspire against him.

I wish to call special attention to this expression of Secretary of the Navy, Welles, where he speaks of Mr. Stanton as conspiring against Mr. Lincoln while a member of his Cabinet, and also gives as his (Welles's) reason for not signing the paper that it was "because the combination was improper and disrespectful to the President."

If Mr. Stanton's colleague in Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet boldly charges Mr. Stanton with conspiring against his chief, Mr. Lincoln, may not the gentlemen pardon me for my inadvertent expression?

A MASTERPIECE OF CRAFT.

But as bad as all this is, worse remains behind. If I am correct in my surmise the primary object of the Secretary of War and his Judge-Advocate-General was accomplished when the President had been imposed upon and deceived into approving the sentence of the court. But after this it became necessary to satisfy the country that no injustice had been done, that the condemned officer had been most leniently dealt with. To do this it had to be shown that General Porter did in fact stand aloof from his comrades during the whole continuance of a great battle in progress in his immediate vicinity. But the evidence before the court-martial would not show anything of the kind. On the contrary, it would have shown that General Porter was a victim, not a culprit.

Here was apparently a most perplexing dilemma for the Secretary and his Judge-Advocate-General. But if they were not equal to the exigency, some sympathizing friend, of great ingenuity and singular fertility of resource, was equal to it for them.

A copy of Stonewall Jackson's official report of a battle in which he was long and obstinately engaged with a most determined enemy was procured and published to the world as the confederate account of the great battle to which General Porter listened unmoved and so unconcerned that he made no attempt to participate in it. This settled the matter. It drove the nail home into the popular belief and clinched it. The published report of the confederate general was read everywhere, its authenticity and accuracy were doubted by none, and General Porter became the object of almost universal detestation as a traitor who had been undeservedly fortunate in escaping the death he so richly merited.

Now, can it be believed that the brunt of the battle which the confederate general reported as having been so stubbornly and bloodily contested, and for non-participation in which Porter had been so generally execrated, was actually borne by General Porter's own command, under his personal and immediate leadership and direction; that by another piece of marvelous dexterity and sublime yet simple audacity in making Jackson's report of the battle of August 30 read as the account of a battle fought on August 29, public opinion was made to condemn General Porter as a traitor for not taking part in his own fight? And this extraordinary result was achieved by merely changing the dates in a rebel general's report.

I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not charge Mr. Stanton with being personally the author of this more than questionable piece of finesse, but as it has been admitted under oath that it was the work of an officer whose relations with Mr. Stanton had been very intimate, I cite it as establishing the admitted necessity of using craft in the efforts to convince the country that no imposition had been practiced upon Mr. Lincoln.

Still Mr. Stanton undeniably possessed qualities of a pronounced order, and by some they were regarded as soldierly characteristics and as an evidence of military talent. General James B. Fry, who was Provost-Marshal-General of the United States during 1863, 1864, and 1865, whose position gave him exceptionally advantageous opportunities of becoming intimately acquainted with Mr. Stanton's peculiarities, in a recent work gives this candid opinion of the moral and mental constitution of the "great war Secretary:"

While he was strictly honest, before him justice was powerless and personal rights were trifles. The cause was everything, and his will was the cause. Modifying Richelieu's maxim, "first use all means to conciliate, then all to crush," he tried to conciliate only when he thought he could not crush. * * *

It has been said that "law is the most narrowing and degrading of all professions," and that "the habitual study of it is demoralizing." That depends, very much at least, on natural gifts. If it was verified in Stanton certainly it was contradicted in Lincoln. * * *

Impressed by the importance of despotic sway in war, he overestimated the value of terror, and sometimes hastily dispatched the accused for the sake of the example.

AN ELASTIC CODE OF MORALS.

It may be that some gentlemen may be able to find in the circumstances of the troubled times mid which they were placed a perfect and satisfactory justification for the course of the Secretary of War and his Judge-Advocate-General in this whole proceeding against General Porter. They may contend that Mr. Stanton foresaw—or honestly thought he foresaw—that the success of the Union cause was imperiled by the devotion of the principal army of the country to its commander; that the paramount consideration with him was the preservation of the Union, and that such minor questions as personal rights and justice to individuals should have been, and very properly were, regarded as subordinate.

This idea is very forcibly presented by my Republican friend from New York [Mr. WEBER] in his speech on the Fitz-John Porter bill, from which I read:

Who knows but that the military necessities of the situation required just such an arbitrary act, to sacrifice one for the good of the many. Only those who served in the Peninsula campaign can realize or comprehend that intense McClellanism which pervaded that Army of the Potomac in 1862.

* * * * * *

That feeling, that spirit of McClellanism, capable of being used to such great advantage, worthy and desirable if so used, was nevertheless a great obstacle to the success of the army with another commander to lead it, and that spirit needed extinction, even if by arbitrary acts an innocent man should suffer. It is a cruel theory, but as Sherman has pithily expressed it, "war is a cruelty and can not be refined."

But, Mr. Speaker, even if we accept this elastic code of moral obligation, I maintain that such acceptance does not affect the fact.

It may have been necessary to "sacrifice one for the good of the many," but if the sacrifice was effected by indirect methods; if it was accomplished by and through collusion between the Secretary of War and his Judge-Advocate-General designed to impose upon their confiding and unsuspicious chief, General Porter was the victim of a conspiracy. For a conspiracy is the combination of two or more persons to accomplish an unlawful purpose by concerted action.

All the proof shows that General Porter was such a victim.

A DUTY PERFORMED.

I have done with this branch of the subject, Mr. Speaker. A most unwelcome and painful task has been forced upon me as a duty, a duty to myself, a duty to the people with whom I have ever been and always shall be identified in feeling and sentiment, and a duty to the truth of history.

That duty is now performed. I have shown from the record that an innocent woman was executed despite a recommendation to executive clemency, that recommendation being studiously kept from the Executive. I have shown that officers were dismissed the service so unjustly that Congress has felt constrained to use its power to repair the wrongs inflicted upon them by the Secretary of War. I have shown from the testimony of his own friends that Mr. Stanton systematically violated the confidence and trust reposed in him by President Buchanan and his Cabinet. And, finally, I feel that I have shown that he sought to destroy General Porter by practices and methods which have been in effect condemned by Generals Grant, Schofield, Terry, and Getty, and which Mr. Lincoln would also have condemned had his life been spared.

I maintain, therefore, that it is incontestably established that I was justified in saying that Mr. Stanton "sought to conspire to drag down officers who did not conform to his views or sustain the line of policy that he had inaugurated."

This uncongenial and unpleasant duty has been thrust upon me. Sincerely—I had almost said laboriously—I endeavored to escape it. But I was not permitted to evade it, and though it was unwillingly undertaken, I trust the gentlemen who forced it upon me are satisfied with the manner in which it has been discharged.

Mr. Stanton may have been a great man, may have rendered great services to the Republican party, and the country may be largely indebted to his undoubted ability. But can the proof be questioned which shows that he professed fealty and devotion to one set of party friends, while at the same moment he was secretly conferring with and aiding their enemies; can they question the proofs which show that he was insatiable in engrossing power and arbitrary and ruthless in exercising it; that he sought to accomplish the disgrace and ruin of one officer of the Government by acts which I doubt if many members of this House will approve, and secured the dismissal of another by devices equally reprehensible?

In a desire to be even extreme in punctiliousness regarding the use of language I had chosen to ask a withdrawal of the objectionable words, although words much more extreme are almost constantly and without comment used upon this floor; and if it can be shown that I, in defending myself from the imputation that I had been without warrant in my unpremeditated assertion that Mr. Stanton sought to drag down officers, &c., I will gladly give it the most emphatic retraction; but before this is demanded at least some of the evidence I have cited must be disproved.

It must be shown that Mr. Stanton, while a member of Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet, did not keep Republican members of Congress informed of what was going on in the councils of Mr. Buchanan's administration, and that Mr. Stanton had no part in the proceeding, one purpose of which was a serious reflection upon Mr. Toucey, and that he did not cause either the arrest or dismissal of officers whose innocence and faithfulness have since been so abundantly proven as to cause their restoration to duty or their exoneration by Congress.

And the statement of Hon. Gideon Welles, Lincoln's Secretary of the Navy, must also be disproved where he charges Mr. Stanton with conspiring against the President in his efforts to dismiss and therefore "drag down" Major-General McClellan, the commander of the Army of the Potomac. Will any one attempt to show that Mr. Lincoln did not inform Governor Newell that he accepted the opinion, and therefore relied upon the Secretary of War to guide him in his action regarding General Porter?

Will any one attempt to disprove the statements of Mr. Wilson, Mr. Seward, Mr. Sumner, Mr. DAWES, Mr. Welles, and Mr. Howard, or try to impeach the statements of Andrew Johnson? Unless all this can be done, it must be admitted that I was neither wanton nor without warrant.

ORGANIZED VICTORIES.

But it is claimed that I have also offended the gentlemen by introducing the name of an official who seems to be their ideal of a great and most successful general.

I have never made any comment upon Mr. Stanton's military capacity, and should not do so now did I not feel that by allowing their challenge on this point to pass unanswered I should become a party to an injustice to the living and the dead. I should have preferred that the duty of showing that Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Thomas, Rosecrans, Buell, Schofield, and Canby owe no particle of their military fame to the guidance and control of any civilian had fallen into abler hands. But as the worshipers and panegyrists of Mr. Stanton have challenged me directly to the proof, and as the task is easily within the range of even my feeble powers, and as there is very strong evidence that Mr. Stanton did not desire that character of reputation, I unhesitatingly accept the issue forced upon me, trusting that the unaided potency of facts and the unvarnished truth of history may suffice to convince this House that my challengers' party idol was no such demi-god as they would have the world believe.

Mr. Stanton would not thank the gentlemen for their attempt to ascribe to him the possession of great military genius. He not only made no pretensions to soldierly capacity, but those most intimate with him assert that he estimated such talent as indicating a different and lower order of ability than that upon which he prided himself and for which he wished to be remembered. As confirmatory of this I quote from a recent military work by Maj. Gen. James B. Fry, United States Army, note, on page 199:

A young lawyer, who served in Stanton's own office while he was Secretary of War, writes: "I revere Stanton, but I shut my eyes to no man's defects. For a man of his transcendent ability he was narrow-minded; he overrated his own profession of the law, and he contemned the military profession."

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] says Mr. Stanton "organized victory."

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] says:

He was the man who directed as no other living man could all the manœuvers and operations of the Federal Army.

Do the gentlemen mean to say, do they wish the country to believe, that Generals Grant and Sherman and McClellan and Sheridan and Rosecrans and Buell did not lead or direct their armies? Did they go to Mr. Stanton's feet to learn how to manage their armies?

McClellan says this of Mr. Stanton:

So long as Mr. Cameron was Secretary of War I received the cordial support of that Department, but when he resigned the whole state of affairs changed. I had never met Mr. Stanton before reaching Washington in 1861. He at once sought me and professed the utmost personal affection, the expression of which was exceeded only by the bitterness of his denunciation of the Government and its policy. The more serious difficulties of my position began with Mr. Stanton's accession to the War Office.

Did General Sherman go to Stanton to learn the art of war, to be taught by this man, who, the gentleman from Iowa says, directed armies as no other living man could?

Regarding some orders sent to him by Mr. Stanton, which purported to come from the President, General Sherman says:

The publication of this bulletin by authority was an outrage on me. * * * I regarded this bulletin of Mr. Stanton as a personal and official insult, which I afterward publicly resented. * * * I found that General Halleck had ordered General Davis's corps (the Fourteenth) for review by himself. This I forbade. All the Army knew of the insult that had been made me by Secretary of War and General Halleck, and watched me closely to see if I would tamely submit.

* * * * * * *

The next day I met General Grant and President Johnson. The latter was extremely cordial to me, and knowing that I was chafing under the censures of the War Department, especially of the two war bulletins of Mr. Stanton, he volunteered to say that he knew of neither of them till seen in the newspapers, and that Mr. Stanton had shown neither to him nor to any of his associates in the Cabinet till they were published. Nearly all the members of the Cabinet made similar assurances to me afterward, and I declined General Grant's friendly offices for a reconciliation, but on the contrary resolved to resent what I considered an insult as publicly as it was made. My brother, Senator SHERMAN, who was Mr. Stanton's neighbor, always insisted that Mr. Stanton had been frightened by the intended assassination of himself and had become embittered thereby. * * *

I inferred that Mr. Stanton, who was notoriously vindictive in his prejudices, would not consent to the employment of these high officers.

GENERAL GRANT HAD NO ADVISER.

Certainly he did not organize any victories for General Grant.

That great general says to us in his recent work, volume 2, page 123:

I did not communicate my plan to the President, nor did I to the Secretary of War.

General Badeau, in the May Century, says General Grant's determination and plans were all his own, and General Horace Porter and General J. H. Wilson, in their articles in the October Century, declare that if President Lincoln had any opinions regarding the campaigns he studiously kept them to himself so far as Grant was concerned, and that the President carefully abstained from any interference in military affairs. And history abundantly proves that President Lincoln not only abstained from interference himself, but was careful to see that no one else annoyed General Grant in this way.

It is stated in a recent publication that on one occasion, when Mr. Stanton attempted to interfere with his Army, General Grant went to the President, who sent for Mr. Stanton and said:

Mr. Stanton, we had better let General Grant manage his own affairs.

So far from conferring with or asking advice or accepting suggestions from Mr. Stanton, we see that General Grant was sometimes put to great inconvenience and lost valuable time in his many precautions to avoid the ill effects and annoyances of Mr. Stanton's efforts to interfere with his plans and, as the gentleman from New York would say, "organize victories." I read from page 327 of General Grant's Personal Memoirs:

On the 15th of September I started to visit General Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley. My purpose was to have him attack Early or drive him out of the valley, and destroy that source of supplies for Lee's army. I knew it was impossible for me to get orders through Washington to Sheridan to make a move, because they would be stopped there, and such orders as Halleck's caution (and that of the Secretary of War) would suggest would be given instead, and would, no doubt, be contradictory to mine. I therefore, without stopping at Washington, went directly through to Charlestown, some 10 miles above Harper's Ferry, and waited there to see General Sheridan.

Now, I hope the gentleman from New York will admit that General Grant conquered victories, and this great man says that he knew if Mr. Stanton had an opportunity to do so he would change the order, and he says no doubt that the order Stanton would have given would be contradictory to his.

This conclusion regarding Mr. Stanton must have been reached from his association after he reached Washington, as General Grant was too busy to have given much study to the victories Mr. Stanton organized for Frémont, Banks, Shields, Milroy, McDowell, and Pope in the spring and summer of 1862.

General Grant also says, on page 537 of his Memoirs:

The Secretary was very timid, and it was impossible for him to avoid interfering with the armies covering the capital when it was sought to defend it by an offensive movement against the army guarding the confederate capital.

He could see our weakness, but he could not see that the enemy was in danger. The enemy would not have been in danger if Mr. Stanton had been in the field.

GUARDING AGAINST POSSIBLE INJUSTICE.

But let me not do Mr. Stanton injustice. There was one period during the war when he had entire control. From March 11 to July 11, 1862, a period of four months, there was no general in chief, and, as Mr. Lincoln says, he (Mr. Lincoln) did not interfere with the armies much, Mr. Stanton must be accorded all the credit for the operations during that period. I can not say all, because I find from the records that he sent but few orders to General Halleck while in the West, but that he confined his efforts at organizing victories for the troops in Virginia and Kentucky. General McDowell was commanding the Department of the Rappahannock; General Frémont, the Mountain Department; General Banks commanding the Department of the Shenandoah, and Generals Shields and Milroy each had separate commands.

The correspondence between Mr. Stanton and these generals during that period was immense. I have seen as many as two hundred and forty such letters and orders, many of them giving specific and minute details regarding marches, strategy, tactics, &c., &c. They were no doubt intended to "organize victories."

The first fruit was the battle of Kernstown, March 23. The second the battle at McDowell, May 8. This was followed in quick succession by the battles of Front Royal, May 23; Winchester, May, 25 Cross Keys, June 8; and Port Republic, June 9. Mr. Lincoln failed to appreciate these organized victories of Mr. Stanton's, and hastened to order General Halleck and General Pope to the scene of action.

HALLECK'S ATTITUDE AS COMMANDER.

They reached Washington, but the subordinate position occupied by General Halleck is clearly stated by himself in a letter from which I read:

I am simply a military adviser of the Secretary of War and the President, and must obey and carry out what they decide upon, whether I concur in their decisions or not.

From this it appears that Mr. Stanton still retained his power and authority, and we find that most frequent and minutely detailed instructions were sent from Washington to direct the campaign which resulted in the numerous battles beginning with that at Cedar Run, August 9, and ending with Second Manassas, August 30, and Chantilly, September 1.

This closed the campaign, and Mr. Stanton yielded unrestricted control of the Army to General McClellan.

It must be admitted that during the preceding six months Mr. Stanton had directed most of the movements of this eventful period, and the gentleman from Iowa, speaking of Mr. Stanton, says:

He was the man who directed, as no other man could, all the movements and operations of the Federal Army.

I do not propose to controvert this statement of the gentleman, but I think General Grant would have less delicacy on the subject, as he says in his book, page 537:

The enemy would not have been in danger if Mr. Stanton had been in the field.

While McClellan was conducting the Antietam campaign Mr. Stanton was enabled to turn all his attention to General Buell, which the records show was most lavishly done, and the statements of General James B. Fry and others go far to justify the conclusion that the course pursued by the War Department regarding that army materially influenced its movements and rendered it responsible for the results.

The removal of General McClellan after the victory of Antietam gave Mr. Stanton another opportunity to exercise on the Army of Virginia the propensity to which General Grant on more than one occasion refers in his memoirs, and it would be unfair to deprive him of his full share of the credit attaching to the military results achieved at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville.

THE SOLDIER WHO FOUGHT.

It takes all kinds of characters to make a world and all kinds of men to make a congress.

General Willard Warner, a gallant soldier, who fought under General Sherman, and who was once a Senator of the United States, addressed the Society of the Army of the Cumberland on September 14, 1880. I hold the book containing his speech, a paragraph from which I will read:

General Garfield said right when he said that if the soldiers had all these difficult questions to settle they would have been settled happily long ago. I have lived here in the South.

There are men here who know me as a radical Republican of the worst kind. I have lived here for sixteen years of the prime of my life, and I say it here, with pride and thankfulness, that I have yet to receive the first word or the first act of unkindness from a confederate soldier, and I never expect to as long as I may live here.

Will any brave soldier in this Hall who remained until the end in the front rank of the armies led by Grant, Sherman, or Sheridan say that the men whom they met in battle have ever hesitated to accord to them the knightly qualities which made their achievements possible and brought final victory to the Union arms, despite the utmost efforts of those who fought under the Southern banner? Has any utterance ever come from the Southern soldier which malevolence itself could construe as an effort to take one sprig from the laurel wreath of victory which Federal soldiers won and which they have so modestly and worthily worn?

But does this unequivocal recognition of their skill and gallantry and devotion to their idea of duty oblige me or any other Southern man to admit that the same qualities were wanting in our comrades? Will any one here or anywhere in this broad land maintain that because we acknowledge and take pride in the courage and endurance of the Federal soldier who fought from the first to the close, we are deterred from repelling a taunt, a thinly-disguised sneer leveled at the soldiers whose perils we shared and in whose final overthrow we suffered? Especially as that taunt or sneer always comes from those who were either never in the field or left it when battles were most frequent and most obstinately contested.

I can not believe that there is one of them who would not scorn such ignoble and unmanly adulation. I am certain that none of the heroes of the Northern armies would willingly surrender the proud consciousness that their triumphs were won from worthy foes; that would exchange this glorious satisfaction for the degrading thought that for four years they were held in check by enemies who lacked manliness and self-respect.

A QUESTION OF OBLIGATION.

God forbid that I should utter one word or do one act to keep alive the enmities and dissensions of past differences or contentions, but may He also forbid that I should ever be brought so low as to dumbly acquiesce in untruthful charges or groundless imputations.

Whether as a humble participant in the struggle to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] so sneeringly alludes, or as a Representative in the American Congress, nothing in my past career or present position requires that I should surrender that manhood which is the birthright of every gentleman.

Our misfortunes, great as they have been, have not robbed us of our rights as citizens or lessened our dignity as gentlemen, and we shall defend our honor no matter where or by whom it be assailed.

We cherish no animosities. Loyally have we accepted the stern arbitrament of war. Unrepiningly have we submitted to every exaction. But the Anglo-Saxon spirit which has supported us through every disaster is ours still, and forbids us to be silent when it is assailed or impugned.

I had credited, and still credit, the great mass of the Northern people with the same spirit which had animated their soldiers; had supposed that the magnanimity and generous forbearance which forbade exultation by the soldiers in the hour of triumph might be relied upon to restrain any and all manifestations of a feeling of petty and paltry superiority on the part of those benefited by the result achieved by such valor and skill.

I had supposed—and until I have better evidence than the taunts of the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and New York [Mr. HISCOCK], I shall not admit that I was mistaken in my estimate—that the people of the North would be no less generous to fellow-Americans than Englishmen and Frenchmen had shown themselves to those who had once contended with them in battle's stern array.

BEARING OF TRUE SOLDIERS.

Only yesterday I read of the loud hurrahs and enthusiastic honors with which an English crowd—the Duke of Wellington being one prominent figure in the pageant—received Marshal Soult when he visited London on the occasion of Queen Victoria's coronation.

Recently I read the letter of Napoleon III recounting his participation in the ceremony of decorating and beautifying the graves of English soldiers who had fallen and were buried at Toulon.

In English history I find that Oliver Cromwell is honored equally with the greatest of Britain's kings, and we see England treasuring the perfume of glory won by the heroes of her "wars of the roses," regardless of whether it come from the white rose of York or the red rose of Lancaster. I see the picture of the great Napoleon lying in state with Louis XVI and the monarchs who preceded him on one side, and the rulers who ascended the throne after Napoleon was sent to St. Helena lying upon the other.

I learn from the record that—

After the surrender of Lee they [the Union Army] began, without orders, to salute him [General Grant] with cannon, but he directed the firing to cease, lest it should wound the feelings of the prisoners, who, he said, were once again our countrymen.—General Badeau in Century, May, 1885.

The same writer tells us that General Grant refused to have a picture of the surrender of Lee placed in the rotunda, because "he should never consent, so far as he was concerned, to any picture being placed in the Capitol to commemorate a victory in which our own countrymen were the losers."

I hear Abraham Lincoln's immortal words, "With malice toward none, but with charity for all," and I see him on the field of Gettysburg, where, after eulogizing the men who held the heights, he looked down on the graves of those who charged that steep hill-side, and I hear him, with voice thrilling with the emotion which filled his great heart, exclaim:

Those men will live in history also, and I shall always be proud to remember that they were my countrymen.

These two expressions can never die so long as the English tongue survives on earth; and it was the traits of Mr. Lincoln's character from which emanated such expressions as these which have endeared him to all Americans and won for him the admiration of the world.

Here there was no thought or suggestion of one man's sovereign grace; no talk of the hangman's noose. That was reserved for a later day, and, I regret to say, for a widely different character.

No words of mine can give any added emphasis to the contrast between these two characters; but I venture to ask the members of this House which one they regard as the most admirable or most to be envied?

THE STRONGER ARM PREVAILED.

One gentleman speaks of the strong arm of Stanton, and another says we live to-day because Stanton, among others, was willing that we might live. I will inform the gentlemen that my reading of history leads me to believe that the strong arm of Stanton, backed by those who thought like him, would have arrested, imprisoned, and tried those who surrendered at Appomattox and Greensborough, had not that strong arm been staid by the stronger arm of Generals Grant and Sherman, Sheridan, Rosecrans, Thomas, Schofield, Hancock, and Canby, and the brave officers and soldiers who fought with them.

Has the gentleman forgotten that an order was issued for the arrest of General Lee? And has he forgotten (I read from General Badeau in the Century Magazine for May, 1886) that—

General Grant declared he would resign his position in the Army unless the terms granted at Appomattox Court House were respected.

Has he forgotten that General Grant said (I read from the same author):

In my opinion the officers and men paroled at Appomattox Court House and since, upon the same terms given to General Lee, can not be tried for treason so long as they observe the terms of their parole.

Has the gentleman forgotten that even before all the troops of the confederacy had been disbanded General Grant wrote, upon the application of General Robert E. Lee, the words:

Respectfully forwarded through the Secretary of War to the President, with the earnest recommendation that the application of Robert E. Lee for amnesty and pardon may be granted him?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman a question in this connection.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Discussing character, as the gentlemen now is doing, and recognizing the gentle character of Mr. Lincoln, would it not be as appropriate to have due regard for the men who, like Stanton, had to deal blows where blows were needed?

Mr. WHEELER. I think I have given Mr. Stanton his due in all that I have said. That is just what I have done. I have taken particular pains to speak of Mr. Stanton's strong qualities, and have done so in a most complimentary manner.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I mean, at this time, since you recognize the character of Mr. Lincoln as being gentle and kindly, is it not also proper that you should give Mr. Stanton his due, who was ready to give blows for his country when blows were necessary? I was not present when my colleague addressed the House upon this question, but my understanding is that he took that position.

HOLMEDON AND APPOMATTOX.

Mr. WHEELER. The feelings and sentiments which animated the brave men whose courage and skill were crowned by the triumph at Appomattox must have been widely different from those which the gentleman from Iowa appears to have cherished for twenty-one years and has finally unpacked in his recent utterances on this floor.

The great general who had so successfully commanded these gallant soldiers undoubtedly voiced the sentiment of the whole army when, in the preliminary negotiations for General Lee's surrender, he wrote, "Seriously hoping that all our difficulties may be settled without the loss of another life."

Does the gentleman think that he is better entitled to speak for the fighting men of the Union armies than General Grant, or that the latter did not express the real opinions and sentiments of those who won the victories of which others boast, when he wrote to General Lee—

* * * there is but one condition I would insist upon, namely: That the men and officers surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged.

Or would he have us believe that the true soldiers of the Union armies at any time desired, in April, 1865, or in May, 1886, a disregard or violation of their faith as pledged to their former antagonists in the distinct and positive agreement—

* * * Each officer and man will be allowed to return to his home, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they observe their paroles and the laws in force where they may reside.

Those familiar with the methods adopted by soldiers to manifest their detestation of any and every thing unmanly and revengeful can readily imagine the reception which Grant's army would have accorded to an implacable and ferocious civilian who, after resting quietly in his comfortable home during that last year of continuous and desperate fighting, should have visited their camp and talked about hanging the men and officers who were under the protection of General Grant's parole. Why, sir, the carefully polished boots, the "biled" shirt, "store clothes," and glossy beaver in which the sanguinary-minded man of peace had been careful to array himself, as indicating his vast superiority to mere fighting soldiers, would only have tended to increase the derision and scorn with which his proposition would have been received, and if he escaped a coat of tar and feathers he might have considered himself undeservedly and exceptionally fortunate.

Man's circumstances and surroundings may change, but human nature is the same in all ages and under all conditions, and the great master delineator of the workings of the human heart, has, in Hotspur's account of the bearing and language of the courtier who demanded the prisoners he had taken on Holmedon field, so very accurately portrays the scorn with which the soldiers of Grant's army would have received such an emissary as I have imagined that I can not forbear quoting the passage:

I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dressed,
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new reaped,
Showed like a stubble-land at harvest time.
He was perfumed like a milliner;
* * * * *
* * * —and still he smiled and talked;
And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He called them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly, unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so pestered with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answered neglectingly, I know not what;
He should, or he should not;—for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds (God save the mark!)
And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parmaceti for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villainous saltpeter should be digged
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good, tall fellow had destroyed
So cowardly; and but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.

WHO CHERISH ANIMOSITIES.

General WARNER, the friend and the associate of Lincoln and Garfield, emphasized his view regarding soldiers in these words:

The harsh words and language and insults come from those gentlemen, largely professional politicians * * * who talk now but who shirked in the fight when fighting men were in sharp demand. And now I say, confusion to them. Confounded confusion to them—to the men who now, sixteen years after we fighting soldiers have laid down our arms, would wave their red flag in the face of this sorrowing nation. Their time has gone by, and the soldiers should everywhere be heard, as they are being heard to-day.

I will not use as severe words as those uttered by this distinguished

Federal general and United States Senator, but I will go so far as to say that none of those who were confederate soldiers have during the twenty-one years since 1865 ever received aught but kindness, respect, and courtesy from the brave men of the Federal Army who for four years stood in the front rank of battle.

All the taunts, all the insults, all the unkindness, all the sneers, all the oppressions, all the efforts and talks about hanging have come from men who were in their homes while their countrymen were bivouacking under the canopy of heaven or bravely leading in the front of battle. We may take it as an invariable rule that when any of these men who talk about hanging Americans went to the front they accepted positions as judge-advocates or quartermasters, or at least a portion of their service was of that character; and it is such men who form a little coterie (scarce more than a trio) who in Congress, on occasions, express sentiments which seem to betray regret that Southern men were not hanged; and some of them to-day, after the lapse of twenty-one years, use language on this floor which certainly indicates that this regret still rankles in their hearts.

I recognize fully the fact that many of our best, purest, and worthiest citizens—men of dauntless courage, devoted patriotism, sterling character, and distinguished ability—both North and South, were prevented by circumstances from taking any active part in the war. But men of this character never indulge in tirades such as I have referred to. Inoffensively cherishing their convictions and quietly pursuing their peaceful avocations while the clash of contending armies resounded through the land, they were not transformed into fierce, implacable warriors by the return of peace.

I wish now to say how keenly I have appreciated the kindness and chivalrous courtesy which has uniformly been extended to me by nearly every member of this House, and to place on record my regret that self-respect as a man and proper regard for my dignity as a Representative have necessitated my saying aught which could wound the "self-adoring pride" of this small coterie of patriots whose devotion to their country became most manifest when it was least needed.

Mr. GALLINGER. What does the gentleman think of the recent exploits of Jefferson Davis?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know any more than that he was invited to Montgomery for the purpose of drawing a crowd and raising money to put up a monument.

But the gentleman from Iowa says we live to-day because Stanton, among others, was willing that we might live, &c.

Let me ask the gentleman when it was that such an idea grew in his mind and actuated the emotions of his heart? And let me ask him when it was that he acquired this taste for talking about hanging gentlemen who are now his fellow-members of Congress? And let me ask him further if this desire has festered in his heart for twenty-one years?

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you ask an answer to that?

Mr. WHEELER. I do, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did I say anything of that kind?

Mr. WHEELER. You said that I owed my life and that—I have forgotten the exact expression—but that I had won a halter.

Mr. HEPBURN. Hadn't you won it?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; I never won a halter; I fought honorably and fairly.

Mr. HEPBURN. How do you define treason?

Mr. WHEELER. No brave soldier whoever met me in battle has ever since treated me with anything except kindness and courtesy. Not one of them has ever whispered "treason." General Grant and the brave officers and men of his army never spoke of "treason" to General Lee or his men. General Sherman and his brave officers never talked of "treason" to the armies they finally overcame.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask you how do you define treason?

Mr. WHEELER. I deny that any man in this Congress was ever guilty of treason.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not levying war against the United States and adhering to its enemies a proper definition of treason?

Mr. WHEELER. There is no use of discussing constitutional questions now. The terms upon which the confederate army surrendered settled all that.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not that the definition of treason? Had you not levied war against the United States? Had you not adhered to its enemies? Did you not give them aid and comfort?

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman is honorable, and all honorable men speak the truth, and certainly he has not made this statement about Mr. Stanton without good grounds for believing it to be the truth.

Let me ask him, then, was he one of those who conferred with Mr. Stanton about putting halters around the necks of gentlemen who are now his colleagues on this floor? If not, will he kindly give his authority for his most remarkable assertion?

Let me tell him that whether he desired to enact the rôle of hangman himself, or only desired to see it enacted, or, perchance, only desired to talk about others enacting this rôle, he will find that neither those who have been employed to hang their fellow-countrymen for opinion's sake or for political offenses, nor their coadjutors, nor their applauders are glorified in history; that neither the judge nor the jurors in a bloody assize for political opinions were ever remembered except with detestation.

Who was the first prominent Southern soldier that General Grant's strong arm shielded? It was General Lee. But a few weeks after General Lee was paroled by General Grant he was indicted by Judge Underwood's court, and Grant immediately demanded that it should be quashed, stating that already this indictment had done much harm.

What a difference between the views of General Grant in the spring of 1865 and the views of the gentleman from Iowa in 1886. If General Grant would not tolerate even talking about arresting confederate generals in the spring of 1865, what would he have thought of a member of Congress talking about hanging them in 1886?

Who would not rather be remembered as Nathan Hale, Robert Emmett, Marie Antoinette, or Madam Roland than as their executioners?

The history of all armed contests shows that when, after their close, the spirit of hate and revenge could only be appeased by blood, none but the basest of mankind would consent to serve as the instruments of butchery; and history also holds up to even deeper scorn, execration, and loathing the miscreants who lacked the courage to be butchers themselves, but sought to induce others to serve as the ministers of their cowardly animosity.

Is it surprising that the gentleman who became so excited because the majority of this House opposed his efforts to destroy four principal departments of the Army should find vent for his outraged feelings by talking about hanging men who differed with him upon constitutional questions and political opinions a quarter of a century ago?

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the country should be congratulated on the fact that in all this broad land there has been found only one man who was willing to put it upon record in the American Congress that in his opinion half a million of American citizens could properly have been executed because as far back as before some members of this House were born they had entertained views of duty different from those held by the gentleman from Iowa.

I now desire to renew my thanks to the gentlemen of this House for their courteous attention and for so kindly according me this opportunity for personal vindication.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for ten minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER then resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. HEPBURN. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some remarks which I desire to make in reply to the gentleman from Alabama.

A MEMBER. Speak them now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa, as was stated by the Chair to the gentleman from Alabama, that no recognition could be had except by unanimous consent on any matter not coming within the special order. The Chair, however, will put the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope it will be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some remarks in reply to those which have been made by the gentleman from Alabama.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 5, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations as to amendments to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. As that bill is now pending, the Chair will ask that the letter be printed, with the accompanying papers, in the RECORD, and be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That order will be made, there being no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 4, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, asking, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the views of the Department of State upon three amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the next fiscal year, providing respectively for an "envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary" to, and "secretary of legation" in, the Argentine Republic; and a "clerk to the minister resident in Sweden and Norway."

With respect to the proposed increase of rank in our mission at Buenos Ayres, I may observe that I have long been of the opinion that the position of the United States in the family of American nations makes it fitting that they should be represented at every American capital by an envoy of the plenipotentiary grade. I have, however, refrained from proposing, in the departmental estimates, an increase of rank for the missions to the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Hayti, Santo Domingo, Paraguay and Uruguay, and Venezuela, and the consulate-general in Ecuador, because it seemed inexpedient to recommend enlargement of the responsibilities and functions of those offices without a corresponding increase of salary, which I was unprepared to suggest. The recent elevations of the resident missions in Central America, Colombia, and Turkey to the plenipotentiary grade were attended by an increase of the respective salaries to $10,000, which the statute, section 1675, Revised Statutes, assigns as the minimum.

The proposed amendment contemplates making the Argentine legation a plenipotentiary mission, without increase of salary over the present rate of $7,500. It also omits the additional title of consul-general, thus abandoning the anomaly of uniting diplomatic and consular functions and prerogatives in one office. This is a proper change, since the bill provides, lines 199-200, for a consul at Buenos Ayres, thus obviating any necessity for a consul-general at the same post. Under all the circumstances I favor the proposed amendment, and would be pleased to see the same principles applied wherever practicable.

I also favor the second amendment, which proposes a secretary of legation at Buenos Ayres. The advantage of having a qualified officer on the spot to continue diplomatic intercourse in the event of a vacancy is obvious. A secretary of legation is a usual and proper adjunct to every plenipotentiary mission.

The employment, as suggested by the third amendment, of a clerk to the legation in Sweden and Norway, is in its present form open to some objection. The legation is not provided with a secretary, and the clerk, although receiving a salary nearly equal to that of a regularly commissioned secretary, would have no diplomatic standing whatever and could not act as chargé d'affaires in case of the minister's death or absence. The only present employment of an authorized clerk is at Madrid, where there is a secretary of legation and where the onerous labors of the office make additional clerical aid indispensable, without any occasion, however, for attaching diplomatic privilege to the employment.

Our relations with Sweden and Norway are important, and that government maintains a plenipotentiary mission at Washington. If it be desired to increase the working force at Stockholm, I would suggest raising the mission to the plenipotentiary grade without increase of salary, and assigning a secretary of legation at a salary of $1,500.

By raising the missions at Buenos Ayres and Stockholm to the plenipotentiary grade, a convenient principle might be established in assigning $7,500 as the minimum salary of an envoy, and it might be well to consider the advisability of raising the grade also of the other resident missions having that salary attached, to wit, Belgium, Hawaii, Netherlands, and Venezuela. The specification of $7,500 as the salary of such offices would not conflict with section 1675, Revised Statutes, if the appropriation were so worded as to appear distinctly to be "a different compensation * * * prescribed by law." In the recent case of Mr. Langston, lately minister resident at Hayti, the judgment of the Court of Claims in his favor rested, not on that provision, but on the unrepealed and continuing statute, section 1683, Revised Statutes, which fixed the salary at that particular mission.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Thomas F. Luers, John O. Humphrey, and 21 other citizens, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the better legal protection of young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Philadelphia, officially signed, representing three hundred members, praying for the better legal protection of young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented the memorial of John W. Smith, president of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Springfield, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of A. W. Lovering, missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions to the Chinese in California, and several other gentlemen engaged in like missionary work, praying for the enactment of a law to enforce the rights of the Chinese under the treaties with the United States. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Elizabeth M. Dresher, Sarah B. Brotherton, and 93 other citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the better legal protection of young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Woodson County, Kansas, praying for certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of H. B. Edmonson and other wool-growers of Pittsburg, Iowa, and five other petitions of citizens of the same place, praying for the restoration of the duty on wool as fixed by the tariff of 1876; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Bridgeport, Conn., recommending liberal appropriations for works of internal improvement and especially for the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOLPH presented a resolution adopted by citizens of Idaho Territory at a mass meeting held at Pierre City, Shoshone County, favoring the annexation of North Idaho to Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Idaho County, Idaho Territory, praying the annexation of North Idaho to Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. LOGAN presented a memorial of the Commercial Exchange of Chicago protesting against the imposition of a tax on oleomargarine and butterine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a letter signed by a number of business firms of Chicago protesting against the passage of the bill imposing a tax on oleomargarine and butterine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a protest of William Smith, president of the Trade and Labor Assembly of Springfield, Ill., and a resolution of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of Joliet, Ill., against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of the Women's Christian Union of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for legislation for the protection of young girls in the District of Columbia and Territories governed by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of M. E. Jordan, Mary A. Milliken, and 66 other citizens of Saco, Me., asking for the better legal protection of young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

AMENDMENTS TO THE SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, making an appropriation of $106,100 for the inauguration of the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World;" which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. By direction of the Committee on Education and Labor I report an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill "to aid in the establishment of a school in the Territory of Utah, to be under the direction of the Industrial Christian Home Association of Utah, and to provide employment and means of self-support for the dependent classes in that Territory, with a view to aid in the suppression of polygamy therein," accompanied by certain documents and a report; which I ask may be printed and the whole referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire reports an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying documents, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2600) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations for the government of the District; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2601) for the relief of George Hill, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2602) for the relief of Beaufort Lee and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2603) for the relief of the owners and crews of the American whaling vessels Midas, Progress, Lagoda, Daniel Webster, and Europa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to William P. Hill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2605) granting a pension to Margaret J. Cash; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2606) granting a pension to Frederick Robertson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2607) granting a pension to Caroline M. Norton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2608) for the relief of the estate of Daniel Lake, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

EMILY C. STANNARD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I present the memorial of myself, as a citizen of Vermont, praying Congress to pass a bill granting a pension of $100 a month to Mrs. Emily C. Stannard, the widow of the late General George J. Stannard, a brevet major-general and full brigadier-general of volunteers, whose conspicuous strategy and gallantry at Gettysburg turned the fortunes of war at that time, and who afterward at Harrison's Landing, on the Potomac, in the operations before or toward Richmond, lost an arm at the shoulder from a cannon-shot of the enemy, and who, after he came home, drew a pension at the rate of $18 a month. He was entirely broken up by his war service, and his widow and two grown-up daughters are left in very necessitous circumstances, the widow having been for many years a helpless invalid.

I ask the Committee on Pensions therefore to give this matter very early consideration, for I think that among the volunteer soldiers of the war or among any soldiers of the war there was no man who did more for his country than General Stannard did, and notably on this occasion at Gettysburg, where I think, and a great many other people think, and nobody denies it, that his skill and readiness and quickness and ability and comprehension of the situation turned the tide of war when Pickett's division, I believe it was, charged upon the center and key of our position.

I myself knew this gentleman personally and intimately for twenty-five years, and therefore, testifying as a layman, I can say to the committee and to the Senate that I know that his health was broken down by his service and by the loss of his arm at or near the shoulder, and that his death, which finally resulted here in a humble position in the House of Representatives which his poverty compelled him to accept on the soldiers' roll of doorkeepers, although it resulted immediately from pneumonia from taking a cold within the week last past, terminated fatally only because of his weakened and enfeebled constitution occasioned by his military service. But whether it did or not, I think this is one of the cases where Congress may gratefully and gladly for such conspicuous service as he rendered provide for the comfort during the remaining years of her life of his helpless and invalid widow. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I ask leave to introduce a bill in accordance with the memorial.

The bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily C. Stannard, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Arnold A. Rand and Albert Ordway be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. CALL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SUSPENSION OF PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], which comes over under objection, and which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, issued a circular in the following words:

"Circular.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., June 2, 1886.

"To registers and receivers United States land offices:

"GENTLEMEN: The repeal of the 'pre-emption, timber-culture,' and 'desert-land' laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time.

"WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

"Approved.

"L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary."

And if such circular has been issued, to inform the Senate by what act it is claimed that Congress has delegated to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or to the Secretary of the Interior, or to those officers acting jointly, the power to suspend by executive order the operation throughout the United States of the pre-emption, the timber-culture, and the desert-land acts, and to deny to citizens of the United States their rights under said statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BECK. Yesterday when that resolution came up, as the RECORD shows, I rose and said, "I should like to have it lie over until to-morrow." I did not make that request because I desired to oppose the resolution or because I desired to smother any investigation that might be called for. On the contrary I desire that it be made as full as possible, and I think that is the feeling of the Secretary of the Interior.

Yesterday morning early, at 9 o'clock, I happened to meet the Secretary of the Interior, and he said to me that on reflection he thought the order was a mistake and that he would withdraw the assent he had given to it. I supposed that was done by 12 o'clock yesterday, but I was not sure at the time the resolution was offered, and therefore asked that it go over. . I ascertained afterward that yesterday morning some time the Secretary did withdraw his assent from that order, and I understand that it was rescinded very promptly yesterday so far as the Secretary could rescind it.

I only desire to say now that the reason why I requested that the resolution lie over was because I was advised by the Secretary himself quite early yesterday morning that that would be the fact. I want the fullest investigation. I want to look into the matter, and to have the resolution pass. I only rose now to explain why I asked that the resolution should go over yesterday morning.

Mr. WALTHALL. The order referred to in the resolution submitted by the honorable Senator from Kansas yesterday was revoked, and I hold in my hand a copy of the order of revocation.

I chance to know that very soon after the issuance of that order the Secretary of the Interior came seriously to doubt the legal authority of the order and determined to revoke it. Yesterday, some hours before the meeting of the Senate, I saw and read the original draught of the order of revocation. When the honorable Senator from Kansas submitted the resolution yesterday I was not absolutely certain that the order of revocation had been promulgated. If I had been, I should have called attention to that fact at the time, though I supposed it had.

Immediately after the resolution was introduced I communicated with the Secretary of the Interior and asked him to send me a copy of the order of revocation which I had seen some hours before. Soon afterward in response I received a copy of the order of revocation, which I will ask the Chief Clerk to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1886.

To registers and receivers United States land offices:

GENTLEMEN: Based upon satisfactory evidence that an unusual number of entries under the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws are at this time being made anticipating the action of Congress repealing said laws, and following numerous precedents of this office and Department deemed to be in substantial harmony therewith, the following order, approved by the Secretary, was on the 2d instant issued to you:

"The repeal of the 'pre-emption, timber-culture,' and 'desert-land' laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time."

Now, in view of serious question as to the existence of sufficient absolute legal authority therefor, the same is hereby revoked.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Approved.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the complaint is not that this order has been revoked, but that it was in the first place issued and then revoked, issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and revoked after approval by the Secretary of the Interior.

The order of revocation is an avowed justification of the original order issued on the 2d day of June. It declares that it followed "numerous precedents" of the office, and that the Department deemed those precedents "to be in substantial harmony therewith," and closes by stating in mild phrase that, "in view of serious question as to the existence of sufficient absolute legal authority therefor, the same is hereby revoked."

I affirm that in the Department of the Interior there is not and never has been any precedent in substantial harmony with the order of the 2d day of June issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. If the Secretary of the Interior had contented himself with withdrawing his approval of the order of the 2d of June, that would have been enough; but when he bases his withdrawal upon a statement that seems to justify the original order I feel called upon to say that his reasons for the revocation are not satisfactory.

The Constitution of the United States makes it the duty of the President of the United States to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." The President of the United States is responsible for the acts of his subordinate executive officers. While I do not assume that President Cleveland on the 2d day of June, or at any day since the 2d day of June, has been in a condition either to approve or disapprove of the act of this subordinate, and while I exonerate the Secretary of the Interior from any active intervention in this matter, the radical difficulty lies in the fact that the Executive has placed vast national interests in the hands of subordinate officers who assume, not to see that the laws are faithfully executed, but that valid and subsisting laws of the United States are suspended over a vast area of the public domain, and that many thousands of the citizens of this country are denied their rights under statutes of the United States.

The advent of the Commissioner of the General Land Office into his position was signalized by the immediate suspension of one hundred and twenty-six thousand entries of public lands on the domain of the United States. He assumed that every one of those claimants under the homestead, pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land acts was engaged in a fraudulent attempt to rob and plunder the United States. He suspended those entries in mass and directed that patents should not issue, and thereafter sent out a vast horde of inquisitors and spies instructed to find evidence to support his suspicions that frauds were being perpetrated.

Up to this time that same policy has been pursued, and so great has been the injustice, the hardship, and the oppression, that the Secretary of the Interior has already been called upon to revoke several prior orders of the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon the ground that they were not consonant with precedent nor warranted by the evidence presented.

The Commissioner has lately made a report in response to a resolution offered by my colleague [Mr. PLUMB] on the 16th day of February, "requesting information as to the number of special agents employed by the Department," from which I read.

Mr. COCKRELL. What document are you reading from, please?

Mr. INGALLS. I read from a letter addressed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior on the 6th day of May, 1886.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the document stated to be on the outside?

Mr. BECK. What is the number?

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the number of the document?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not read from the print of an executive document. I am reading the report that the Commissioner of the General Land Office made to the Secretary of the Interior in response to a Senate resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know whether it is a private paper or a paper published by the authority of the Senate. If it is a report it is a report of such a number, and so if it is an executive document or a Senate document.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator denies the authenticity of the document from which I read, or suspects that in any way whatever I shall tamper with the text of the Commissioner's letter, let him send to the document-room and obtain the report, which is already in print, and verify my reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TELLER (handing a document to Mr. INGALLS). Here is the Senate print of the document.

Mr. INGALLS. It is Executive Document No. 134, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.

The Commissioner states:

There were, on February 16, 1886, 31,583 final entries requiring examination by the board of review. Of this number about 8,000 were final homestead entries. The operations of the board have heretofore been confined principally to final homesteads, and of this class it has been found necessary to direct the investigation by special agents of about 37 per cent. of the cases examined.

He proceeds:

There are now in the service 31 agents of this class, and at the rate of examination stated above, namely, 9 per month for each agent, the 18,000 entries could hardly be examined by them in less than 5 years.

Therefore upon a suspicion that all these entries are fraudulent, upon a surmise that all homestead settlers on the public domain of the United States are engaged in a combined effort to plunder and depredate, the Commissioner of the General Land Office has suspended them en masse, and proceeds to send out a corps of inquisitors to verify his suspicions, and declares that before he can get through with the cases that are now upon the list, to say nothing about those that are to be entered hereafter, five years at least will have expired.

Mr. President, my mails come to me burdened with complaints and lamentations of an afflicted people. I had this morning two letters from homestead settlers in one of the northwestern counties in my own State. One of them, a stranger, said to me that he had taken a homestead upon the public lands in the Oberlin land district; that he had made permanent, lasting, and valuable improvements thereon; that his family were living there; that he had broken the sod for planting corn and grain; and being without money to support his family while his crop was growing he went away from the homestead every Monday morning to an adjoining town, and there he worked as an artisan at day wages until Saturday night, when he returned to his family upon his homestead; and that claim has been reported for cancellation for a violation of the public-land laws of the United States upon the report made by these hired agents of the Interior Department sent out to verify the suspicions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that this settler is attempting to perpetrate a fraud upon the homestead system of the United States because he has not continuously resided thereon for the period required by law.

I had another letter not long since from a clergyman, a classmate of mine in college thirty years ago, a humble, God-fearing man, who for that long interval has been engaged in preaching the gospel as a minister in the Methodist Church. He went into Dakota to locate a homestead. He left his family there upon his acres. He built a home for them. His whole family was there. He had made the necessary improvement upon the land that he occupied, and day by day and week by week he went off into the neighboring towns and villages for the purpose of preaching the gospel; but one of these paid agents of the Interior Department, because this man had not lived continuously on his homestead every day and every week and every month of the year, reported his entry for cancellation.

I am not complaining of the President of the United States; I am not complaining of the Secretary of the Interior, who I doubt not has been imposed upon, whose action was improvident, whose instincts are just, whose sympathies can not be with this man who prefers indictments against entire communities. My complaint, sir, is with the agency that is administering this system in opposition to the interests of a great many thousand of my constituents and a great many thousand other honest and industrious people who are endeavoring to build communities and States upon the plains of the West—men who have conquered the frontier and obliterated the desert, who are our friends, our relatives, our kinsmen, who are not aliens nor enemies, and who are as incapable of committing fraud or depredation upon the public domain as any of those who now hear me.

In their name I feel called upon to say that no greater invasion of public right, of constitutional law, of the prerogatives of freemen was ever committed in any age or in any time than this order of the 2d day of June, 1886, suspending the operation of valid and subsisting laws of the United States. It is an offense which, had it been committed by the Secretary of the Interior and sanctioned by the President of the United States, would have justified their impeachment and removal from office.

I am very glad, indeed, that the Secretary of the Interior has seen fit early and promptly to disavow it, and I regret that his disavowal has been accompanied by an apparent justification which is not warranted by the facts, and which was intended, I fear, as an aspersion upon the administration of that Department by his predecessor.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and passed by the Senate at the last Congress, "to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber culture." On the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], I think, there was inserted in that bill a proviso that the repeal of the pre-emption law should not "affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the 1st day of July, 1885, may be perfected, upon due compliance with the law." The same provision in substance was inserted in the section repealing the timber-culture act.

The same proposition is contained in the bill which was reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands at the present session to repeal those acts. The 1st day of July, 1886, is fixed as the date at which the repeal of these laws is to take effect. If the idea is carried out, as we are now approaching that date so nearly, it will be necessary to still further extend the time. But so far as the Senate is concerned there has been no proposition to cut off pre-emption settlers by the repeal of the law without giving an opportunity to do so to those who are making preparations to take up land.

Mr. BECK. I stated a few minutes ago that the Secretary of the Interior, observing no doubt that I had made objection to the consideration of the resolution, has advised me that he not only did not desire that I should oppose it, but in substance he has said—and I received this in the last minute—that he desired every facility to be given to the passage of the resolution and desired the fullest inquiry possible in regard to the subject, so that the causes which led to the order and the object in view should all be fully explained.

I only rose to say that in addition to the action of the Secretary of the Interior in rescinding the order promptly yesterday he now advises me that he desires that we shall pass promptly the resolution and then whatever of precedents there may be of course will be given in his answer.

I believe that the order issued on the 2d day of June was without authority of law, and I am very glad that the Secretary of the Interior rescinded it as promptly as he did; but now, since the resolution will be passed, I hope by unanimous consent, as it certainly sets forth the facts so as to obtain whatever may have been the practice of the office, perhaps it would be as well then to see whether some action ought not to be taken to prevent a repetition of an assumption of authority if it has grown into a practice. Until the answer comes in, however, I shall not say anything further in regard to the matter.

Mr. TELLER. It is very certain that there can be no precedent for this order. I will venture to make the assertion now that no precedent can be found in the history of this Government for the order of June 2, 1886.

I have no disposition myself to criticise any official. I know something of the duties of the Secretary of the Interior. I know something of the temper and disposition of the present Secretary, for whom I have the highest possible regard. I know very well how the Secretary of the Interior could be induced to approve such an order as this, without any observation or thought upon the subject. With the multiplicity of duties placed upon the Secretary of the Interior, it is physically impossible that he should investigate and study every order that he signs. It is a fact that if the Secretary of the Interior would seat himself at his table at 9 o'clock in the morning he could not at 5 o'clock in the evening have read all the papers that are presented for his signature.

So it is physically impossible, I say, that he should study all these matters and know of them. He must rely upon his subordinate officers. He must rely upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office for land matters, he must rely upon the Commissioner of Patents for patents, and he is justified in supposing that a man who is competent to fill such a position knows what he presents for his signature. In a majority of cases the signature is given without reading or without thought, and sometimes even without having the purpose stated.

I have not any idea that the present Secretary of the Interior would for a moment assume that the right existed in any public officer, big or little, no matter how commanding his position might be, to suspend a statute unless there was a positive statutory permission to do so.

I have no criticism to make upon the Secretary of the Interior, and do not intend to make any. I think he did well in promptly rescinding the order. I only regret that, probably for the purpose of relieving the Commissioner of the General Land Office, he should allow his approval to a statement that is calculated to mislead the public and seriously to reflect not simply upon that Department of the Government but to reflect seriously upon the administration of government in the United States, by an assertion that it can be supposed to be a serious question whether it is within the power of any living man to suspend a statute unless he can find the clear and positive direction of law.

Mr. President, this is a country of law. This is a country where every official has his duties defined to him, and the distinction between the legislative department of the Government and the executive and the judicial departments is so clearly marked and so distinct that there ought to be no possible danger of misunderstanding. If this can be done in this case, every other statute may be nullified.

I venture to say that the Secretary of the Interior will not contend that there are precedents, nor will he contend that there ought to be authority of that kind. There is not in that Department—and I only speak as to that—anything which can possibly be tortured into an excuse for the order of June 2, 1886. There is nothing that is analogous to it, and nothing will come here from the Department to show that any officer of that Department at any time has ever undertaken hitherto to suspend a statute, to deny to the citizen a right given to him by the very plain and explicit terms of the law, a privilege that forty-eight thousand of the citizens exercised last year under one statute alone—the right to file their pre-emptions. Under existing law the settler is required first to make his settlement. Having made his settlement, he is then required within a given time—in some cases thirty days, and in some ninety—to go to the land office and file. Otherwise the land is open to the next occupant, the next taker. He is required also within three months to prove up the actual residence upon the land. Otherwise it is open to the next taker.

If the Commissioner of the General Land Office can suspend a statute for two months, he may for twelve; if he can for twelve he may for twenty-four; and he may thus put it out of the power of the settler to initiate his claim as the law requires he should, or to complete his claim as the law requires that he should, and thus he would be deprived of his property rights by an order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. President, there may be frauds, there are frauds being committed in this office as we know from the reports of the Commissioner for the last five years; but it would be better that all the frauds which have been practiced should be duplicated and doubled than that the settler who has gone out on the public lands should be deprived of the privilege of making his title as the law requires that he should, for the law requires that he shall if he expects to make his title—it is not a privilege given to him—go and file; he must file if he is to make his title.

Now, sir, I have no intention to reflect upon anybody, and I think if it had not been for the words in this order saying that it was deemed to be in harmony with the precedents of the Department I should have said nothing. I know that it is delicate to interfere with an Executive Department by this body, and I am not very much in love with resolutions calling upon the different Departments for information except in clear cases; but I did think that such an order as this actually suspending three statutes for two months was such an extraordinary proceeding that it would not do for the legislative department to overlook it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I would thank the President to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, issued a circular in the following words:

"Circular.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., June 2, 1886.

"To registers and receivers United States land offices:

"GENTLEMEN: The repeal of the 'pre-emption, timber-culture,' and 'desert-land' laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time.

"WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

"Approved.

"L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary."

And if such circular has been issued to inform the Senate by what act it is claimed that Congress has delegated to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or to the Secretary of the Interior, or to those officers acting jointly, the power to suspend by executive order the operation throughout the United States of the pre-emption, the timber-culture, and the desert-land acts, and to deny to citizens of the United States their rights under said statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. That resolution has never passed as yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not yet passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is up for consideration and action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is pending now.

Mr. COCKRELL. A resolution asking for information whether certain things have been done, and, if so, why they have been done. I was not here when the resolution was introduced yesterday, and I was not here when it was called up this morning, but I have heard that there was a circular presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] which was read. I would thank the Secretary to read that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the circular.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1886.

Registers and receivers United States land offices:

GENTLEMEN: Based upon satisfactory evidence that an unusual number of entries under the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws are at this time being made, anticipating the action of Congress, repealing said laws, and following numerous precedents of this office and Department deemed to be in substantial harmony therewith, the following order, approved by the Secretary, was on the 2d instant issued to you:

"The repeal of the 'pre-emption,' 'timber-culture,' and 'desert-land' laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time."

Now, in view of serious question as to the existence of sufficient absolute legal authority therefor, the same is hereby revoked.

WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Approved.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that been communicated formally to the Senate by the Secretary of the Interior?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been.

Mr. WALTHALL. It has not been otherwise than through me. I do not know that the Secretary, until the resolution passes, is in any position to communicate officially with the Senate on the subject. I can state that the order has been promulgated, and was yesterday telegraphed to the various land offices.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want simply to get at the situation.

Mr. WALTHALL. The circular was presented by me. I stated while the Senator was out that I happened to know that very soon after the order complained of and referred to in the resolution of the Senator from Kansas had been issued the Secretary of the Interior came to doubt seriously as to the legal authority for that order without reference to the matter of precedents, and that he had determined to revoke it; and that yesterday, some hour or more before the Senate met, two or three hours before the resolution was introduced, I saw and read the original draught of the order revoking it, and had a conversation with the Secretary on the subject. I learned from him that there was very great doubt as to the legality of it, and he had determined to revoke it, whatever the precedents might be. Yesterday, when the resolution was introduced, I was unable to say that that order which I had seen an hour or two before had been promulgated, and I sent to the Secretary of the Interior, after the resolution was introduced, a copy of the resolution and asked him to send me the order which I had seen in his possession an hour or two before, and this which has just been read came to me in response to that request.

While I am up, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I would like to add a word which perhaps had better be said pending this inquiry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WALTHALL. I agree with the conclusion reached by the Secretary that there is very grave doubt, to say no more, as to the legal authority for the issuance of the order recited in the resolution; but as it has been stated very broadly and very unqualifiedly that there are no precedents for the issuance of such an order, I desire to say that in failing to take issue with that statement at this time I do not wish to be understood as agreeing to the correctness of that statement. It is probable that precedents in cases somewhat analogous in the past history of that Department may be produced; and the fact that it is not done at this time I do not desire to be taken as evidence of the fact that we concede the correctness of the statement that there are no such precedents in the Department.

I make no reference to the precedents at this time for the simple reason that we are all anxious that the resolution should pass, and as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has already said he has been requested by the Secretary of the Interior to facilitate its passage, and I suppose, as it calls for a report, when the report comes in those precedents will be referred to at that time and that that will be the proper time to discuss them. I make no reference to the precedents now.

Mr. COCKRELL. When I came out of the committee-room on Appropriations this morning into the Senate Chamber I found the Senator from Kansas discussing some resolutions. I walked to the Secretary's desk and discovered that resolution and did not know of any explanation that had been made by the Senator from Mississippi and did not know that there had been any response to the resolution. I inquired particularly if the resolution had been passed, and I saw it was only a resolution of inquiry, and when the Senator from Kansas commenced reading from a document which I supposed was a public document necessarily, I asked a question as to what the document was, because I had seen no report. If the Secretary had made a report in response to the resolution, as a matter of course I desired to see it.

Now, Mr. President, it is a very strange speech that the Senator from Kansas should have made upon a simple resolution asking for information. It is unusual that a Senator shall introduce a resolution calling upon a Department for information and to know if a certain act has been done why the act has been done, and then make a speech denouncing the act and proclaiming that there can be no reason for it.

A great deal has been said in regard to these land entries. That question is not now before the Senate upon this resolution. The question whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior has followed the law or not is not before the Senate upon this resolution. The question on this resolution is whether the Senate will call upon the Secretary to inform this body whether that order was issued, and, if so, why. That is the question. It is a legitimate question, and I am heartily in favor of it; but why an attack should have been made upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office and upon the Secretary of the Interior is more than I can conceive. It may have been inspired by that gallant, chivalrous, invincible character and disposition of the distinguished war chief from Kansas. It may have been prompted by the same feeling that inspired the attack upon the crippled, disabled, and limp soldier at the head of the Pension Office——

Mr. INGALLS. Totally disabled, mentally and physically.

Mr. COCKRELL. When he was not here in the Senate Chamber and was unable to respond. I can only attribute to that same fearless and dauntless spirit of the war chief from Kansas this attack upon Commissioner Sparks.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, as one member of the Senate I wish to say that I think there is no warrant for this attack upon the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It may be that this action may have been taken without the intent of suspending a statute of the United States. The statute gives the right to the citizen to make pre-emption and timber-culture entries, but the means by which it is to be done and the regulation of the matter is within the Interior Department, and very often entries are suspended for cause. Congress session after session under the recommendation of the Committee on Public Lands, in considering questions of fraudulent entries, especially in timber-culture cases which have been reported and urged upon the Senate, time and again suspends action. Whether there was a sufficient cause for suspending these applications remains to be seen. The suspension is not of the right to enter, but of the immediate consideration of the cases, which is a very different thing from suspending the operation of a statute.

Again, there is no reason to impeach the honesty or the zeal in the public service of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. There has been no fact stated by the Senator from Kansas which can be the foundation of such an impeachment as that.

I wish for one to say that, while there may be many things in which my judgment would differ from that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I think the country recognizes that in the endeavor to prevent fraudulent entries to the detriment of the people of the United States who wish to obtain homes upon the public lands he has discharged his duty and earned the commendation of the people to a large extent. I know in my own State the people who desire to have homes upon the public land have been injured by the lax administration of that Department; and while I do justice to the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and to his zeal in the public service while he was Secretary of the Interior, I have reason to know that there were frauds committed in the administration of that Department which did require of the present Commissioner and would have required of the former Secretary if he had remained in office the diligent and zealous exercise of the powers intrusted to him in the interest of the people who ought to have the right to have homes upon the public lands.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida says that he knows there have been frauds perpetrated in the past. I suppose he will not deny that they are being perpetrated at this time. It is because, as I understand this explanation, frauds are being now perpetrated that the Commissioner got up this circular.

The honorable Senator says perhaps nobody will apply. The Commissioner says the people are applying in unusual numbers to enter lands.

Mr. CALL. No, I did not say that.

Mr. TELLER. The Commissioner says that.

Mr. CALL. I did not say it was because no one was applying. I say you may suspend an application without suspending the statute; and I say it has been the custom of the Department always for cause to suspend applications.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Florida is not able to distinguish between the suspension of a claim that is already initiated for the purpose of enabling the Department to determine whether it was properly initiated and whether it has been properly proceeded with after it was initiated, and an order which declines to allow a settler to initiate his claim at all, it will be impossible for me or anybody else to enlighten him upon that subject. Surely such a question as that needs not to be discussed in the American Senate. The suspension of a claim and the reservation of the land from settlement are entirely different things from denying to the settler the provision given him by the plain words of the statute.

I did not speak unadvisedly when I said that there will be no precedent produced here, and it will be to the credit of the Democratic party if they stand up and admit that if there had been a precedent of that kind it would be no justification for this order. If there were a thousand precedents they would be no justification for it. It is forbidding the settler to go before the Department and initiate his claim in the way that the statute declares he must within a certain time or forfeit his right to the lands.

I am making no attack upon anybody. I am making no attack upon the Secretary; and none has been made upon him this morning that I know of. I am making no attack upon the Commissioner. I do not doubt his zeal in the interest of the public service. I doubt his judgment. It does seem to me that an order of that kind for the credit of the nation ought never to have found its way to the files of any administration of any Department of the Government. It may seem to the Senator from Florida that the declaration by the executive department of the Government of a right to nullify statutes is a matter of no great concern. There has been a time when an assertion of that kind in this country would have made a revolution. There has been a time when nobody on this floor would have been found to excuse it upon the ground of precedent or anything else. And it would be to the credit of the Interior Department to-day to say that it was an inadvertence; that it escaped the observation of the proper officers of the Government; and that is what I have no doubt was the actual fact.

I am not claiming—it is not possible that the head of that Department would seriously contemplate that he or anybody had the right to nullify a statute. I said when I spoke before that I had not any doubt that his attention was not called to this order before its issuance. From what I regard good authority I understand that the minute his attention was called to the effect of the order he determined in his own mind that it was improperly made and that it ought to be revoked, and proceeded as hastily as he could to revoke it on the following day.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Colorado will allow me a word. I said a while ago that I desired the passage of this resolution and hoped it would be unanimously adopted. While I did not have in my hands any precedent to warrant this character of action when I spoke, I telephoned at once at 12 o'clock and have just received a paper containing what purports to be quite a number of precedents. I do not say that they are correct, but they are here, and while I do not want to go into them now, I would like that just one of importance be read.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I am not going to quote any of them but one:

In addition to the foregoing, withdrawal of indemnity lands where no withdrawals were authorized by law have been made from time to time as the several roads were located, in anticipation of losses within granted limits. Withdrawals of this character, covering many millions of acres, have been made for about seventy roads. The largest withdrawals of this class are those for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which were made at various dates between 1871 and 1884, and are still maintained. Said withdrawals were from sale, location, entry, and claim of any kind, and embraced at least ten or twelve millions of acres, including unsurveyed as well as surveyed lands. In the Territory of Dakota alone about two million four hundred thousand acres of indemnity lands are withdrawn, while the records of the General Land Office show that the losses within the granted limits in said Territory do not exceed thirty thousand acres.

Then a number of others are taken up which I do not propose to present now. I have received this hurriedly prepared statement.

Mr. TELLER. There is not the slightest analogy between the action of the Department in withdrawing lands from the operation of the pre-emption laws and the present action of the Department of June 2, 1886. The right of the executive department to withdraw land from settlement is a right recognized by the Supreme Court many years ago, but it must be for a specific purpose and not generally. The Supreme Court settled it years ago, and I have a case in my desk which if it was worth while to go into it this morning I could cite. That is one of the rights which the President exercises independent of any statute except inferentially. The Supreme Court refers to the fact that in 1830 the first pre-emption law provided that all lands should be subject to pre-emption except such as were reserved by the President, and the act of 1841 contains a similar provision not quite so plain and so explicit; and under those laws the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the President might withdraw lands from the operation of the law, but they must be specifically designated and the withdrawal must be for a specific purpose.

Here is a direction to public officers, the register and receiver, to decline to execute a duty which is imposed upon them by law. It is a direction to them to decline to execute the law which they are sworn to execute, and it is an inhibition upon the settler from making his application or proving it up after he has made the application.

I knew that what has just been read would be substantially what would come here if anything came at all in the way of defense in the shape of precedent; and that is the nearest they can get to it, that land has been withdrawn from the operation of the settlement laws for the purpose of enabling a railroad company to take the lands granted to it, land which the Attorney-General declared it took in presenti in the first instance if it was within the grant, and in the next it took by selection if it was within the indemnity limits.

Mr. President, allusion has been made to the fact that a large area of country was withdrawn for railroads. I did not intend to go into any general discussion, but I should like to say just a word on that subject.

In the very early history of legislative grants, which commenced in 1839, or indeed in 1827, when grants were made for canals, railroads, and other purposes, the Department invariably withdrew the land at once without waiting for the definite line of location. That was done for many years. When Mr. Hendricks was Commissioner of the General Land Office the records will show that he withdrew from the operation of the settlement laws lands that had not yet been granted to any railroad company, in view of the fact that a bill was pending making the grant, and in another case on the same day that the act passed, without any definite location. But that right of reservation is an entirely different right from the one sought to be exercised in this order of June 2, and there is no analogy between the two. I shall be ready to meet any alleged precedent when it comes here. I repeat, not only for the administration that I was connected with, but for all time, even under Democratic administrations that preceded the war, none of them ever attempted to do this thing, and I do not believe now that the head of the Department will sit down seriously and send us anything justifying him in an attempt to nullify a statute.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this question at all, nor did I intend to make any imputation upon any one in reference to the discharge of his duties connected with the public lands, but simply as one member of the Senate I rose to say a word in defense of the Commissioner of the General Land Office against what I conceive to be an improper imputation upon him without any facts which would justify such a charge as has been made.

Now the Senator from Colorado says it is possible to make a distinction. I wish to say that is no argument, that is no method of reasoning. It gives no dignity or force to a man to assail another one, but, as the logicians state, it is an evidence of weakness to engage in a reflection upon another. The Senator from Colorado may feel sure that he is correct, and yet he may be mistaken in his proposition. He may declare to the Senate as often as he will, but I will not make an imputation on him that he is deficient in intellectual capacity or intelligence.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator certainly misunderstood what I said. I said if the Senator himself could not draw the distinction between the cases I could not say anything that would enable him to do so. That is all I did say. I did not say the Senator could not do it.

Mr. CALL. Very well; the imputation rests; and all I wish to say is that it adds nothing to the force of the argument.

The instance cited by the Senator from Kentucky involves the principle of a control over the provisions of an act of Congress to some extent, not to deny but to suspend operations under it for the moment. The cause why, the justification of it, is another and a different question. The act of Congress confers rights, but it leaves the machinery, the mode by which those rights are to be attained, within the power of the Interior Department; and that general proposition is one which may not be denied, for I have the act here, and it simply confers the naked right and does not provide the method by which that right shall be exerted, and that method has been uniformly left to be exercised by the rules and methods of proceeding in the Department within the control of the Department. Time and again cases have been suspended, even in the initiation, as was done in the withholding of railroad lands, because every such reservation is the withholding of land from the right of pre-emption and of homestead positively guaranteed under the law to every citizen. Therefore I say there is no question here of a claim of power in the Executive Department to suspend a statute, and the question is not in any way affected by the statute.

Mr. WALTHALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question for my own information, knowing that he is entirely familiar with everything connected with the Department of the Interior. Did I understand the Senator to say that there was no precedent in that Department for the withdrawal of lands to prevent them from being entered pending a bill making a disposition of those lands but before the passage of that bill?

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no, Mr. President, I did not say that.

Mr. WALTHALL. Is not that the fact?

Mr. TELLER. I said that there was a precedent for the withdrawal of lands. I instanced the fact that Mr. Hendricks, when Commissioner of the General Land Office did not wait until the act became a law, but he withdrew the land before. He withdrew it by telegraph in one instance. That is a very different thing, He designated what lands should be withdrawn.

Mr. WALTHALL. Still he withdrew the lands pending the passage of the bill and before the bill had become a law.

Mr. TELLER. He did that. That never has been done since 1861.

Mr. WALTHALL. Had it not been repeatedly done before?

Mr. TELLER. It had been done several times before.

Mr. WALTHALL. That is what I wanted to know, because those precedents, if we wished to go into the discussion of that subject now (which seems to me to be premature), bear on the matter.

Mr. TELLER. When the time comes I shall be prepared to go into that matter. I am quite ready to discuss it at any time with the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado a question also for my information and for the information of the country. I have heard, and I want to know whether my information is correct, that under the timber-culture act and pre-emption act so many frauds are being perpetrated on the Government and upon those laws that the Department of the Interior and the General Land Office for some years have been in favor of repealing those laws. Is that the fact or not?

Mr. TELLER. I will say that the records of the Government show that at least for the last five years the Commissioner has, with the approval of the Secretary, recommended the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws.

Mr. GEORGE. Upon the ground that they were being abused and that fraudulent entries were being made under them?

Mr. TELLER. Partially for that reason. So far as I may be allowed to speak for myself, I would say that I have had for many years an idea that no lands ought to be parted with by the Government except the desert lands, which stand upon a different footing—that no lands upon which a pre-emption claim can be initiated ought to be parted with except under the homstead law; and very early after my advent into this body I introduced a bill to that effect. When the Commissioner of the General Land Office complained to me as Secretary that great frauds were being perpetrated, that together with the fact that I had been for several years hostile to the law, believing that it was frequently abused, not always, I recommended the repeal, as I think, though I am not quite certain, that my predecessor had before me.

Mr. GEORGE. In administration circles, especially in the Interior Department, is it not a fact well recognized and well understood that these two laws, the timber-culture law and the pre-emption law, are so frequently perverted by fraudulent means from the purposes for which the acts were passed that it has been the opinion and judgment of that Department for five years that they ought to be repealed. I would like the Senator to answer that question.

Mr. TELLER. I think I have answered that question.

Mr. INGALLS. May I make a suggestion? I understand it is the opinion in the Cabinet and in administration circles that the continued coinage of the silver dollar is a fraud on the finances of this country and is hostile to its best interests. Would that justify the Secretary of the Treasury in directing the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, one thing at a time.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. We are on this question now, and I should like to have an answer to the inquiry I have propounded to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator is not satisfied with my answer I will repeat it.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well; if you are satisfied with it I am. That is all.

Mr. TELLER. The Commissioner of the General Land Office several times recommended, and I believe in each instance with the approval of the Secretary, the repeal of the pre-emption law. Whether it was wholly and entirely because of frauds I am not quite prepared to say, but that great frauds have been perpetrated under it nobody doubts. The files of the Senate are full of the reports sent here by the late Secretary of the Interior calling the attention of the Senate to the necessity of either a repeal or a modification of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws; but the Department never entertained an opinion at any time that it had the power to suspend the execution of those laws, hostile as the Secretary was to them, hostile as he had been for years on the record while he was in the Senate as a member of it, and everywhere else. He never supposed for a moment that he had the right to say to a man, "You can not initiate your claim, you can not start in under this law, whether you are a bona fide or a dishonest pre-emptor." The right to file was one given by statute, and it could not be denied as long as the land was in the category of land open to settlement; it could not be denied by any Department of the Government; and the files will show that the Secretary said repeatedly we are unable to cure these frauds and prevent them, and we are unable to detect all the fraudulent entries; there is no machinery under the law to do it; and therefore the law itself ought to be repealed. There was no attempt at nullification.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, then "the head and front" of the "offending" of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is this, as I understand, that he may have committed a technical violation of law, and this violation, if it be a violation, was in favor of preserving the rights of the Government and the people of the United States to the public domain against fraudulent entries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish simply to correct the Senator from Colorado in regard to the withdrawal of lands. He said that none were withdrawn after 1860. I think he will find that withdrawals were made beginning in 1854 and continuing up to 1866 in regard to land grants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has passed.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not say withdrawals were not made, but they were not made until the statutes passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were in anticipation of the passage of the acts.

Mr. TELLER. I think not.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Pœbe H. Meech;
A bill (H. R. 4407) granting a pension to Christopher C. White;
A bill (H. R. 6087) granting a pension to Patrick Murphy;
A bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Peter Adams;
A bill (H. R. 7221) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh; and
A bill (H. R. 8333) granting a pension to Lucinda Sawyer.

The above six pension bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. In the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], who takes a deep interest in this bill, I move that it lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of special pension bills favorably reported and not objected to.

Mr. BECK. Before that is done, I rise, if I may be allowed, to a parliamentary inquiry. The bill known as the oleomargarine bill came from the House of Representatives and went to the table. I believe it is there now. There will be a contest as to the committee to which it shall go. I for one insist that it shall go to the Committee on Finance. I understand others desire that it shall go to the Committee on Agriculture. I would like some notice to be given so that gentlemen on both sides can be here; that it will not be taken from the table and referred pro forma to either committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] will not be back until next week, and I think it would be unfair to have any action upon it until his return. Therefore I moved to have it remain on the table.

Mr. BECK. I desire that some previous notice shall be given before the time when it is to be referred, so that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture as well as the chairman of the Committee on Finance will be advised as to when it is to come up.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.;

A bill (S. 1016) granting an increase of pension to Abel Comstock;
A bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny;
A bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to Robert Holsey;
A bill (S. 1382) for the relief of Lydia O. Hutchings;
A bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Harriet Welch;
A bill (S. 1400) granting a pension to William H. Beck;
A bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith;
A bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Smith;
A bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage; and
A bill (S. 2025) granting a pension to James Butler.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 206) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Zanesville, Ohio; and

A bill (S. 763) for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 112) for the relief of the estate of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of special pension bills favorably reported and not objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of special pension bills favorably reported from the Committee on Pensions in their order. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds, I desire to say to the Senate that on Monday morning, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; and in the mean time I ask leave now to present to the Senate certain comparative tables respecting the appropriations of last year as compared with the estimates of the present year, that they may be printed in the RECORD. I also ask leave to submit a letter of the Secretary of State, addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, dated the 29th of May, and the accompanying memoranda respecting the consular and diplomatic bill, and ask that they may be printed in the RECORD. I will say to Senators that the accompanying memoranda as to page and line refer to the bill as printed as it came from the House and not the bill as printed with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the papers referred to will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The papers are as follows:

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE.

Amount of estimates for 1887	$1,604,961 60
Amount of House bill	1,299,665 00

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 29, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: Thanking your committee for the opportunity given me yesterday to give reasons for the amendments I suggested to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 6392), I now inclose, in accordance with your request of yesterday, a copy of the bill as it passed the House, with interlineations of the amendments I deem wise, and numerical references in the margin to each amendment.

The bill is accompanied by a copy of a letter I addressed to the chairman of the House committee by whom the bill was reported, and whose printed report you have already, and which can properly be reviewed by you in connection with the present action of your committee.

I do not desire to obtrude my opinions upon your independent judgments, but I believe your committee will agree with me that no real economy is effected by making appropriations piecemeal and supplementing insufficient sums by subsequent deficiency appropriations.

Indeed I may say that the public service is promoted by the ability to pay for a thing when it is most needed, and that this mode of payment is in the end most productive of economy. If official responsibility is directly annexed to the power and discretion of expense, abuse of such power is best guarded against, and so far as I am concerned I am ready to acept the trust on such terms.

I dwelt yesterday with emphasis upon the wisdom of providing a reasonable fund for unforeseen emergencies, and I venture to repeat those views. In the absence of Congress, the prompt employment of special envoys may become essential, and the want of means for their employment should be guarded against. The development of our commercial interests in the hitherto unknown regions of the North and South Pacific, where they encounter the rival enterprise of European powers; questions still awaiting permanent settlement in the long conterminous boundaries on our northern and southern frontiers—all join in counseling wise provisions for expenses proportionate to the importance of the subjects to which they relate.

I believe the letter to which I have just referred, and of which a copy is sent you, will reasonably account for my recommendations.

All of which I submit with high respect, and am,

Very truly, yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON, U. S. Senate.

Memorandum of amendments requested by the Secretary of State.

No. 1.—Line 11, page 1, "and China." (See page 13 of letter to chairman of Committee on Foreign Affairs.)

No. 2.—Line 14, page 2, strike out "China."

No. 4.—Line 28, page 2, strike out "Belgium."

No. 5.—Line 46, page 3, insert "$20,000" instead of "$15,000." (See "letter, &c.," page 1.)

No. 6.—Line 54, page 3, insert "Belgium."

(This being new legislation, the House committee would not consider it under their construction of the new House rules.)

No. 7.—Line 86, page 4, insert "eight" instead of "five." (See "letter, &c.," page 2.)

No. 8.—Line 99, page 5, insert "$150,000" instead of "$105,000." (See "letter, &c.," page 3.)

No. 9.—Line 102, page 5, insert "$3,000" instead of "$2,500." (See "letter, &c.," page 4.)

No. 10.—Line 126, page 6, insert "$25,000" instead of "$15,000." (See "letter, &c.," page 6.)

No. 11.—After line 127, page 6, insert, "To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, $25,000." (See "letter," page 6.)

No. 12.—Line 161, page 7, insert "four" instead of "three."

(Mr. Bayard stated reasons for the increase to committee; having no diplomatic representative in Canada, we require at Halifax a consul of more than usual ability.)

No. 13.—After line 175, page 8, insert "consul at Antwerp, Belgium, $3,500." (See "letter," page 7.)

No. 14.—Line 207, page 9, strike out "and Antwerp, at," and, in line 208, "each, $5,000."

No. 15.—After line 254, page 11, insert "Friendly and Navigator's Islands: Consul at Apia, $2,000." (See "letter," page 8.)

No. 16.—Lines 303 and 304, page 13, strike out "Friendly and Navigator's Islands: Consul at Apia, $1,500."

No. 17.—Line 392, page 17, insert "$15,000" instead of "$12,000." (See "letter," page 10.)

No. 18.—Line 403, page 17, insert "$5,000" instead of "$4,000." (See "letter," page 11.)

No. 20.—Line 454, page 19, insert "traveling expenses of consular clerks."

No. 21.—Line 457, page 19, insert: "And no expense charge shall be allowed hereafter in the accounts of any consular officer except upon a certificate of approval of the Secretary of State, which certificate shall be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury, and be deemed by them a sufficient voucher for the expenditure it covers."

The embarrassments of a divided discretion in executive duties are obvious. The impossibility of even defining by name the miscellaneous expenses of a Department proves the equal impossibility of defining the specific amount made necessary for each such expense; and as the total expenditure is carefully estimated and limited by Congress and the accounts in detail are carefully recorded and audited in the State Department under orders of the President, it is unnecessary to have such essential Executive discretion submitted to the revision of the accounting officers of the Treasury, who can not possess the knowledge requisite for the performance of the business of another Department of the Government.

I therefore consider the guards upon allowance or expense are fully furnished in the amendment I have submitted, and that much useless friction can be saved by its adoption.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

No. 19.—Lines 448 and 449: "Expense of revising the Consular Regulations by the Department of State, $3,000."

Reasons for the necessity of revising and re-editing the Consular Regulations:

(1) The edition is exhausted and now there are no copies on hand.

(2) The present arrangement is confused and in many instances obsolete. It was published five years ago. Careful examination by the Solicitor of the Department, confirmed by the personal supervision of the Secretary, justifies the statement that the present edition is inaccurate and exceedingly imperfect.

(3) As it is the hand-book and official guide for the service the necessity for fullness and accuracy is apparent.

See page 6 of "letter, &c." for reasons for placing the appropriations for (1) French claims, (2) Mexican boundary, (3) Haytian arbitration, on this bill. It is obvious that this is the proper bill to contain these items.

Mr. CONGER. I understood unanimous consent was given yesterday that Monday and Tuesday next should be devoted entirely to the Calendar. The Senator himself understood that, but whether he wishes to take up that time in an appropriation bill was not stated. I should like to know about that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that so far as I am concerned personally I am quite willing that whatever time on Monday is devoted to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill shall be carried over on Wednesday and devoted to the consideration of the Calendar; but I think it is important that as rapidly as the appropriation bills are ready they should be passed and sent to the House for concurrence in our amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I called attention to it so that it might be understood that the unanimous consent given in the Senate assigning two days next week to the Calendar should not be interfered with without giving the equivalent time on the next day as the Senator has suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that I had hoped to finish the consular and diplomatic bill last night; but a very interesting debate arose on the bill, so that it was impossible to conclude the bill then.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the Senate to take from the table the bill providing for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa, which has been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the bill (S. 736) for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa, returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move concurrence in the amendment of the House, which I ask may be read.

Mr. BLAIR. I must object to anything that will take time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It will not take time.

Mr. ALLISON. It will take but a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, after the word "dollars," the House of Representatives inserted:

Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also lays before the Senate the bill (S. 206) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Zanesville, Ohio, returned from the House of Representatives with amendments. The amendments will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendments of the House of Representatives are, in line 10 to strike out "and fifty," and in line 13 to strike out "and fifty;" so as to read:

The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $100,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 50 feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendments were concurred in.

ANDREW T. M'REYNOLDS.

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 2217) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds was announced as first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there was some motion pending on that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to recommit. Does the Senator ask for a vote on the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Unless that bill is recommitted to the committee for further examination I must object to its consideration. I prefer having it recommitted and let the attention of the committee be called to it.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think the committee would take different action. Suppose it be passed over informally for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken unless there be objection.

Mr. CONGER. That is a bill in which I feel an interest for a constituent of mine. Are these bills to be passed over by an objection only?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are taken up in their order, open to amendment, and subject to vote.

Mr. BLAIR. This bill may as well be disposed of, if the Senator from Michigan desires. I have no objection to its being disposed of now. It can be discussed on its merits now.

Mr. CONGER. The report is favorable.

Mr. BLAIR. Yes; but the Senator from Missouri has made a motion to recommit, and that is the pending motion.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any object in recommitting?

Mr. BLAIR. There is no object in recommitting. The committee examined the case and reported it upon its merits, and the Senate may as well dispose of it on its merits now as at any time.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are acting, as I understand, under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to five minutes' debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Subject to five minutes' debate and subject to objection.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to understand whether that statement of the Senator is the understanding of the Chair and of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Chair so announced it.

Mr. CONGER. If that is so, I do not insist upon taking the bill up now because there is objection. I do not want any misunderstanding about it. If there is any reason why the bill should go over, or any objection under Rule VIII, I do not move to take it up now, because I think we should go through with the unobjected cases; but whenever the proper time comes I desire to say a word myself in behalf of this Colonel McReynolds, or if the bill goes over without prejudice I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that by unanimous consent these cases are taken up under Rule VIII, but without limitation as to the hour of 2 o'clock. They will continue on during the whole of this day, but are considered under Rule VIII, so that a single objection will carry a bill over.

Mr. CONGER. Then I ask that it may keep its place on the Calendar without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CONGER. And on some other opportunity when there is a less number of these cases to be considered we will take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PATRICK M'KEAN.

The bill (H. R. 7329) granting a pension to Patrick McKean was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Patrick McKean, formerly of Company K, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES E. GOTT.

The bill (S. 2258) to increase the pension of James E. Gott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James E. Gott, late a private in Company A, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the present pension he now receives.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 10, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2258) to increase the pension of James E. Gott, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, James E. Gott, was a private of Company A, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers. He was pensioned under the provisions of the general laws at the rate of $8 per month from May 4, 1863; this was increased to $12 from July 16, 1873; again increased to $18 from December 28, 1876; again increased to $24 from March 3, 1883, for anchylosis of lower jaw. He applied for a further increase on the ground of abscess of left maxillary bone, result of scurvy, &c.; but this application was rejected November 10, 1885. Upon his examination September 2, 1885, he was rated by the board of surgeons as of second grade, "unable to perform any manual labor."

A memorial is presented to us, the truth of which is averred by a large number of respectable signers, and from other sources, as the basis of the present claim for $50 per month. It represents that in consequence of the flesh of the inside of claimant's mouth adhering or growing to the jaw, he is unable to open his mouth, rendering it impossible for him to take into his mouth any solid food of any description, and that he is in consequence a great sufferer and unable to labor.

The following affidavit of the claimant also shows his present condition:

DEER ISLE, MAINE, April 21, 1886.

I, James E. Gott, was enrolled on the 7th day of December, 1861, in Company A, Fourteenth Maine Volunteers, and was discharged from the service of the United States the 4th day of March, 1863, by reason of surgeon's certificate of disability, at the marine hospital at New Orleans, La. I was taken sick at Camp Williams, near New Orleans; we were on guard and our tent was full of prisoners, and we had to lie on the ground and got wet and cold, and the next day I was taken sick; that was the last of October, 1862, and I was taken to the hospital the 1st day of November, 1862, and have not seen a well day since. I have pain in my face most all of the time; it is so hard for me to eat it keeps my face sore all of the time; I can not open my mouth any, and all I can eat is what I suck through my mouth, and all I have to live on is my pension and what my friends help me. I could get extracts of different kinds of food if I had the means to get them, and the most of my teeth is affected, and I can not have them taken out because I can not open my mouth. I have not done any work for a long time. I can not get any wages because I can not stand it, so I can not earn anything.

Very respectfully,

JAMES E. GOTT.

Personally appeared James E. Gott and acknowledged the above instrument to be true.

Sworn to before me this 22d day of April, 1886.

[SEAL.] S. B. THURLOW, Notary Public.

No. pension 81065, $24 per month.

In view of all the facts in this case your committee feel justified in recommending the increase asked for in this bill, and therefore report it back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. WARD.

The bill (H. R. 5643) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Ward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles F. Ward, formerly of the ship Vermont, United States Navy, a pension of $24 a month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOAH B. BROOKSHIRE.

The bill (H. R. 4644) granting a pension to Noah B. Brookshire was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Noah B. Brookshire, late a private in Company B, Third Regiment of North Carolina Mounted Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRIETTA FISHER.

The bill (H. R. 3954) granting a pension to Henrietta Fisher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to put the name of Henrietta Fisher, widow of Thaddeus S. Fisher, deceased, late of Company B, Fourth United States Colored Troops, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL F. GARRETT.

The bill (H. R. 1840) granting a pension to Samuel F. Garrett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Samuel F. Garrett, late a private in Company I, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1840) granting a pension to Samuel F. Garrett, have examined the same, and report as follows:

This soldier entered the service July 4, 1861, and was honorably discharged July 9, 1865. Through exposure and hard service he claims to have contracted chronic diarrhea and inflammatory sore eyes, while in the line of duty, and in November, 1879, applied for pension. This claim was rejected in January, 1884, upon the ground "that there has been no pensionable disability from alleged causes since discharge."

An examination of the papers in the case, however, discloses the evidence to be abundant that the claimant was, and is, greatly disabled. His father's family physician testifies to his robust health and entire freedom from disease prior to his enlistment, and the War Department records show that he was treated for the disabilities alleged in the Government hospitals.

The following brief extracts from the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions set forth other and undisputed testimony to the same effect, while the Department examiner, R. G. Charles, gives his recommendation for allowing the claim:

"His officers and comrades testify to his having chronic diarrhea in November, 1861, and sore eyes in 1863, and that he never recovered from either disability during his service. His neighbors, who have known him from boyhood, testify to the continuance of the diseases from the time of discharge, in 1865, up to the present. Drs. Grinnell, Graham, Stephenson, and Connell, skillful and reputable physicians, bear positive testimony to his disabled condition from the causes alleged.

"Notwithstanding the rejection of this claim by the Department, the Department examiner, R. G. Charles, recommended its allowance in the following words:

"'From my examination of all the evidence in this case, I am of the opinion that the claim should be admitted for chronic diarrhea and inflammation of eyes. I think that claimant has been disabled for performing manual labor during the years from 1863 to 1882, in degree one-half.'

"All of the witnesses testifying in support of the claim are of the highest character and best standing, and all of them have lived in the same community with the claimant since his birth."

This committee think the facts and evidence sufficient to warrant the claim, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claim for increase was rejected in January, 1884, and it does not seem that there has been any application for a reconsideration of it, and it appears to have been rejected on the ground that there has been no pensionable disability from the alleged cause since discharge. The application for pension was not made until 1879, while the soldier was discharged in 1865, and in 1884 the Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim on the ground that there is no pensionable disability; that is, that there is no disability for manual labor in a pensionable degree; the injury or the disease produced no disability practically for manual labor. It is two years and a half nearly since this claim was rejected; and if the disability has increased the Pension Office can readily reopen the case and pass upon any additional evidence and determine whether the disability is now in a pensionable degree. It does seem to me that in cases where so much time has elapsed since the rejection the applicant ought to be required to pursue his remedy before the proper office according to law. I think the bill had better lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator be willing to let it go over informally?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, without prejudice.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], who reported it, is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is why I would not object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

JAMES CARROLL.

The bill (H. R. 4642) granting a pension to James Carroll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Carroll, late a private in Company B, Third Regiment of North Carolina Mounted Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT M'ALEXANDER.

The bill (H. R. 464) granting a pension to Robert McAlexander was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to put the name of Robert McAlexander on the pension-roll, he being a soldier in the Union Army in the late war, and member of Company F, Eighty-seventh Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CATHERINE M'CARTY.

The bill (H. R. 5603) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine McCarty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catherine McCarty, widow of John McCarty, late a private in Company B, First Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY S. COHN.

The bill (H. R. 5881) for the relief of Henry S. Cohn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry S. Cohn as second lieutenant of Company C, One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, according to the degree of his disabilities, in lieu of the pension he now receives as sergeant of Company G, One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH ANN MURPHY.

The bill (H. R. 5882) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah Ann Murphy, widow of James Murphy, late a private in Company K, Twentieth Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLIE ANN BRADLEY.

The bill (H. R. 5394) granting a pension to Sallie Ann Bradley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sallie Ann Bradley, widow of Thomas J. Bradley, late a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5394) granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley, have examined the same, and report as follows:

That they find a report was made on this case by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions during the Forty-eighth Congress, and that the bill granting the claimant a pension was passed by the House, but did not reach the Senate in time for action. The committee herewith present said report and adopt it as part of their own, as follows:

"Sally Ann Bradley is the widow of Thomas J. Bradley, who served as a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, from June 13, 1861, to October 9, 1865. He was pensioned on account of shell wound of back received at Murfreesborough, Tenn., January 2, 1863, and died October 21, 1882. His death is not entirely chargeable to his military service, and consequently his widow has no title before the Pension Office.

"A petition signed by nearly three hundred of the best citizens of the county in which she resides, some of whom have known her and her deceased husband for many years before the late war, sets forth that she is seventy years of age, is as helpless as an infant, and left without means of support, or friends able to assist her.

"Having been left destitute by the death of her husband, who served faithfully for more than four years in the defense of his country, and who, while in such service, contracted a disability which necessarily impaired his ability to provide for himself and wife a comfortable support in their declining years, your committee are clearly of opinion that she should not now be abandoned to the charity of the world, but be, in a measure at least, provided for in her old days, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass."

An examination of the papers in the case verifies the foregoing statements, and the claim is strengthened, in the opinion of the committee, by the fact that four of the claimant's sons followed their father in the war for the Union, two dying on the field of battle, and the other two returning home cripples for life through wounds received.

The committee believing this to be a very worthy case, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA WRIGHT.

The bill (S. 2210) granting a pension to Anna Wright was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Anna Wright, dependent mother of Silas Wright, late a private in Company A, Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARGARET DUNLAP.

The bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Dunlap was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret Dunlap, mother of James F. Dunlap, late a private in Company H, Seventh Missouri Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC HARTER.

The bill (S. 1802) for the relief of Isaac Harter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaac Harter, of Herkimer, N. Y., late of Company C, New York Heavy Artillery.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1802) granting a pension to Isaac Harter, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner in this case is Isaac Harter, who enlisted August 8, 1862, as a private in Company C, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery, and was discharged June 23, 1865. His claim for a pension is chronic rheumatism, and the Pension Office rejects him on the ground of "no disability."

In his declaration the claimant alleges the incurrence of the disease while on picket duty in a severe storm, on which he served forty-eight continuous hours without relief; that he has suffered from it more or less ever since, and that he is at times disabled from doing any manual labor; that he was not treated in hospital, but by the regimental surgeon.

The report of the Adjutant-General says:

"The records of this office do not show the disability alleged."

They seldom do, and if the soldiers depended only on record proof there would be few pensions granted. The evidence procured by the Pension Office from its examining surgeons sustains its decision of "no disability;" which is conclusive, but, in the opinion of the committee, too sweeping. Dr. Cyrus Kay, jr., of Herkimer, N. Y., says he has known claimant ten years, and he knows that he has been and is a great sufferer from rheumatism, abdominal and muscular.

Isaac Doxtator, a citizen of Herkimer, makes affidavit in these words:

"Have been acquainted with Isaac Harter for about forty-seven years. He came to live with me when about ten years old, and up to the time of his enlistment he was not troubled with rheumatism; but since he came out of the Army he has had it a great deal. I remember one time in particular I was at his house visiting, and he had it so bad I was up with him most all night."

And he adds that it increases with the years.

The facts in this case are not, apparently, as well developed as they might have been; but, with the proof at hand, the committee find that this man served through his term of enlistment, with a good record as to the quality of his service; that he was sound when he entered upon the hard duty of a soldier; that he is far otherwise now. His own statement, made under oath, inasmuch as he is a man well vouched for as to his integrity, should have some weight, and it seems to the committee that from his own plain description of his exposure he may very readily have incurred a permanent and pensionable disability. The committee can not undertake to account for the contradictory testimony of the Pension Office examiners and that of the attending physician. Such contradictions are common; but in this case the evidence given by the doctor who has for many years attended the man is corroborated by one who has known him from boyhood.

This bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. According to that report there is no disability in a pensionable degree existing in this case, and I must therefore object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator objects to its consideration. It will go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has his right to object, but I think he makes his statement altogether too sweepingly. The finding of the committee, like that of a jury on a question of fact, is to the contrary of the Senator's statement.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been passed over without prejudice.

JOHN PARKINSON.

The bill (S. 2326) granting a pension to John Parkinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Parkinson, late a private in Company G, Third United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY MASON.

The bill (S. 2325) to grant a pension to Nancy Mason was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Nancy Mason, widow of William A. Mason, formerly a private in Company K, Third Wisconsin Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHANNA SOFIA ENLIND.

The bill (S. 2061) granting a pension to Johanna Sofia Enlind was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Johanna Sofia Enlind, mother of Alexander Enlind, deceased, late a private in Company I, Thirteenth Connecticut Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RHODA WILLIAMS.

The bill (S. 2181) granting a pension to Rhoda Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rhoda Williams, widow of John M. Williams, late of the First Iowa Battery Light Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER TRIMBLE.

The bill (S. 1897) granting a pension to Alexander Trimble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alexander Trimble, late a member of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want the report read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1897) granting a pension to Alexander Trimble, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant was a private in Company H, Seventeenth Iowa Infantry. He enlisted in 1862, and was discharged in 1865. He claims disability, permanent and acute, from chronic dyspepsia. There is no record testimony of his having been sick in the service, and he says the physician who treated him is dead, and he finds it impossible to procure the testimony required. The Adjutant-General's report, however, does show that he was several months a prisoner in the South, which is very strong circumstantial evidence that he may have incurred not only chronic dyspepsia, but almost any other disease to which the soldier is liable. His record as a soldier from the beginning to the end of his service is excellent, and his reputation as a man is of the best. His neighbors, quite a number of them, certify to his physical depreciation, and to his inability to do manual labor more than a small portion of the time. The examining surgeon testifies that he is ill from the cause specified by him; that he is reduced in strength; that his heart is affected, and his respiration at times difficult; and he adds that he has personal as well as professional knowledge of his disabled condition.

The committee are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to the relief he claims and needs, notwithstanding his inability to furnish the full amount of testimony required. The bill is therefore reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILY M. SWIFT.

The bill (S. 2203) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Swift, of Dexter, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily M. Swift, of Dexter, Mich., dependent mother of James C. Swift, late a lieutenant of Company B, First Regiment Alabama Union Cavalry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2203) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily M. Swift, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner applies for a pension as dependent mother of James C. Swift, first lieutenant of Company B, First Alabama Cavalry, and who died at Glendale, Miss., November 3, 1863, of wounds received in battle. The soldier's identity, service, and death are not questioned, and the proof is ample to show that he was the only son of the claimant. The pension is denied by the Pension Office on the ground of non-dependence at the time of his death. The facts are that the mother was living with her second husband, William Stephens, in the village of Dexter, Washtenaw County, Michigan, when her son enlisted, which was also the home of the latter. It is in evidence that the relations between the husband and wife were not pleasant; that the son gave his mother his bounty-money and afterward sent her portions of his pay, thus recognizing her dependence upon him independent of the fact that his mother had a husband who was under obligations to support her. It is also in evidence that the husband not only did not maintain her, but that he converted to his own use all the personal property she had; that he treated her with cruelty; that he procured from the estate of the soldier's father money that belonged to the son, converted it to his own use, and that the mother had no benefit from it. Also that the petitioner has been granted a divorce from her said husband, William Stephens, and that she is now sixty-seven years of age, in poor health, and dependent upon her relatives for support; and that she has resumed the name of Emily M. Swift.

In the opinion of the committee this is a case demanding relief that may properly be given. The bill is therefore reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLEN P. JACOBS.

The bill (H. R. 5622) granting a pension to Allen P. Jacobs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Allen P. Jacobs, a soldier of the war of 1812, on the pension-roll at the rate of $25 a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case to show why this old soldier has not received a pension before.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5622) granting a pension to Allen P. Jacobs, have examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report with recommendation that the bill do pass.

That Allen P. Jacobs, of Owen County, Kentucky, before he was sixteen years of age was sent by his father to attend his sick brother, Elijah —. Jacobs, who was a soldier in Captain Williams's company, Colonel Whistler's regiment, in the war of 1812; that upon his arrival at Dayton, Ohio, where the United States troops were then located, he, the said Allen P. Jacobs, finding that his brother had recovered from his sickness, joined Col. R. M. Johnson's regiment in its pursuit of the Indians and the British, and that on the 5th day of October, 1813, this command was engaged with the enemy at the battle of the River Thames; that young Allen P. Jacobs was conspicuous for his bravery in said battle, in which he was severely wounded by a bullet shot through the thigh, about midway between the hip joint and the knee. It does not appear from the records of the War Department that he was regularly mustered into the service of the United States, and therefore the Pension Office have not acted upon his application for pension; but that as a boy he volunteered, served gallantly in the field with the United States Army, and was severely wounded, as above stated, is clearly shown by the testimony filed with the papers in the case and examined by the committee.

This veteran is now nearly eighty-nine years of age; he is almost helpless and still a great sufferer from the wound he received in his country's service seventy-three years ago, and now in his old age he is compelled to live on the charity and kindness of friends.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS T. SMITHERS.

The bill (H. R. 427) for the relief of Thomas T. Smithers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas T. Smithers, late a private in Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERTINE COCKRUM.

The bill (H. R. 116) for the relief of Albertine Cockrum was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Albertine Cockrum, widow of E. B. Cockrum, late a captain in the Missouri Home Guards.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH CASTEEL.

The bill (H. R. 6795) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Casteel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Mrs. Sarah Casteel, widow of Abram C. Casteel, late a private in Company F, Twelfth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL W. BOWLING.

The bill (H. R. 6797) to place the name of Samuel W. Bowling on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Samuel W. Bowling, late a private in Company D of the Eleventh Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE WHITESELL.

The bill (H. R. 6590) granting a pension to Catharine Whitesell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Whitesell, widow of Dr. George L. Whitesell, as if Dr. George L. Whitesell had been mustered into the military service of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and to have her paid the pension of the widow of an assistant surgeon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of that bill to the language of it. It reads:

As if the said Dr. George L. Whitesell had been mustered into the service of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

Might not that language carry with it arrears?

Mr. BLAIR. I think the bill itself says that the pension is to be paid her on and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to insert that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it not be better to strike out the words I have named, so as to read:

The name of Catharine Whitesell, widow of Dr. George L. Whitesell, and pay her the pension of the widow of an assistant surgeon.

That is all that is necessary, striking out the other words.

Mr. BLAIR. The form of the bill is not before me.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out all of lines 7 and 8 and line 9 down to and including the word "rebellion," as follows:

As if the said Dr. George L. Whitesell had been mustered into the military service of the United States during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. BLAIR. That leaves the lady properly described.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended the bill would read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Whitesell, widow of Dr. George L. Whitesell, and pay her the pension of the widow of an assistant surgeon.

Mr. BLAIR. Add:

From and after the passage of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the bill as now amended contain a description of the organization in which the service was rendered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not necessary. He was an assistant surgeon.

Mr. BLAIR. But as it is a question of identity, the woman should be described as the widow of one who rendered service in some particular organization. It should retain the words descriptive of her as the widow of the man who was in the organization. Let the bill be passed over for the present until it be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. It can be called up at another time.

BRIDGET M. CULLEN.

The bill (H. R. 6183) for the relief Bridget M. Cullen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Bridget M. Cullen, widow of Patrick Cullen, late a private in Company B, Nineteenth New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT H. STAPLETON.

The bill (H. R. 4797) granting a pension to Robert H. Stapleton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Robert H. Stapleton, late colonel of the Third Regiment New Mexico Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. SHANNON.

The bill (H. R. 1766) granting a pension to Mary A. Shannon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Shannon, widow of Criner C. Shannon, late a private in Company G, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1766) granting a pension to Mary A. Shannon, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

The claim of this widow was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that her husband died of a disease which originated after discharge.

The committee concede that the erysipelas which caused the soldier's death did not originate in the service, but we think it is clearly shown that the erysipelas did result from diseased eyes contracted while in the service and for which he was receiving a pension at the time of his death.

In support of this view of the case we quote the evidence of Dr. Watson, who testifies that he attended the soldier in his last illness for about one week prior to his death; that the immediate and remote cause of soldier's death was inflammation of the eyes, during the progress of which erysipelas set in, and resulted in his death; that the disease of eyes was the immediate cause of the inflammation. In a subsequent affidavit Dr. Watson states that the inflammation in the eyes took an acute form, probably from exposure, and was so great as to cause much redness of the eyes, and while in this condition erysipelas set in and spread all over the face and reached the throat, causing his death in about six days after erysipelas commenced.

The only material question involved in this case is, did erysipelas result from inflamed eyes? Your committee think it did, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. M. A. LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 5174) granting a pension to Mrs. M. A. Lewis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. M. A. Lewis, mother of Thomas Lewis, late of Company L, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, as dependent relative.

LENFORD ROSE.

The bill (H. R. 2976) granting a pension to Lenford Rose was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lenford Rose, son of George W. Rose, late a lieutenant of Company I, Fifth Michigan Infantry, and to pay to his legally constituted guardian, for his benefit, a pension of $15 a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2976) granting a pension to Lenford Rose, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

That Lenford Rose is the son of George W. Rose, who enlisted as a private, Company I, Fifth Regiment Michigan Infantry, August 27, 1861, was promoted to second lieutenant May 28, 1862, and to first lieutenant July 22, 1862, and captain June 23, 1863; died May 24, 1864, of wounds received in action at the battle of the Wilderness, Virginia, May 5, 1864. He left two children, Lenford and Benjamin F. Rose. Benjamin F. is poor; not worth a dollar; supports himself and family by day's labor. Lenford is now thirty-one years of age; is deaf and dumb, and was so from birth. He has no use of his left arm and hand, it being withered and drawn out of shape by contraction of the muscles. George W. Rose left no property whatever at the time of his death, and the pension given the children till they were sixteen was used up in their support. Lenford Rose, on account of his infirmity, is entirely unable to earn his support, and is living on the charity of friends and neighbors, having no relatives able to give him a home.

No soldier has a better military history than George W. Rose. Had he lived, his unfortunate son would not now be a homeless waif. He gave his life to his country, and this unfortunate orphan should be that country's ward.

We think this is a legitimate case for Congressional relief, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLOMON MESSER.

The bill (H. R. 3166) granting a pension to Solomon Messer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Solomon Messer, late of Nathaniel Kelsey's company, North Carolina troops, in removing the Cherokee Indians, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL M'GRAYEL.

The bill (H. R. 5975) granting a pension to Michael McGrayel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Michael McGrayel, late of Company B, Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, to $36 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA KILE.

The bill (H. R. 4145) granting a pension to Maria Kile was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Maria Kile, mother of Nathaniel Kile, late a member in Company K, Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4145) granting a pension to Maria Kile, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House, and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

Nathaniel Kile enlisted as a private in Company K, Fifty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, on the 23d day of October, 1861, and died while in the service September 25, 1862, leaving no widow or child surviving.

His mother, Maria Kile, filed her claim for a pension, and it was rejected April 17, 1883, on the ground that she was not dependent upon the soldier for her support at the time of his death.

The evidence on file in the Pension Bureau gives rise to a serious doubt as to the correctness of this rejection. It appears that at the time of the soldier's death (1862) Simeon Kile, the father, was in the occupation of some rugged land in the wilds of Sullivan County, New York. It was stony, unproductive, and poor enough. He did not own it. He leased it. The Hon. H. R. Low, at present a senator of the State of New York, testifies that he was the owner of the land in question and leased it to Kile; that Kile could not and did not pay the rent, small as it was.

On this so-called farm he had a half dozen cows, a few sheep, and a team of horses. But even these were mortgaged to one Cyrus Gray, who testifies that the chattel mortgage was given in 1862, and after four annual renewals he was, in 1866, obliged to foreclose and sell out the property.

The evidence plainly shows that the son, before he went to the war, was in the habit of working for his parents on the farm, and when employed elsewhere he contributed to their support by bringing his earnings home. It also appears that he sent money to his parents while he was in the Army. His mother is now seventy-four years old, feeble, childish, and in very destitute circumstances.

Your committee is of opinion that she should be placed upon the pension-roll, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. NEVIL.

The bill (H. R. 3623) granting a pension to William H. Nevil was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William H. Nevil, late of Company A, One hundred and ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERDMUTHE KIRCHNER.

The bill (H. R. 5931) granting a pension to Erdmuthe Kirchner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Erdmuthe Kirchner, dependent mother of Carl Kirchner, late a private in Company G, Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES WOLFE.

The bill (H. R. 1768) granting a pension to James Wolfe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Wolfe, late a private in Company F, Second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. BARBARA FUCHS.

The bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, stepmother of John Fuchs, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

The claimant filed her application for pension as the dependent stepmother of John Fuchs, late private of Company H, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and who was killed in action June 19, 1864, at Petersburg, Va. Soldier was never married. Claim was rejected on the ground that there is no title in claim, she not being the natural mother of soldier.

M. Feelder and Jacob Blum testify that they knew claimant as the stepmother of soldier; that soldier at the time of his father's (Sebastian Fuchs) marriage with said claimant was a child of about three years of age.

John G. Steiger and Philip Eder testify that claimant's husband, at soldier's death, was feeble and unable to support her.

Michael Feelder and Jacob Blum further testify that claimant has not remarried since the death of soldier's father April 5, 1867. He was a laboring man, sickly and unable to support his family. He used to mend shoes and had no income from his real estate. Since his death claimant has supported herself by selling the real estate she owned. They owned some real estate in Fountain City, Wis., worth about $2,000, and she has sold the most of it to support herself. Soldier worked for his parents prior to his enlistment, and gave all his earnings to them, and did this for three years before his enlistment.

In soldier's letter to parents bearing date February, 1864, at Camp Washburn, he sends for their support $60 out of his bounty of $75; he also sent them his cirtificate of muster, to enable them to draw the bounty given by the town, with instructions to use it for their support.

The applicant at the death of her husband (soldier's father) was left with four girls to support, the oldest being seventeen and the youngest two and one-half years of age. The soldier's letter written but a few months before his death, and his sending a large portion of his earnings to the support of his parents, strengthened with other testimony showing that prior to and at the time of his enlistment he felt it his duty to contribute to the support of his father's family, evidence the fact that had he lived he would have cared for her who cared for him in his infancy in her now poor and helpless condition.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the bill had better be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ELIZA A. WEEKS.

The bill (H. R. 2975) granting a pension to Eliza A. Weeks was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza A. Weeks, widow of David P. Weeks, late a private in Captain Crosby's company, Second United States Dragoons.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET MADDEN.

The bill (H. R. 4143) for the relief of Margaret Madden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Madden, of Long Island City, N. Y., widow of Christopher Madden, late a private in Company B of the Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. HEADY.

The bill (H. R. 5635) granting a pension to William J. Heady was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of William J. Heady, as captain, on the pension-roll for gallant and meritorious services in the Mexican war.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5635) granting a pension to William J. Heady, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case has satisfied the committee that the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"That William J. Heady, of Kentucky, was a captain in the Army of the United States during the war with Mexico. That just previous to the battle of Buena Vista he was sent with a small detachment on a dangerous reconnaissance, and was captured and carried to the City of Mexico, and kept a prisoner until that city was captured by General Scott.

"He was a brave, prompt, intelligent, and efficient officer. He is now very old, poor, and in very bad health, and in some measure resulting from hard usage as a prisoner, being now wholly unable to do any kind of work, and has been an inmate of a public hospital.

"Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LARKIN G. MEAD.

The bill (H. R. 5283) granting a pension to Larkin G. Mead was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Larkin G. Mead, late assistant surgeon of the Eighteenth Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA C. BEEZELY.

The bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Louisa C. Beezely was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Louisa C. Beezely, widow of Nathaniel Beezely, deceased, formerly a member of Company B, Second Indiana Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELANDER M. MOONEYHAN.

The bill (H. R. 6801) granting a pension to Elander M. Mooneyhan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elander M. Mooneyhan, widow of Thomas J. Mooneyhan, of Company I, Twenty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6801) granting a pension to Elander M. Mooneyhan, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case has satisfied the committee that the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"The evidence in this case establishes beyond question the following facts: Claimant's husband enlisted in Company I, Twenty-fourth Missouri Volunteers, August 11, 1861. On the 20th of August, 1861, he was elected first lieutenant of that company, and immediately took command, drilling them until October 10, 1861, when he was taken sick with typhoid fever, and died October 23, 1861. On the next day the company was regularly mustered into service. The widow's claim was rejected on the ground that the soldier had not been mustered into service. That he served two months and incurred the disease from which he died is clearly proven. The rule of this committee has been to rate pensions according to rank from time of muster under a commission. As this soldier at time of death held no commission, your committee recommend that the bill be passed."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELILAH VANDEVENDER.

The bill (S. 2196) granting a pension to Dillian Vandeventer was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, to strike out the name "Dillian Vandeventer" and insert "Delilah Vandevender;" and in line 7, to strike out "Vandeventer" and insert "Vandevender;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Delilah Vandevender, dependent father of Jacob Vandevender, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

Mr. HARRISON. There is some confusion in the names. The amendment proposed by the committee to strike out "Dillian" and insert "Delilah" should be agreed to; but the name "Vandeventer" is correct, and therefore the amendment to strike out "Vandeventer" and insert "Vandevender" should be rejected. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the word "Vandevender," as proposed by them, and restoring "Vandeventer;" so as to read "Delilah Vandeventer."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee have failed to make a correction. They changed the name, as will be seen, to the mother instead of the father, but left the word "father" standing. In line 7, I move to strike out the word "father" and insert "mother;" so as to read "dependent mother of Jacob Vandeventer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Delilah Vandeventer."

DANIEL H. ROSS.

The bill (S. 524) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel H. Ross, late a private in Company B, First Regiment Mississippi Marine Brigade.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the second section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM L. M'CALL.

The bill (H. R. 4632) granting a pension to William L. McCall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of William L. McCall, late a private in Company D, Ninth Tennessee Cavalry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELEANOR FOUST.

The bill (H. R. 5100) granting a pension to Eleanor Foust was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eleanor Foust, widow of James Foust, deceased, late a private in Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WHITTHORNE May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5100) granting a pension to Eleanor Foust, having examined the same, beg leave to report:

That the testimony which was before the Commissioner of Pensions was fully examined, and being satisfied that the report of the House committee (first session, Forty-ninth Congress No. 787), who also examined this claim, is sustained by the proof in the case, do adopt the said report as herein set forth as a part hereof:

"James Foust enlisted as private in Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, September 24, 1863, and was honorably discharged on the 5th day of September, 1875, and died December 4, 1875.

"Eleanor Foust, his widow, filed claim for pension March 25, 1880, which was rejected on the ground that disabilities of which the soldier died were not incurred while in line of duty.

"The proof shows that claimant's husband was sound and free from disease at time of enlistment, and that he was at time of discharge afflicted with disease of leg and thigh, from which he afterward died.

"The only question which the Pension Office could make on this case is that of the incurrence of the fatal disabilities in line of duty. On this point the proof shows that the first symptoms of the disease were obvious when the soldier returned to his command from a trip home on furlough, and that he attributed the disease at that time to overexertion in attempting to evade capture by a band of confederate soldiers which he encountered while returning to his command.

"The disease appears from the medical testimony to have been physical prostration from profuse and protracted suppuration of the deep-seated structures of the thigh, apparently resulting from extensive periostitis, which his attending physicians during his last illness agree was the cause of his death, and that such disease would naturally result from overexertion.

"The soldier served fifteen months after the first development of disease, and engaged in active service and battles until said disease developed to such an extent as to render him unable to perform hard service. He returned from the Army a physical wreck, and was never able to perform any kind of manual labor thereafter.

"Soldier and this claimant were married to each other March 9, 1854.

"Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

And accordingly reccommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES B. RUSSELL.

The bill (H. R. 5692) for the relief of James B. Russell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James B. Russell, late first lieutenant of Company H, Second Regiment East Tennessee Cavalry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must ask that that bill shall lie over. The claimant resides in my State, and I have information that the disabilities were not incurred in the line of service or in the line of duty, but long since the war. This information comes from a Union soldier. I have communicated it to the Commissioner of Pensions and have requested that he send a special examiner to make a thorough examination into the case and make a report. Until that report is received I desire that the case shall remain upon the Calendar and not be acted upon. I want equal and exact justice done. If the claimant is fairly and properly entitled to a pension he should have it and I shall favor it, and if he is not he ought not to have it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Speaking for myself, I am perfectly willing that that shall be done, but from an examination of the record as presented to the committee I was thoroughly satisfied myself that it is a meritorious case. However, upon an allegation of the kind now made, it is just alike to the claimant and the Government that a further examination should be made.

Mr. BLAIR. I call attention to the fact that this is a case where it would seem that if there is conflicting evidence the soldier might well be entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The report says:

The evidence shows him to have been intensely loyal to the Government and very active in its support.

He is now seventy-two years of age, poor, and unable to do anything for his support.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question of present disability and present pecuniary condition are also controverted.

Mr. BLAIR. The question is really whether it is a case of fraud or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I furnished the Commissioner of Pensions a copy of the report and all the information. I do not know any of the parties, and I do not know the gentleman who gave me the information, except that he is considered a reliable gentleman.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill is to go over informally, I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the Pension Office is to make an examination, it is proper that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN D. KREHBIEL.

The bill (H. R. 6519) granting a pension to John D. Krehbiel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John D. Krehbiel, late captain of Company I, Forty-first Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ARTHUR.

The bill (H. R. 5058) granting a pension to John Arthur was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Arthur, late of Company K, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. WILSON.

The bill (H. R. 7108) granting a pension to Andrew J. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Andrew J. Wilson, late a private in Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE KENNEDY.

The bill (H. R. 6639) granting a pension to Catharine Kennedy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Kennedy, mother of John Moriarty, deceased, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6639) granting a pension to Catharine Kennedy, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have examined the facts of this case, and adopt the statement thereof in the report hereto annexed of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives (House Report No. 1200), and recommend the passage of the bill.

That Catharine Kennedy is the mother of John Moriarty, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-eighth New York Volunteers; that soldier enlisted August 17, 1862, and was killed while on picket duty at Hatcher's Run, Va., March 31, 1865.

Father of soldier died in 1845, and mother remarried in 1847, to Thomas Kennedy, but he had his hip broken in 1850, from which he has been disabled since and unable to do a full day's work. In consequence, both Mrs. Kennedy and her husband have had a constant strife to earn their support. Mother's claim for pension was rejected on the ground that she was not dependent on soldier for support.

Thomas Wieckless, auditor of Scott County, Iowa, March 28, 1881, testifies that Thomas Kennedy owns a house and lot in Davenport, Iowa, assessed at $115, which he purchased in 1876, and that he owns no other property.

Edward Russell, postmaster at Davenport, Iowa, on February 12, 1881, certifies that Mrs. Catherine Kennedy is quite poor; she was wholly dependent upon her son, John Moriarty, for support; her husband is sixty years of age and is in poor health.

Thomas Mahony testifies that he has known claimant for forty-nine years; that he knew her son, John Moriarty; that before he entered the service he worked in a brush factory and gave his earnings to his mother and his stepfather until he enlisted; that he knew he sent them money from the Army.

The Second Auditor of the Treasury certifies that arrears of pay and bounty were paid to mother of the soldier.

It is also in proof that soldier was never married, and that although past his majority when he enlisted, yet he acknowledged his duty and desire to assist in the support of his mother by making contributions both before and after his entering the service. She has struggled along through the years without aid, but now she is old and in need, and is entitled to some relief from a Government to which in the hour of peril she gave the life of her first-born.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. HUDSON.

The bill (H. R. 4850) for the relief of William J. Hudson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William J. Hudson.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LURENA WAGES.

The bill (H. R. 6668) granting a pension to Lurena Wages was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lurena Wages, widow of Jackson Wages, late a private in Company E, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6668) granting a pension to Lurena Wages, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have examined the facts in this case, and concur in the report hereto annexed of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives (House Report No. 1861), and report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The claimant was married to one James Jackson prior to 1845. They lived together a short time and separated. They both filed petitions for divorce from each other in the circuit court of Clay County, Kentucky, in the year 1845. Claimant at the time resided a considerable distance from the county seat, and did not attend the trial of the cause.

She testifies that a short time after the term of the court at which the suit for divorce was set for trial the said James Jackson passed by her place of residence on his return from said term of court, and exhibited to her an instrument of writing, which he represented as being a bill of divorcement dissolving their said marriage, and that she in good faith believed that they were lawfully divorced from each other.

The said James Jackson testifies that he and claimant were by a decree of the proper court of Clay County, Kentucky, divorced from each other.

The said James Jackson was married to another woman in the same neighborhood where claimant lived, in the year 1845, and claimant was married to Jackson Wages, also of the same neighborhood, in the year 1848. The said Jackson Wages enlisted as a private in Company E, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, on the 11th day of March, 1862; was discharged therefrom the 10th day of March, 1865, and died July 26, 1881, of chronic diarrhea, which he contracted while in the service aforesaid, and in the line of duty. Claimant filed application for pension January 25, 1882, which was rejected December 5, 1884, on the ground that claimant was not the lawful widow of the soldier, she having a husband living from whom she was not legally divorced at the time of her marriage to the soldier.

The clerk of the circuit court of Clay County, Kentucky, certifies to the existence of record in his office of the pleadings and papers in the suit for divorce as aforesaid, but does not find a judgment of divorce in said case of record, and gives it as his opinion that the allegations and grounds for divorce were amply sufficient to justify a decree dissolving the marriage contract, and attributes the absence of the record of the divorce to the carelessness of the officers of the court. The deposition of divers citizens of the neighborhood in which claimant and the soldier lived together as husband and wife for more than thirty years shows that the fact of claimant's being divorced from her former husband was never questioned by any one to their knowledge until the question was raised by the Pension Office, which said witnesses are certified in the record as being of good character.

Your committee have been called upon by the citizens of Clay County, Kentucky, to consider in connection with this case a petition numerously signed by the leading citizens and representative men of the locality in which claimant has resided for more than forty years, setting forth the good moral character of claimant and the universally accepted belief of the legality of her marriage with the said soldier, and the fact of their living continuously together as husband and wife in good faith for more than thirty years. The character of these petitioners and their standing in society entitled them to the very highest consideration.

While your committee think that there may have been some legal impairment to claimant's marriage with said soldier, yet they do not for a moment believe that any legal barrier to the marriage was known to or suspected by either claimant or the said soldier. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH TUTTLE.

The bill (H. R. 7109) granting a pension to Joseph Tuttle was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph Tuttle, father of Charles Tuttle, deceased, late a private in Company F, Second Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. WALTERS.

The bill (H. H. 3860) granting a pension to John H. Walters was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John H. Walters, late a private in Company A, First Regiment Kentucky Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS J. SLAYTON.

The bill (H. R. 5169) to increase the pension of Thomas J. Slayton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Thomas J. Slayton, late a private in Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, from $4 to $15 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM FIELD.

The bill (H. R. 4808) granting a pension to William Field was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Field, late a private in Company A, Thirty-ninth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSIAH FOCHT.

The bill (H. R. 5408) granting a pension to Josiah Focht was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Josiah Focht, late a private in Company D, Thirty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EUPHEMIA R. SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 6150) for the relief of Euphemia R. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Euphemia R. Smith, widow of Garrett Smith, late of Company A, One hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS WHORLEY.

The bill (H. R. 2963) granting a pension to Louis Whorley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Louis Whorley, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT E. STEPHENS.

The bill (H. R. 5525) granting increase of pension to Robert E. Stephens was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Robert E. Stephens, late of Company K, Seventy-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers (afterward Sixth Indiana Cavalry), at the rate of $28 per month, in lieu of $24 per month heretofore allowed him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD M. HARRINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of Edward M. Harrington was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "New Jersey" and insert "New York;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward M. Harrington, formerly a member of Company —, Ninth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to insert "C," in line 7, after the word "Company;" so as to read "Company C." There ought to be some company named in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the report show that he was in Company C?

Mr. COCKRELL. "Edward M. Harrington enlisted in Company C, Ninth New York Cavalry."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH M'KAY.

The bill (H. R. 4782) granting a pension to Elizabeth McKay was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out "Rawley" and insert "Rowley;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth McKay, widow of Rowley S. McKay, deceased, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WALTER A. DONALDSON.

The bill (S. 1459) granting a pension to Walter A. Donaldson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Walter A. Donaldson, late captain of Company F, Seventy-first Regiment New York State Volunteers, at the rate of $35 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1459) granting an increase of pension to Walter A. Donaldson, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant, Walter A. Donaldson, enlisted June 21, 1861, as captain of Company F, Seventy-first New York Volunteers, and served until discharged, November 4, 1863. He applied for a pension November 12, 1863, which was allowed at the rate of $5 per month. This was based on a cut on left leg by his horse falling on him at second Bull Run, August 29, 1862; gunshot wound of neck at battle of Chancellorsville, May 3, 1863; gunshot wound of right thigh at battle of Gettysburg, July 2, 1863; and bleeding piles from hard marching.

This amount was increased to $10 from May 4, 1870. Another application for increase was rejected December 5, 1873. His application for arrears was also rejected, but another application for increase was allowed at $15 from September 21, 1877. This was increased to $20 from November 26, 1881. It does not appear that any application has been made since for further increase.

The affidavit of Charles F. Russell, M. D., dated April 16, 1886, is presented, which details at length the present condition of this soldier, and shows that he is now unable to perform any manual labor whatever, and the letter of claimant and other papers are also filed.

Your committee, after a careful consideration of this case, think that the evidence warrants an increase of the pension, and therefore report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment: Strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "thirty-five," in the eighth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN A. ORNDORFF.

The bill (H. R. 4685) for the relief of John A. Orendorff was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out "Orendorff" and insert "Orndorff;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John A. Orndorff, late of Company I, Two hundred and fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John A. Orndorff."

PHILIP RAIGER.

The bill (H. R. 5406) granting a pension to P. E. Raiger was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment: In line 6, before "Raiger," to strike out "P. E." and insert "Philip;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Philip Raiger, late of Company F, Fourth Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Philip Raiger."

DR. WILLIAM H. SHEFFIELD.

The bill (H. R. 4163) granting a pension to Dr. William H. Sheffield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William H. Sheffield, late volunteer acting assistant surgeon of the One hundred and seventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. JACOBS.

The bill (H. R. 4199) granting a pension to William B. Jacobs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William B. Jacobs, late a member of the Fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE BUCK.

The bill (H. R. 3614) granting a pension to Charlotte Buck was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charlotte Buck, dependent stepmother of James Buck, deceased, late of Company A, Sixteenth United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON T. OTEY.

The bill (H. R. 4882) granting a pension to Washington T. Otey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Washington T. Otey, late a lieutenant of Company F of the Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FERDINAND KOEHLER.

The bill (H. R. 6770) granting a pension to Ferdinand Koehler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ferdinand Koehler, late of Company C, Second Regiment Missouri Artillery.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 12, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6770) granting a pension to Ferdinand Koehler, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

It appears from the files in this case that claimant enlisted in Company C, Second Missouri Cavalry, November 22, 1861, and was discharged March 16, 1863, upon surgeon's certificate of disability. In March, 1879, he applied for a pension, alleging internal bleeding hemorrhoids. This application was rejected on ground of no record and no medical treatment in service. He claims that he was treated in regimental hospital, and no records of that regiment are on file. The certificate upon which he was discharged says he was unfit for duty six months before discharged.

Dr. Edward Mayer and several neighbors testify that claimant was an unusually sound man when he enlisted. The former also testifies that claimant was very sick while the regiment was stationed at Saint Louis.

Sergeant Pousch, of the same company, testifies to his sickness in service, and that at the time of his discharge he was suffering from his back and spells of bleeding at his bowels, and that he testifies to this from personal knowledge. Christian Ott, a comrade, corroborates this.

Dr. Mayer testifies that he became his family physician when he returned from the Army, and that from the time of his discharge to the present claimant has been a diseased and disabled man.

B. Warsenger, Wilson Mills, and Andrew Frasier testify as to continuance. Dr. L. Dyer testifies as to treatment for hemorrhoids in 1865. The examining board of surgeons report him totally disabled with hemorrhoids and asthma. His inability to procure medical evidence in service at or immediately after discharge seems to have been the cause of rejection. He served sixteen months, entering the service an unusually strong man, and came out completely broken down. The existence of the disease in the service soon after discharge and ever since seems to be established.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. L. KYLER.

The bill (H. R. 1818) granting a pension to H. L. Kyler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of H. L. Kyler.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 12, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1818) granting a pension to H. L. Kyler, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

H. L. Kyler was a private in Company A, One hundred and sixty-seventh Ohio Volunteers, and was pensioned for neuralgia affecting the eyesight incurably. His pension was revoked in 1882 on the ground that the disability existed prior to enlistment.

Upon a special examination by the agent of the Pension Bureau, it was developed that Dr. J. M. Saunders, of Oxford, Ohio, had complained to the Department and requested Mr. Kyler's pension to be revoked. Dr. Saunders is reported by the special examiner to be a personal enemy to Kyler, and to evidently be animated by ill-will and hatred. The examiner also reports Kyler to be a man of the highest standing and integrity. The truth is that Kyler is marshal of Oxford, and had incurred the enmity of Dr. Saunders while discharging his official duty in a matter wherein Dr. Saunders was culpable. Under these circumstances Dr. Saunder's testimony is entitled to no consideration. On the other hand, eleven witnesses, one of them assistant surgeon of the regiment, swear to Kyler's soundness and exemption from affection of the eyes at enlistment.

We are utterly unable to concur with the Pension Bureau in its suspension of Kyler's certificate. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. CARLETON.

The bill (H. R. 7074) granting a pension to William P. Carleton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William P. Carleton, late of Company B, Second Regiment Illinois Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY MANES.

The bill (H. R. 2800) granting a pension to Mary Manes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Manes, mother of William Manes, late a member of Company D, Fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH A. ROBBINS.

The bill (H. R. 426) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Robbins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth A. Robbins, mother of William Henry Robbins, deceased, late a private in Company E, Seventh Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN J. REYNOLDS.

The bill (H. R. 6453) granting a pension to Martin J. Reynolds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martin J. Reynolds, late a private in Company K, Third Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRUNO SCHULTZ.

The bill (H. R. 6774) granting a pension to Bruno Schultz was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Bruno Schultz, late of Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 12, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6774) granting a pension to Bruno Schultz, have examined the same, and report:

An examination of the proofs in this case has satisfied the committee that the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6774) granting a pension to Bruno Schultz, submit the following report:

"Claimant was a private in Company F, Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, having enlisted on June 25, 1861, and was discharged July 7, 1864. He alleges in his declaration for pension that he was ruptured in right side, caused by falling over a stump at night about January 17 or 18, 1864, while on the retreat from Dandridge to Loudon, Tenn. His claim was rejected because there was no record of his disability in the service. Claimant is shown to have been a stout, healthy young man prior to enlistment, a cooper by trade. The circumstances of his injury as alleged are shown by the testimony of Lieutenant Scheurmann and comrades John Kimich and Conrad Steffman; and three persons, among them his employer, testify to his showing his rupture within eight days after his return from the service. The report of the medical board of examiners in 1876 shows "right scrotal hernia of large size and difficult of retention," and that the disability is permanent. The last evidence, filed in July, 1884, shows claimant disabled for work at least one-half the time.

"It would seem from this evidence that the injury was incurred in the service and line of duty, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES D. COTTON.

The bill (H. R. 6117) granting a pension to James D. Cotton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James D. Cotton, father of Thomas J. Cotton, deceased, late a private in Company H, Twenty-first Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 12, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6117) granting a pension to James D. Cotton, have examined the same, andreport:

An examination of the proofs in this case has satisfied the committee that the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6117) granting a pension to James D. Cotton, submit the following report:

"The claimant is the father of Thomas J. Cotton, late a private in Company H, Twenty-first Missouri Volunteers, who was killed in battle April 6, 1862, at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn. There is some evidence to show that the soldier, who was eighteen years old when killed, had prior to enlistment worked for his father, who was a blacksmith of small means. The assessment rolls show that he was taxed on a valuation of $200. In 1868 he bought (and now owns) a small farm, which is assessed at $350. He is now sixty-five years of age, and unable to perform manual labor. The soldier's mother died a few days after his birth. The Pension Department, in investigating the case, ascertained that the son did not contribute to his father's support at the time of his death, and could not therefore allow the claim.

"Your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY R. BROWN.

The bill (H. R. 1997) granting a pension to Nancy R. Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Nancy R. Brown, widow, mother of Robert M. Brown, late a lieutenant of Company K, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. PENNINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 2940) granting a pension to John T. Pennington was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John T. Pennington, late a private in Company B, Fiftieth Regiment East Missouri Militia Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY FRANKLIN.

The bill (H. R. 7365) for the relief of Nancy Franklin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Nancy Franklin, of Madison County, North Carolina, dependent mother of Balis Norton and James Norton, late of the Second Regiment North Carolina Volunteers, United States Army, and Josiah Norton, late of the Third North Carolina Regiment, United States Volunteers, all of whom were killed in fight on Laurel, North Carolina, September, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS W. SCANLAND.

The bill (H. R. 3043) granting a pension to Lewis W. Scanland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lewis W. Scanland, late of Col. John Thomas's regiment, Captain Barnsback's company, of Illinois volunteers in the Black Hawk war.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 13, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3043) granting a pension to Lewis W. Scanland, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case has satisfied the committee that the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3043) for the relief of Lewis W. Scanland, submit the following report:

"It appears that petitioner enlisted April 18, 1832, for service in the Black Hawk war; that he served about thirty-eight days, and was honorably discharged with his comrades May 28, 1832. On March 14, 1884, petitioner filed his application for pension, alleging the incurrence of chronic diarrhea during the service above mentioned.

"There is no record of his disability or treatment therefor, nor does claimant allege to have been treated while in the service. There is no mention of his disability at discharge.

"Claim was rejected on ground of no record, short service, and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence to connect the alleged disability with his military service. To substantiate claimant's testimony in regard to alleged disability we have the affidavit of his comrade, S. W. Gaskell, who has known claimant since he was ten years old; enlisted with him, served and been discharged with him; knew that he was attacked with chronic diarrhea while in the aforesaid service; that he suffered severely with it after discharge, and upon the route home, and that he suffered with it continually up to 1872, when affiant moved from the vicinity of claimant. Said Gaskell is the only member of his company whom claimant knows to be now living.

"We also find the evidence of Col. John Thomas, of Belleview, Ill., who says that from the best of his remembrance claimant was attacked with diarrhea while in said service, and that a great many in that service were similarly attacked. Colonel Thomas also testifies to his belief in the truthfulness and uprightness of claimant.

"Claimant testifies that the physician who treated him immediately upon his return home died many years ago. Other medical treatment of claimant is testified to by the following physicians: Henry L. Strong, who was his family doctor for ten years after September 9, 1848, and he knows him to have been troubled with chronic weakness of bowels both before and after September, 1848. Samuel Willard, who, for a few years about 1856, was claimant's family doctor, testifies:

"'Claimant was subject to chronic diarrhea. He had several severe attacks, in which I was obliged to be up all night with him.'

"J. L. R. Wadsworth, who treated claimant in 1871 and 1872, testifies that he was subject to chronic diarrhea.

"Also, affidavit of True Blake, who was a near neighbor of claimant from 1872 to 1883 and knew that he was subject to chronic diarrhea.

"James Purviance also makes affidavit that he has known claimant for sixty years; was his neighbor before and after his service in Black Hawk war, and from the time of his discharge up to 1872, when claimant moved from his vicinity, it was common report that he was suffering from chronic diarrhea.

"Claimant is unable to produce evidence of any one except Gaskell and Purviance as to his condition at discharge, and all his old neighbors are dead or moved to parts unknown.

"We recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN MALONE.

The bill (H. R. 6670) granting a pension to Susan Malone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Susan Malone, widow of William Malone, late a sergeant in Company H, One hundred and tenth Regiment United States Colored Troops, who died during the war of 1861 to 1865.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Sturtz, widow of Jacob Sturtz, deceased, late of Company G, Twentieth Maryland Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIAS SHEADS.

The bill (H. R. 5438) for the relief of Elias Sheads was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elias Sheads, dependent father of four sons, all of whom were killed in battle or died from wounds or disease contracted in line of duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL B. RANDALL.

The bill (H. R. 4501) granting a pension to Daniel B. Randall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel B. Randall, late of Company A, One hundred and second Illinois Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMDEN May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4501) granting a pension to Daniel B. Randall, respectfully submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted in Company A, One hundred and second Illinois Volunteers, on July 28, 1862, and was discharged June 6, 1865. His application for pension was filed on the 18th day of July, 1879, alleging fracture of limbs (sustained in the line of duty), which caused epilepsy (about November 15, 1862). The claimant states that he can not furnish proof of comrades, because those who were with him were strangers, and the surgeon who treated him died (as he is informed) soon after the war. Proof of soundness at date of enlistment is established by the evidence of his family physician and several of his neighbors.

The claimant's captain testifies that "claimant was away at hospital, and returned between September 26 and November 15, 1862, and upon his return the accident was reported. He further states that he knew nothing about the case except that claimant suffered from frequent fits of epilepsy from that time until his discharge."

The claim was rejected upon the ground that there is no evidence that alleged disability (injury to side and resulting epilepsy) was received in line of duty. The claimant's reason for not producing this evidence is found in the fact that the men under his charge at the time were strangers to him. Evidence of the continuance of the disease from date of discharge to the present time is conclusive.

Your committee recommend that the bill pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES T. REBER.

The bill (H. R. 3831) granting a pension to Charles T. Reber was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles T. Reber, late surgeon of the Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES DUNBAR.

The bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to James Dunbar was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Dunbar, late a private in Company I, Second Regiment of Delaware Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to James Dunbar, have carefully examined the same, and report:

That the soldier enlisted in Company I, Second Regiment Delaware Volunteers, on the 8th day of October, in the year 1861, and was discharged from service July 14, 1862, his certificate of discharge stating that it was based upon the ground of "deafness, under which he labored before he was mustered into the service." He again enlisted on the 19th of September, 1864, in Company C, Eighth Regiment Delaware Volunteers. He avers that during the period of his first enlistment, in the winter of 1861, at Camp Wharton, in Maryland, and in the line of his duty, his ears were frozen, and he contracted a severe cold, which first caused a loss of hearing. He also declares that when he the second time enlisted, as above stated, he made known to the officers the fact of his deafness, but was told by them it would make no difference in his case, as he would be employed in cooking; that during such second service, in the winter of 1864, at City Point, Va., his deafness was increased by exposure then incurred in the service, and he was taken first to Harewood Hospital, Washington, D. C., and then to Tilton General Hospital, Delaware, from the last of which he was discharged May 16, 1865.

The Pension Office rejected this soldier's application for a pension upon the ground that the alleged disability of deafness existed prior to his enlistment. Of this allegation there is no proof in the case except the recital of the surgeon's certificate, upon which the discharge was granted. The claimant is a very ignorant man, incapable of writing his name, and unless the certificate of discharge was read to him he could not have known what facts were stated in it. It is not fair even to presume his acquiescence in the truth of such facts from the possession by him of such certificate, taking it for granted that a copy of the same was handed to him.

How the surgeon came by his knowledge of the time of the incurrence of deafness is not stated. In view of the accumulated evidence to the contrary, derived from the affidavits of some half-dozen witnesses, neighbors, and friends who knew the claimant just before his enlistment, we conclude that this allegation of disability prior to enlistment was a mere inference drawn by the surgeon of what the soldier's condition was at the time of enlistment, judging from what it was at the time of discharge.

The severity of exposure to which the soldier was subjected soon after entering into the service, and the great bodily suffering ensuing therefrom, render it exceedingly probable that the alleged deafness then had its origin. From that time his neighbors and friends date the beginning of his affliction. The captain of his company testified that soon after the first enlistment it was officially reported to him that this soldier had become deaf from such exposure. It is further proved that he was extremely deaf at the time of his final discharge; that shortly after his return from the war the inside of his head gathered, and filthy humor constantly ran from his ears, causing almost total deafness in both ears; and that he has been a constant sufferer from pains in the head and deafness, and greatly incapacitated for work, being rendered dependent upon others, in a measure, for support.

It further appears that the original declaration in the case was filed January 8, 1863, and that the claimant is over sixty years of age and very poor.

Your committee therefore report favorably upon this bill, and recommend the passage of the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH M. SHEARER.

The bill (H. R. 1061) for the relief of Sarah M. Shearer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah M. Shearer, widow of Cranford W. Shearer, late lieutenant-colonel of the —— Maryland Volunteers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a blank in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the clerks see if there is anything in the report to indicate with what it should be filled.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the name of the organization mentioned anywhere.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the widow of a lieutenant-colonel. The pension would be $30 a month.

Mr. BLAIR. But the organization is not shown.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is nothing in the papers to show the organization in which he served.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be passed over, without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I understand that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] has the name of the regiment in the Shearer case.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Yes, it was the Third Maryland Regiment. As the bill came from the House the name of the regiment was omitted. The bill will have to be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 insert the word "third;" so as to read, "late lieutenant-colonel of the Third Maryland Volunteers."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that that is a correct description.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. That is the correct name of the regiment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LEVI M. STARNE.

The bill (H. R. 6020) granting a pension to Levi M. Starne was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Levi M. Starne, late a private in Company B, Eighty-sixth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CLARISSA TAFT.

The bill (H. R. 5351) granting a pension to Mrs. Clarissa Taft was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Clarissa Taft, widow of Hiram Taft, jr., late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. MYKINS.

The bill (S. 158) granting a pension to Mary A. Mykins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, to strike out the words "second lieutenant" and insert "captain;" in the same line, after the word "company," to strike out "A" and insert "E;" and, before the word "regiment," to strike out "one hundred and seventy-sixth" and insert "one hundred and seventieth;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Mykins, widow of Daniel J. Mykins, late captain of Company E, One hundred and seventieth Regiment of New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. ALDRICH May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 158) granting a pension to Mary A. Mykins, have examined the same, and report:

That David J. Mykins enlisted as a private in Company E, One hundred and seventieth Regiment of New York Volunteers, on the 28th of August, 1862. He was promoted through the several grades until at the time of his discharge he was captain and brevet lieutenant-colonel. He was wounded at Petersburg July 16, 1864; received a gunshot wound in the forehead, crushing the frontal bone, and a flesh wound in the neck. For the first of these wounds, which unfitted him for manual labor, causing intense pain, dizziness, and deafness, he was pensioned by certificate issued in 1881. Two intelligent and respectable witnesses, who knew the soldier intimately for several years prior and at the time of his death, which occurred on the 4th day of April, 1882, state that they had ample opportunities to observe him during his last illness, and that from such observation they believe his death was the result of the wounds received in the manner indicated.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M'MAHON.

The bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Mary McMahon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary McMahon, widow of Peter McMahon, late a private in Company E, Second Regiment Rhode Island Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE D. WHITTED.

The bill (S. 2341) granting a pension to Josephine D. Whitted was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Josephine D. Whitted, widow of George W. Whitted, late of Company G, Seventy-seventh Indiana Volunteers, or Fourth Indiana Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BARDEN.

The bill (S. 2353) granting a pension to William Barden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Barden, father of Henry D. Barden, a private of Company E, First Regiment of Wisconsin Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM MORRIS.

The bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Hiram Morris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Hiram Morris, formerly of Company B, Twenty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT C. KELLEY.

The bill (S. 2286) for the relief of Albert C. Kelley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "cavalry," to strike out the words "at the rate of $50 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitiations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Albert C. Kelley, late a private in Company B, Fifth Regiment of Michigan Cavalry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA M. MARSHALL.

The bill (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, to strike out the words "twenty dollars per month, the pension allowed the widow of a captain in the military service," and to insert "twelve dollars a month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Anna M. Marshall, widow of Capt. Patterson S. Marshall, on the pension-roll as a pensioner, at the rate of $12 a month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANTHON EITAPENCE.

The bill (S. 2330) for the relief of Adam Eitapence was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, before the name "Eitapence," to strike out "Adam" and insert "Anthon;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws the name of Anthon Eitapence, of Utica, N. Y., father of Adam Eitapence, late of Company H, of the One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the relief of Anthon Eitapence.

HENRY LAFNER.

The bill (S. 2308) granting a pension to Henry Lafner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendment, in line 6, to strike out "Lafuer" and insert "Lafner;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Henry Lafner, formerly a private in Company A, One hundred and eighty-first Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2308) granting a pension to Henry Lafner, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner was a private in Company A, One hundred and eighty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers. He made application for a pension, alleging total blindness in both eyes, the result of exposure in the service, which was rejected on the ground of insufficiency of testimony.

In reference to this case, the captain of the company says:

"He was quite a boy, and did his duty as a good soldier. I have since learned that he was blind; in fact, he was led into my office, and I know he is blind. He stated that it was caused by exposure in the service. I know he was subjected to a great deal of hardship and exposure."

In an affidavit, the captain testifies to his activity and efficiency as a soldier, notwithstanding his youth; that during the winter of 1864-'65 and the spring of 1865, in consequence of exposure and unusual bad weather, he contracted a cold, which affected his eyes, causing inflammation and a blood-shot appearance, and symptoms of granulation, which continued until after discharge and return to Ohio.

Fred. McDonough, who also was in command of the company, testifies that the soldier was thoroughly examined; that he passed a good examination; that he was a faithful, active soldier, and that the command experienced great hardships and exposures during the winter of 1864-'65 and the early spring following.

The certificate of an examining surgeon pronounces him totally blind. In his petition the soldier says that his peculiar disability prevents him from prosecuting his claim with any hope of success in procuring such testimony as is required to complete his case, and he appeals to Congress for the relief which he can not hope to obtain but by the passage of a special bill. The committee regard this as a very hard case, in which there is no appearance of fraud and in reference to which the witnesses are evidently convinced of more than they can certify under oath. There is evidence to show that the inflammation commenced before he was discharged. No proof has been offered disparaging his reputation or questioning his claim. It is a case of sad necessity, to which relief can only be extended by Congress, which, in the opinion of the committee, may properly be done. The bill is reported with an amendment changing the name "Lafuer" to "Lafner" wherever it occurs, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Henry Lafner."

RACHEL ANN PIERPONT.

The bill (S. 2452) granting a pension to Rachel Ann Pierpont was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rachel Ann Pierpont, dependent mother of Thomas W. Bailey, late a private in Company C, Twenty-second Kentucky Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. PEAVEY.

The bill (S. 2453) granting a pension to George W. Peavey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Peavey, late first lieutenant of Company D, Fifty-seventh United States Colored Infantry, and a sergeant of Company B, First New York Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES S. FURNISS.

The bill (S. 2454) granting a pension to James S. Furniss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James S. Furniss, late a private in Company E, Seventy-fourth New York Volunteers, who enlisted May 5, 1862, and was discharged May 30, 1865.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting a pension to James S. Furniss, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant enlisted in the Seventy-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, July 25, 1861; was honorably discharged April 10, 1862; re-enlisted September 5, 1862, and was honorably discharged in May, 1865. His application is for disabilities that include chronic diarrhea, disease of kidneys, and from typhoid fever, hemorrhage of right lung; and his rejection is on the ground of his failure to prove "origin."

The claimant makes a connected statement covering the time from his entering the service until his discharge, giving the dates of his admission to hospital and his transfer from one to another. The Surgeon-General's report corroborates his statement, and names typhoid fever as one of the diseases for which he was treated.

The report of the Adjutant-General verifies his service and his sick-furloughs, but adds, "Nature of sickness not stated; regimental hospital records not on file;" and the report of the Surgeon-General closes with the remark that "the records of the general and field hospital, Third Army Corps, are not on file bearing on this case." The absence of a connected history of treatment from the record is one of the discouragements encountered by nearly every suitor for a pension. While it should be the reliable source of information as to the origin of disease, it furnishes little that is satisfactory, so that the soldier is thrown upon his own resources for such evidence as is exacted by the Pension Bureau.

In this case the files contain the best quality of evidence as to the soldier's soundness and as to his exemplary character prior to enlistment.

Two of his neighbors, who knew him before and after his service, who lived near, and were intimate with him—and one of whom is vouched for as entirely reliable—testify to his broken-down condition immediately after his return; to his kidney disease, chronic diarrhea, and hemorrhages of lung; to his continued suffering and almost total incapacity to perform light labor. Dr. Cramton, of Colchester, Vt., testifies that he commenced treating claimant in 1871; found him in a debilitated condition, suffering with pain and soreness over region of kidneys and liver, torpid condition of liver, and irritation of kidneys; that he is not able to do half the work of an able-bodied man.

The medical board before whom the claimant was ordered to appear by the Commissioner of Pensions report affection of right lung, severe cough, respiration hurried, diarrhea troublesome. At the date of the examination, April 5, 1882, they say, "He is now entirely incapacitated for manual labor. The disease has been of gradual progress, and may have originated from typhoid fever."

The question as to "origin" of disease must be settled on this testimony, which is partly circumstantial. He can not obtain that of comrades, as the Pension Office requires, because, as he says, his regiment was composed of different nationalities, who dispersed to various localities. Furthermore, he was a musician, by reason of which, and his frequent illness, he was separated from intimate association with members of his regiment. It would seem that, inasmuch as he went in the service in a healthy condition, was for months sick and under treatment in hospital, returned to his home in a broken-down condition, and has traced the progress of his disabilities to a period when he is apparently very near the end of his mortal career, the "origin" of his illness must have connection with his service.

So convinced are the committee of this fact that the accompanying bill is reported for his relief, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD D. PATCHIN.

The bill (S. 2455) granting a pension to Edward D. Patchin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Edward D. Patchin, son of Bernard Patchin, late a private in Company B, Forty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must ask that that bill be passed over. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] who reported it is not here, and the report is not at all satisfactory. It is the introduction of a new class of pensions. I ask that the bill may retain its place on the Calendar and be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection.

MARGARET S. DAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 5656) granting a pension to Margaret S. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret S. Davis, widow of Dr. J. E. Davis, late assistant surgeon of the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. DOWNING.

The bill (H. R. 3737) granting a pension to John H. Downing was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John H. Downing, late of Company I, First Pennsylvania Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET PEAK.

The bill (H. R. 2968) granting a pension to Harriet Peak was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Harriet Peak, widow of Urias Peak, deceased, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW G. HILLBERG.

The bill (H. R. 7066) for the relief of Andrew G. Hillberg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Andrew G. Hillberg, late a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Minnesota State Volunteers, and to grant him a pension for varicose veins in addition to the pension he is now receiving for partial deafness.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. MATTINGLY.

The bill (H. R. 5951) granting a pension to John M. Mattingly was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John M. Mattingly, late a private in Company A, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REBECCA ALLEN.

The bill (H. R. 5645) granting a pension to Rebecca Allen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rebecca Allen, widow of John E. Allen, deceased, late a landsman on the United States steamer Atlanta.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES STOBAUGH.

The bill (H. R. 7660) granting a pension to James Stobaugh was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Stobaugh, late of Company B, Third Regiment Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7660) granting a pension to James Stobaugh, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"James Stobaugh enlisted June 1, 1862, in Company B, First Arkansas Infantry, and was discharged with his company at expiration of service, December 31, 1862. He re-enlisted in Company B, Third Arkansas Cavalry, September 23, 1863, and was discharged therefrom May 22, 1865.

"In his application for pension he alleges that about September 20, 1863, while performing service as a soldier, he with several others were attacked at Lewisburg, Ark., while there recruiting, and he was wounded in the right shoulder; says that captain and lieutenant are both dead, but the fact is well established by the testimony of several comrades who were present.

"His claim was rejected because the date of receiving wound is alleged by claimant and comrades three days before the date of his enrollment as shown by the records in the War Department.

"The records in the War Department give date of enrollment as September 23, 1863, and date of muster October 29, 1863. It does not seem probable that claimant would have been accepted and enrolled three days after receiving the wound; and as the claimant and comrades fix the date about the 20th, it is not a violent presumption to assume that it was after the enrollment, since this soldier would have been very likely to have enrolled his own name before recruiting others. But even if his wound was received three days before his enrollment it is proven satisfactorily that he was on duty, and his six months' previous and nearly two years' subsequent service clearly entitle him to the relief sought.

"The official examination finds a present disability from the wound. So, in view of all the facts, your committee recommend that the bill do pass."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY N. HUGGINS.

The bill (H. R. 1678) for the relief of Henry N. Huggins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Henry N. Huggins, dependent father of Andrew P. Huggins, deceased, late a private in Company K, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FANNIE E. EVANS.

The bill (H. R. 4426) granting a pension to Fannie E. Evans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Fannie E. Evans, widow of George S. Evans, late colonel of the Second Regiment California Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS DEMING.

The bill (H. R. 2971) granting a pension to Francis Deming was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Francis Deming, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY KARSTETTER.

The bill (H. R. 2043) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. That is a bill of remarkable phraseology.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 18, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2043) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"Jacob Karstetter, husband of claimant, was in receipt of a pension previous to and at the time of his death of $18 per month for gunshot wound of left hand, received in action. He died August 21, 1874, of gastritis, alleged to be the consequence of broken constitution, the result of exposure and injuries received in the service. His widow's claim for pension was rejected 'because death resulted from gastritis and congestion of kidneys, due to unknown causes no medically established.'

"The evidence all shows that the soldier was over 6 feet in height, and engaged in farming in the mountains of Pennsylvania at the time of his enlistment; that his health was of the most rugged character; that he returned home wounded and broken down in health; that he never recovered, and that he finally died from some disease, which, as is claimed by the Pension Department, could not be medically established.

"James F. Berry, neighbor, testifies:

"'When he came home he was broken down and not able to do manual labor. He complained a good deal after he came home, and was frequently sick and laid up. Saw him often in his last sickness; he was much worn down and very feeble.'

"F. H. Van Valzah, M. D., testifies:

"'From June, 1870, to 1871 saw soldier almost daily. In months of November and December, 1870, I attended him in an attack of pleuro-pneumonia, brought on by exposure and the broken-down condition of his system. The above trouble was in the left side and lung; he always complained of a weakness in this lung, from some injury received in the service. Affiant thinks a horse ran against him in the Seven Days fight, injuring him and leaving an enlargement or tumor in the left side, which no doubt has been the starting point of his lung trouble.'

"Dr. J. A. Houtz testifies:

"'Knew Jacob Karstetter from December, 1871, to date of his death. Do not know anything about his condition before enlistment. He never was under affiant's treatment except during his last illness, which lasted about four weeks. His illness was caused by gastritis and congestion of kidneys. Death was caused by gastritis. Although soldier never consulted affiant before his last illness, affiant frequently heard him say he was not the same man physically he had been before he was in the service. He did very little hard labor during the time affiant knew him.'

"From the evidence of these pysicians, who attended soldier during his last and a previous severe illness, it is apparent that his broken-down constitution, the result of exposure and service in the Army, predisposed him to several attacks of sickness, the last of which proved fatal.

"Your committee are clearly of the opinion that death can be traced in this case to soldier's service in the Army with very nearly the same degree of certainty (notwithstanding the fact that it cannot be medically established) as if it had been the direct result of a gunshot wound. They therefore report favorably, and recommend that the bill do pass."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill reads as follows:

That Mary Karstetter, widow of Jacob Karstetter, a soldier in the volunteer service of Pennsylvania, be placed on the pension-roll, and receive an allowance of pension as the widow of a soldier.

I think there ought to be some company and regiment stated there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So there ought. That is very loose indeed.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JESSE B. SCUDDER.

The bill (H. R. 421) granting a pension to Jesse B. Scudder was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jesse B. Scudder, of Industry, Ill., of Company I, Seventy-eighth Illinois Regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GILBERT A. PHILIPS.

The bill (H. R. 918) granting a pension to Gilbert A. Philips was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Gilbert A. Philips, of Louisville, Ky., who was appointed a quartermaster in the Army in 1861 by order of General William Nelson.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISA WEITZEL.

The bill (H. R. 3601) to increase the pension of Louisa Weitzel, widow of Godfrey Weitzel, late a major-general of United States volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase to $50 per month the pension of Louisa Weitzel, widow of Godfrey Weitzel, late a lieutenant-colonel in the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and a major-general of United States volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELSON MONROE.

The bill (H. R. 6088) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Monroe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Nelson Monroe to $40 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL SHULER.

The bill (H. R. 6237) for the relief of Samuel Shuler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Samuel Shuler, late a private in Company E, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $10 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIAH E. A. B. NOWELL.

The bill (H. R. 1148) granting a pension to Mariah E. A. B. Nowell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mariah E. A. B. Nowell, and to pay her a pension during her life of $12 a month, for her important services to the country during the late civil war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS TEGAN.

The bill (H. R. 3047) granting a pension to Thomas Tegan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Tegan, late a private in Company I, Thirty-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE BAGLEY.

The bill (H. R. 1627) granting a pension to Annie Bagley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Annie Bagley, widow of Robert F. Bagley, late a sergeant of Company F, Fifty-first New York Volunteers, as though her husband had contracted the disability of which he died in the military service of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the necessity of having in the bill the words, "as though her said husband had contracted the disability of which he died in the military service of the United States." I do not think they are necessary, and I move to strike them out. They might bring up some question of intricacy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 807) granting a pension to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war was announced as the next pension bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BLAIR. That is a general bill which I should be glad to see passed, but I suppose it is hardly proper to press it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. CHASE.

The bill (H. R. 6372) to pension Charles A. Chase was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles A. Chase, of Fairfield, Me., late of Company C, Thirteenth Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE KELLEY.

The bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alice Kelley, a volunteer nurse during the late war, at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ANDERSON.

The bill (H. R. 7436) to grant a pension to Mary Anderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Anderson, widow of Richard Anderson, late a private in Company I, Seventeenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY I. CARTIN.

The bill (H. R. 6566) granting a pension to Henry I. Cartin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry I. Cartin, late a private in Company C, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH GUY.

The bill (H. R. 7253) for the relief of Joseph Guy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph Guy, formerly a member of Company C, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAYBERRY VANCE.

The bill (H. R. 6247) granting a pension to Mayberry Vance was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mayberry Vance, of Danville, Pa., late a private in the marine service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABNER MOREHEAD.

The bill (H. R. 3304) to restore the name of Abner Morehead to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Abner Morehead, late of Company K, One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 19, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3304) to restore Abner Morehead to the pension-roll, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"The claimant enlisted as a private in Company K, One hundred and fifteenth Indiana Volunteers, August 13, 1863, and was discharged March 27, 1864, and filed his application for a pension September 25, 1866, alleging the incurrence of disability of loss of eyesight resulting from hardship and exposure incident to camp life and field duty. He contracted fever in severe form at Greeneville, Tenn., and before entirely recovering contracted a heavy cold, which settled in his eyes, causing ulceration of the eyes, almost destroying his sight, which has continued up to the present time, rendering him unable to perform any manual labor by reason of loss of sight and general debility resulting from said disability. He was treated in hospital at Knoxville, Tenn., and Indianapolis, Ind."

"Prior to and up to time of enlistment he was a stout, able-bodied man, wholly free from any disease whatever. He was granted a pension November 16, 1867, at the rate of $8 for disability for loss of sight of right eye and partial loss of the sight of left eye. He was also granted an increase to $15 per month December 15, 1869, upon the statement of Examining Surgeon Barnes. His pension was discontinued September 26, 1876, upon the statement of a claim agent and special examiner, alleging existence of disability prior to enlistment.

"Claimant made application for restoration February 17, 1882; the Department rejecting the same upon statement of special examiner, as above stated.

"Your committee having made a thorough and complete examination of the very voluminous papers now on file with the Pension Office, and believing this case to be a just and meritorious one, submit the following strong array of evidence in support of claimant's bill:

"Captain George Beauchamp, of claimant's company and regiment, testifies that while in the line of duty at Greeneville, Tenn., about November 1, 1863, soldier took a severe fever, and before recovering took cold from exposure, which settled in his eyes, causing ulceration of the eyes and injury to the sight.

"Claimant's neighbors, B. F. Hart, Dr. Osgood, Dr. Worden, Rev. Hamilton Hays, testify that they had known claimant for years prior to the time of enlistment, and that his eyesight was good.

"John Smith, James South, Thomas Keeling, and John P. Brown, all members of the same company and regiment, swear they enlisted at the same time, and know claimant was free from said disability at the time of his entering the service.

"William Kelley, George C. Massey, and Thomas C. Baker, his neighbors, testify that they worked with claimant in a pork house for a year or more prior to his entering the Army, and that claimant was free from said disability at the time of his enlistment, and that he is now totally blind.

"Therefore your committee, in view of the abundant evidence in claimant's favor and his extreme helplessness and old age, report the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA KESSINGER.

The bill (H. R. 504) granting a pension to Anna Kessinger was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna Kessinger, widow of Daniel F. Kessinger, late a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES T. IRWIN.

The bill (H. R. 3640) granting a pension to James T. Irwin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James T. Irwin, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. BARKER.

The bill (H. R. 1177) granting a pension to William J. Barker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William J. Barker, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. DARLING.

The bill (H. R. 7257) granting a pension to James H. Darling was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James H. Darling, late of Company G, Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REBECCA REESE M'KEE.

The bill (H. R. 6323) granting a pension to Rebecca Reese McKee was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rebecca Reese McKee, the widow of Capt. John McKee, a soldier of the war of 1812, at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Let the report in that case be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 19, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6323) granting a pension to Rebecca Reese McKee, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the bill and recommend its passage.

The claimant, Rebecca Reese McKee, was married to John McKee, of Iredell County, North Carolina, on the 23d day of December, 1838, and she is now over ninety years of age. On the 19th day of March, 1880, she made application to the Commissioner of Pensions for a pension as the widow of said John McKee, on account of his services as a captain of the Detached Militia of North Carolina, war of 1812, but the application was rejected on the ground that there was no record or other evidence of the service of said soldier. There has been submitted to your committee a printed copy of the—

"Muster-rolls of the soldiers of the war of 1812 detached from the militia of North Carolina in 1812 and 1814, published in pursuance of the resolution of the General Assembly of January 28, 1851, and a resolution of the General Assembly of February 25, 1873, under the direction of the adjutant-general."

The adjutant-general of North Carolina, under date of March 6, 1873, certifies these rolls to be a true copy of the records of his office, and they show that John McKee was captain of the Iredell County company of the Sixth Regiment of the Detached Militia of North Carolina, commanded by Lieut. Col. Richard Allison. Satisfactory evidence has been filed with the committee showing that John McKee, the husband of the claimant, is the same person who was captain of said Iredell County company.

To correct a mistake in the names of the claimant and her husband your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It is far from any purpose of mine to oppose the pension. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are pensioning soldiers, or the widows of soldiers, and now we are getting down to the widows of soldiers of the war of 1812 married many years after the close of that war. I only call attention to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ALICE E. TRAVERS.

The bill (H. R. 6753) granting a pension to Mrs. Alice E. Travers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Alice E. Travers, widow of John Travers, late of the Third Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA CUNNINGHAM.

The bill (H. R. 5414) granting a pension to Maria Cunningham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Maria Cunningham, widow of William H. Cunningham, deceased, late of Company K, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMMINS PORTER.

The bill (H. R. 8086) granting a pension to Cummins Porter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Cummins Porter, late a private in Company F, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY HAWHE.

The bill (H. R. 5232) for the relief of Mary Hawhe, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Hawhe, widow of Arthur J. Hawhe, late lieutenant-colonel of the Forty-ninth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA NEWMAN.

The bill (H. R. 5492) granting a pension to Eliza Newman, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza Newman, widow of Lazarus Newman, late a private in the One hundred and forty-ninth New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. M. AUGUSTA BARNES.

The bill (S. 1932) granting a pension to Mrs. M. Augusta Barnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 8, after the words "rate of," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. M. Augusta Barnes, widow of Surgeon Norman S. Barnes, late of the Twenty-seventh New York Volunteers, at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CECELIA C. M'KENNA.

The bill (H. R. 7509) granting a pension to Cecelia C. McKenna was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Cecelia C. McKenna, mother of John H. McKenna, late a private in the United States Marine Corps, at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMOS C. WERTZ.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL J. BINGMAN.

The bill (H. R. 3501) granting a pension to Daniel J. Bingman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel J. Bingman, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET MAYHAM.

The bill (H. R. 6176) granting a pension to Margaret Mayham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Mayham, widow of William Mayham, late lieutenant of Company A, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES FOREMAN.

The bill (H. R. 6193) granting a pension to Charles Foreman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Charles Foreman, late a private in Company G, Thirty-sixth United States Colored Troops, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. CHASE.

The bill (H. R. 4382) granting a pension to John F. Chase was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of John F. Chase, late of the Fifth Maine Battery, to $46 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN BUTLER.

The bill (H. R. 5411) granting a pension to John Butler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Butler, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHRONIA WITHAM.

The bill (H. R. 7641) granting a pension to Sophronia Witham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sophronia Witham, widow of Robert McGill, late a private in Company A, Twelfth Regiment Maine Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 19, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7641) granting a pension to Sophronia Witham, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee concur in the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives (House Report No. 1530) hereto annexed, and report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The petition in this case, which we append, is supported by several affidavits and discloses the following facts: The petitioner was pensioned as widow of Robert McGill, a private in Company A, Twelfth Maine Regiment, who died from wounds received while on picket before Port Hudson, La., May 26, 1863. Subsequently she was married to one Aaron Witham, and her pension ended. Witham died in 1882, leaving no property. Mrs. Witham is now very poor and entirely destitute. She has depended upon charity for the last two years, and, unless her pension is renewed, must go to the poor-house. She has no relatives upon whom she can call for aid. Two of her brothers, as well as her first husband, were killed in the Army. She has suffered from a paralytic shock and can perform no labor. Congress has in several instances granted relief under like circumstances, and your committee accordingly report the accompanying bill for her relief, with recommendation that it pass.

PETITION OF SOPHRONIA WITHAM.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, a resident of the town of Lebanon, in the county of York and State of Maine, respectfully represents that her husband, Robert McGill, was a soldier in the service of the United States during the late war, and was killed while in the service; that at the time of his death she had three daughters who were dependent upon her for support; that a pension was granted to her, and with that she was unable to support herself and daughters; that on the 2d day of May, 1870, she was married to one Aaron Witham, of Acton, Me., who lived on a good farm and represented to her that he was the owner thereof and had a good property. By reason of these representations, and in order that she might more comfortably support her children—who were, respectively, aged nine, twelve, and fifteen—she was induced to be married. Aaron Witham died on the 5th of April, A. D. 1882, leaving no property, and I am entirely destitute and not able to do anything to support myself, having had a paralytic shock, and must become chargeable as a pauper unless I can have my pension restored. I therefore pray your honorable body for the passage of an act of Congress restoring me to the pension-list, and that I may be paid my pension from May 2, 1870. I am now fifty-two years of age.

SOPHRONIA + WITHAM.
mark.

LEBANON, December, 1883.

Witness:
WILLIAM EMERY.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID L. M'DERMOTT.

The bill (H. R. 5435) granting a pension to David L. McDermott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of David L. McDermott, late a private in Company K, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 19, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5435) granting a pension to David L. McDermott, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have considered the facts in this case, which are stated in the annexed report (House Report 1583), and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 1583, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5435) granting a pension to David L. McDermott, respectfully report:

David L. McDermott was enrolled on the 23d day of February, 1862, in Company K of the One hundred and seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged on the 7th day of June, 1862.

He claims a pension on the following basis: While a member of the organization aforesaid, in the service, and in the line of his duty, at Washington, D. C., on or about the 4th day of March, 1862, he was in the act of harnessing a mule and was kicked on the left leg above the ankle, causing a fracture of the said limb. That since he received the said injury several bones have come out of the leg, and it is now open and become a chronic sore, depriving him of the use of it, and having to use two crutches.

The Pension Office has notified claimant that his claim can not be further considered until certain evidence is furnished. As claimant can not possibly at this late day comply with the requirements of the Department, the claim stands almost a rejected one; hence his appeal to Congress.

The board of examining surgeons of Harrisburg, Pa., in report dated September 21, 1881, state:

"In our opinion the said applicant is total two grade incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from fracture of left leg caused by kick of mule. It is our opinion that the said disability did originate in the service in the line of duty, and the disability is permanent. At present the leg is one mass of disease, due to carious bone. The whole tibia seems to be involved, as the fistulous openings extend from knee to ankle-joint."

The assistant surgeon-general, United States Army, states "there are no records of the regiment named within on file in this office," in reply to the usual letter of inquiry from the Commissioner of Pensions.

As to the soldier having incurred the sore leg in the Army service, Adam Bloom, comrade, testifies:

"That he has been personally acquainted with claimant for about thirty-five years. That he enlisted with him in Company K, One hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; that he, in company with claimant, was detailed to post duty at Washington, D. C., in the capacity of driver or teamster; that on the morning of March 4, 1862, deponent and claimant, in the line of duty, were driving Government teams through the said city of Washington, D. C., and somewhere along Twenty-second street claimant was in the act of hitching up or harnessing a mule, to be substituted for one that was disabled in his team, and the mule becoming refractory and unmanageable kicked and knocked claimant down and trampled him in a frightful manner. Deponent, assisted by others, carried claimant back to his tent, and upon examination found his left leg badly bruised from the ankle to the knee. Two weeks after he saw claimant again in the hospital, in bed, unable to stir or walk. In June, 1862, deponent took soldier from hospital and hauled him home; he was still seriously disabled and totally unable to walk. He has frequently been with claimant since discharge, and knows that he (claimant) was always unable to do any hard physical labor by reason of his sore leg."

David Miller testifies to substantially the same as above quoted.

Thompson Anderson also testifies similarly.

From the evidence as above detailed it appears that this soldier received an injury to his leg while in line of duty; that this injury was of great severity at the time of its incurrence, and has continued ever since in an increasing degree. The board of examining surgeons state that the leg is in a very bad condition from the caries of the bone, portions of which are discharged from time to time, and eventually its amputation may become necessary. The case was delayed in the Pension Bureau for lack of evidence as to the incurrence of the injury as claimed. The claim was grossly neglected by reason of want of diligence on the part of the person having it in charge, otherwise it is clear that the soldier would have long since been in receipt of the pension to which it is the opinion of your committee he is justly entitled. The lacking evidence has been furnished this committee, duly certified to, as quoted above.

They therefore, deeming this to be a meritorious case, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH BROOKS.

The bill (H. R. 3645) granting a pension to Sarah Brooks was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah Brooks, mother of William Brooks, jr., deceased, late a private in Company D, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY BOLLMAN.

The bill (H. R. 3366) granting a pension to Henry Bollman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Henry Bollman, late of Company L, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and now a resident of Harwood, Wayne County, Iowa, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET LUCAS.

The bill (H. R. 6812) granting a pension to Margaret Lucas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Lucas, widow of Samuel Lucas, late a private in Company M, Second Regiment New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. CRAMBLETT.

The bill (H. R. 6000) granting a pension to George W. Cramblett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Cramblett, dependent father of John C. Cramblett, late of Company G, Ninety-seventh Ohio Volunteers.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is an adverse report. I wish to state that since it was made I have received information of the death of Mr. Cramblett, for whose relief the bill was introduced, and in justice to this aged man I wish to read the concluding paragraph of the report of the House committee, which is as follows:

Affidavit after affidavit has been filed from county officers and citizens of highest character, showing conclusively that the claimant was very poor at date of soldier's death, and has been so continually since; has been an object of charity much of the time; is now an inmate of the almshouse; is seventy-five years old. It is further clearly shown that he has always been a man of sobriety, of good habits and character. In view of all which, and the further fact that his first born, upon whom he had a right to expect to lean in his old age, was shot down while battling for his country's honor and preservation, your committee believe that the country should place him on its pension-roll as a dependent father, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Inasmuch as this old gentleman has passed beyond the relief proposed by this bill, I now move that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Was he in the Army?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The son was in the Army, and this bill is a bill for the relief of the dependent father.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

ELIZA M. FERRIS.

The bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza M. Ferris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Reuben D. Smart, administrator of Eliza M. Ferris, deceased, the sum of money to which she would have been entitled by pension-certificate 220860, which was not issued until four days after her death.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET A. POLAND.

The bill (H. R. 5154) granting a pension to Margaret A. Poland was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve," and after the word "month," in the same line, to strike out the following words:

and continue during the term of her natural life, and Alexander Poland having been killed by armed soldiers of the late Confederate States Government on that date, for feeding Union soldiers, furnishing supplies to the United States

Army, and because of his devotion to the Union, which pension shall be paid quarterly at the pension agency nearest to Washington, D. C., the arrears to be paid the date of the first quarterly payment of United States pensioners occurring after the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret A. Poland, widow of Alexander Poland, late of Leesburg, Loudoun County, State of Virginia, at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS A. WOLLENWEBER.

The bill (H. R. 6248) granting a pension to Louis A. Wollenweber was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Louis A. Wollenweber, father of Louis A. Wollenweber, deceased, late a private in Company K, Ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI L. TONGUE.

The bill (H. R. 7437) to increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Levi L. Tongue, late a private in Company I of the Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, to $20 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPENCER W. TRYON.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARGARET A. JACOBY.

The bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Jacoby was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret A. Jacoby, widow of Sandford Jacoby, late of Company F, Seventieth New York Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not show the rank the soldier held. It says "late of Company F." Was he an officer or a private? I think the report had better be read to let us see whether that is correct in point of form.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER on the 25th of May, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret A. Jacoby, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"That Sandford Jacoby, the husband of the claimant, enlisted April 20, 1861, in Company F, Seventieth Regiment New York Volunteers, and was discharged July 1, 1864. The soldier's claim for pension was submitted for admission December 1, 1884, and approved for total deafness and chronic diarrhea, granting him a pension for $5 per month, commencing July 1, 1864, and ending September 7, 1875, date of soldier's disappearance. The widow's application was filed July 17, 1885, and rejected by the Department August 6, 1885, upon the ground that fact, date, and cause of soldier's death not shown, and inability of applicant to furnish the necessary proof.

"The basis of the claim is that while the soldier was engaged in the battle of Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, 1863, by reason of concussion from discharge of artillery, he was rendered almost totally deaf, and also contracted chronic diarrhea, by reason of which he was totally disabled for military duty; that he never recovered, but has been totally deaf in right ear ever since, and afflicted with chronic diarrhea.

"Claimant testifies that when her husband returned from the Army in 1864 he was suffering from chronic diarrhea and deafness contracted while in the service; that while residing with deponent at Greene, Chenango County, New York, on or about the 7th day of September, 1875, he left and has never been heard from since; that she made diligent search and inquiry for him, and that she has been unable to ascertain or learn anything about him, and that she verily believes he is now deceased; that he had been sick for a week before he left and had done no work; that he was despondent by reason of his said disabilities and did not seem to be in his right mind; that he was not then able to support deponent, and that she has not received any support from him since.

"Dr. Charles M. Lawrence, of Port Jervis, N. Y., testifies that he treated soldier upon his discharge and return from the Army for chronic diarrhea and deafness, and has treated him at frequent intervals for said disabilities up to 1873, when he removed to Greene, Chenango County, New York, and that said diseases were likely to prove fatal.

"Dr. Marcus M. Wood, of Greene, Chenango County, New York, testifies that he treated soldier for deafness and chronic diarrhea at intervals from 1873 to 1875, and that the diarrhea laid him up about half the time until the summer of 1875, when he left town. He was then suffering from both of those disabilities, which probably have proven fatal before this date (August 20, 1883). Have no doubt that his complaints were caused by exposure while in the service.

"Jane Brown testifies that she is a sister of soldier's wife; has always lived near her said sister during her residence at Port Jervis, N. Y., which has been continuous since her marriage, except for six or seven years, when she lived at Greene, Chenango County, New York, during which time she was deserted by her husband, and since that time her sister has resided at Port Jervis, N. Y.

"Adela Cunningham, Murates Beach, Henry P. Bates, and Lucius P. Clark all testify that the said Sanford Jacoby disappeared in 1875, and have never seen him since.

"The decision of the Secretary of the Interior, regarding the presumption of death, is as follows:

"'That cases arise in which it is impossible to obtain positive proof of the soldier's death, but the presumption of his death from causes connected with the service is so strong as to justify the allowance of a claim for pension made on behalf of his widow, children, or dependent relatives.

"'The presumption of common law is that a person who has been absent and not been heard from for seven years is dead. The presumption may properly be accepted under the pension law, and if, when last heard from, soldier was suffering from serious disease contracted or injury received in the line of duty in the service, it may be presumed that his death occurred from such cause if there is nothing in the circumstances to rebut such presumption.'

"Your committee are of the belief that the proofs, with the fact that the soldier has not been paid his pension since the date of his disappearance, justify the presumption that the soldier is dead, and that his death was the result of disease contracted while in service in the line of duty, and recommend that the bill do pass."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ought not the bill to state that he was a private?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will not hurt it, but it is not very material.

Mr. BLAIR. He is described expressly by his company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But there may be a technical difficulty very possibly.

Mr. COCKRELL. He will be taken to be a private unless specified as an officer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the statement of the Senator from Missouri that that is the law, of course I have no observation to make. It is rather a loose way of doing the thing, I think.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The rank of a soldier is determined by the papers on file in the Pension Office. Of course those will be examined by the Commissioner of Pensions in determining what pension to grant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But in all those bills, rightly, as I suppose, it is stated, except in this one, what rank the person held. Here is one that does not state what rank he held.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not believe there is any doubt about the law. Unless the papers show to the contrary he will be taken to be a private or a non-commissioned officer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose he happened to be a captain?

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the papers will have to show that in the office before he will get the pension.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The discharge or muster-out will show that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course the papers would show; but then that would go to prove that all these provisions in the special laws which describe the status of the person are entirely unnecessary and we might in those bills merely say, "You are to put this person," of such a regiment, in order to identify who he was, "on the pension-roll."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This is not an unusual form, however.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is from my listening here during the day.

Mr. TELLER. "Subject to the limitations of the pension laws" is all that is necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then there is a good deal that is unnecessary in describing what the person was in all these bills.

Mr. TELLER. That is for the purpose of identity only; there can be no other purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yielding to the Senators who know so much more about it, I make no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCY G. DUTCHER.

The bill (H. R. 6430) granting a pension to Lucy G. Dutcher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucy G. Dutcher, widow of Nathaniel Dutcher, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ADALINE P. LOY.

The bill (S. 2479) granting a pension to Mrs. Adaline P. Loy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Adaline P. Loy, widow of Joseph F. Loy, late captain of Company H, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA WILKINS.

The bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Eliza Wilkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza Wilkins, widow of Orrin Wilkins, late a private in Company A, First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIDNEY DENTON.

The bill (S. 2420) granting a pension to Sidney Denton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sidney Denton, late a private in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN G. WARREN.

The bill (S. 2391) granting a pension to John G. Warren was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John G. Warren, late a private in the Eighth Regiment Wisconsin Light Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALONZO RAYMOND.

The bill (S. 2388) granting a pension to Alonzo Raymond was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alonzo Raymond, father of Platt Green Raymond, late a private in Company E, Fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH GARAGHTY.

The bill (S. 2366) granting a pension to Elizabeth Garaghty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Garaghty, widow of Michael Garaghty, late of Company A, Forty-fourth Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARCEL GAGNON.

The bill (S. 2363) granting a pension to Marcel Gagnon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Marcel Gagnon, late of Company A, Hatch's battalion Minnesota cavalry, at the rate of $10 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH C. WRIGHT.

The bill (S. 1614) granting a pension to Sarah C. Wright was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah C. Wright, widow of John W. Wright, late of Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Enrolled Militia of Missouri, and who was pensioned by special act of Congress approved January 31, 1885.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. HILDRETH.

The bill (H. R. 4124) granting a pension to Charles F. Hildreth was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles F. Hildreth, late surgeon of the Fortieth Massachusetts Regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA A. BIRNEY.

The bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Antionette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported to amend the bill, in line 4, by striking out the name "Antionette" and inserting "Maria A.;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Maria A. Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, from $30 to $50 a month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the pension of Maria A. Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney."

JOHN WINES.

The bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to John Wines was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Wines, father of Rufus H. Wines, late a private in Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA M'ILWAIN.

The bill (H. R. 7162) granting a pension to Martha McIlwain was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha McIlwain, widow of Robert J. McIlwain, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like the Senator from New Hampshire to state what the term "Pennsylvania Reserves" means. Does it seem to imply necessarily that these people were in the war? I dare say they were in fact; but for the benefit of the record I should like to have the Senator state about that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Pennsylvania Reserves were among the best drilled and bravest and most efficient of the troops on the Union side in the late war. They participated with great distinction in the battle of Gettysburg.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Were they United States troops, or only State troops?

Mr. BLAIR. They went by that name, but they were in the service of the United States. I do not know but they may properly be said to have been the crack troops of Pennsylvania.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS A. ROWLEY.

The bill (H. R. 6250) to increase the pension of Thomas A. Rowley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Thomas A. Rowley, late a brigadier-general of volunteers, shall be entitled to receive an increase of pension of $10 per month in addition to the allowance heretofore paid to him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much was the previous allowance? Let us hear the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 26, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6250) granting a pension to Thomas A. Rowley, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the report of the House is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"Thomas A. Rowley was colonel of the One hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; promoted to be brigadier-general. He is now in receipt of $15 per month for injuries received at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., which disabilities are described as follows by the examining surgeons:

"'There is a cicatrix 1 inch to the left of crest of occipital bone over inferior curved line. The cicatrix is tender, with considerable thickening of periosteum. He complains of pain radiating from cicatrix over left side of head. He states that seven pieces of bone have been removed and discharged from site of wound. He also states that since receipt of injury he has had frequent attacks of hemicrania. We think the present rating too low—disability one-half.'

"General Rowley's disabilities have very considerably increased since the above examination. He is now seventy-seven years of age, is partially paralyzed, and in indigent circumstances.

"Your committee, considering the serious nature of the wound received in the battle, his helpless condition at present time, which is clearly shown, together with his extreme age and poverty, recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REBECCA ROBERTS.

The bill (H. R. 8111) granting a pension to Rebecca Roberts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rebecca Roberts, widow of Clark Roberts, who was lately surgeon of the One hundred and first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the rate provided by the pension laws for widows of surgeons in volunteer regiments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

K. G. BILLINGS.

The bill (H. R. 2242) restoring to the pension-roll the name of K. G. Billings was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of K. G. Billings, of Lancaster County, South Carolina, formerly a soldier in the Mexican war.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report. What is the trouble about that Mexican veteran?

Mr. BLAIR. There is no trouble about it. We are restoring him, putting him on the roll again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 26, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2242) granting a pension to K. G. Billings, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Kennedy G. Billings, asking to be restored to the pension-rolls, and for back pension, submit the following report:

"The committee, after examination, find that at the outbreak of the war with Mexico Kennedy G. Billings enlisted as a lieutenant in Captain Cantey's company of the regiment of South Carolina volunteers, and served with distinction during that entire war, and, as is shown by the affidavit of T. J. Mackey, filed in this case, he fought with great bravery, doing honor to himself and his country, and at the time when his company became reduced, by casualties in battle, from one hundred and fifteen to but nine or ten men fit for duty, he voluntarily entered the ranks with a musket and fought at the battles of Chapultepec and at the Garita de Belen in the capacity of a private soldier.

"That on the 10th day of January, 1854, a pension was granted said Billings for services rendered his country in said war, at the rate of $17 per month, payable semi-annually on the 4th of March and the 4th of September, at the Charleston agency. That the pension so granted him was paid regularly up to the 4th day of September, 1860, when, without assigning any reason, the agent declined to pay him anything more, and he has received no payment on account of said pension since said last-mentioned date.

"Your committee are of the opinion that said Billings should be restored to the pension-rolls at the rate of $17 per month, and to that end report the accompanying bill, with recommendation that it do pass."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that bill read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would that bill as it stands give this person an allowance for the twenty-five years or over that have passed since he got his pay? And perhaps the acting chairman of the committee can tell us what this person was engaged about during the four years from 1861 to 1865. We ought to deal fairly with all these cases and all alike upon some fair principle. If the present state of the law is as I suppose—I do not at this moment remember, though I think it is—that those who were on the pension-roll and went into the rebellion lost their right to a pension, to take out this particular person would be invidious. I do not say whether I would not vote to restore all, beginning from now, for their old services; but that is quite another question. To take out this particular person and put him on the pension-roll and leave everybody else off would seem to require some explanation. I would like to hear from my friend from New Hampshire on this point.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that that case be passed over informally. I am anxious to get through with the rest of the pension bills to-day. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] reported the case, and is more familiar with it than I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LYDIA HADLOCK.

The bill (H. R. 1142) granting a pension to Lydia Hadlock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lydia Hadlock, of Lexington, Mass., widow of Colburn Hadlock, who served three months in the war of 1812.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out, beginning in line 5, the words "act of Congress approved March 9, 1878 (twentieth Statutes at Large, page 27)," and then, after the words "widow of Colburn Hadlock," to strike out the words "who served three months in the war of 1812," and say, "widow of Colburn Hadlock, late a soldier of the war of 1812."

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that point I should like to hear the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask to have the bill read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read, and the report.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri what is his objection to the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. We never pass a bill referring to any special act which is the law. This says, according to a certain act. There is no necessity for that, for the act named is a general pension law. Then it says "who served three months in the war of 1812." This man never was an enlisted soldier, but was a teamster, and the record shows that. Let the report be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I asked to have the report read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The report also shows that he discharged the duties of a soldier in the artillery.

Mr. HOAR. I know this old lady very well. She lives in Lexington, Mass., now, and lived formerly in the town where I was born, Concord. I was not aware of this application; it has come through somebody else than me; but I know very well that Mr. Hadlock received a bounty as a soldier.

Mr. COCKRELL. A land-warrant?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; a land-warrant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 26, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1142) granting a pension to Lydia Hadlock, have examined the same, and report:

That an examination of the proofs in this case satisfies the committee that the House report is correct. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"Lydia Hadlock, ninety-two years of age, is the widow of Colburn Hadlock, who served in the war of 1812, and whose name was carried on the rolls as a teamster. He served less than a year, but during his time of service was attached to the artillery, and performed his duties as other soldiers did to the close of the war. He received a land-warrant, as appears from the records of the Interior Department.

"In view of these facts of actual service as a soldier your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This is a House bill; and while its recitals may be somewhat unusual, yet it seems to me they are not sufficiently so to justify an amendment and sending the bill back to the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw my motion to amend.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The lady can get a pension under this bill as well as under any other form.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am inclined to think on looking at the act referred to in the House bill that it is wise and necessary to have it in, because it is by force of that act and not the general pension laws that this pension can be defined.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a general pension law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is possibly, but I think the House were rather wise in putting it in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA A. PROBERT.

The bill (H. R. 7703) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna A. Probert, widow of George C. Probert, late a first lieutenant in the Third Ohio Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLARK BOON.

The bill (H. R. 7931) increasing the pension of Clark Boon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Clark Boon, late a member of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, to $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID M. RENNOE.

The bill (H. R. 7914) to increase the pension of David M. Rennoe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of David M. Rennoe, late a private in Company H of the Twenty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, to $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now received.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN D. MEAD.

It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John H. Westerhouse, late of Company F, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade (Thirteenth) Maryland Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED M. OWEN'S CHILDREN.

The bill (H. R. 4689) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen and to increase their pensions was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow to Alfred C. Owen, Christine Q. Owen, Kathleen D. B. Owen, and Albert T. Owen, minor children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen, United States Navy, a pension of $15 each per month, to continue until each child shall respectively attain the age of sixteen years, in lieu of the pension now paid them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 1, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4689) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen, and to increase their pensions, have examined the same and report:

Your committee have carefully considered the facts of this case, and concur in the annexed report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions (House Report No. 934) and recommend the passage of the bill.

The naval career of the deceased officer, which began in May, 1869, was one of exceptional credit, and was made conspicuous by an unusually wide range of duties by sea and land. From his entry into the service until his death he was constantly employed, exercising professional attainments of a very high order, and that he dignified every duty assigned him by the zeal, courage, fidelity, and intelligence displayed in its execution is the testimony of all who knew him.

He was always conscientious, earnest, skillful, kind, and courteous, commanding thereby the affection and confidence of the sick, and the respect and admiration of his superiors.

In February, 1882, he reported for duty at the navy-yard, Pensacola, and a few months later was combating the much-dreaded yellow fever. By his judicious sanitary provisions and personal force and courage he established a cordon of environment which preserved the naval station from the plague which devastated the neighboring city. At the height of the epidemic, when the physicians of Pensacola had been cut off by the fell disease, he bravely volunteered to go into the city to attend the afflicted.

In the following summer (1883) he was without medical assistance, performing the quadruple duty of surgeon of the navy-yard, surgeon of the naval hospital, surgeon of the reservation, and quarantine officer of the lower bay.

A return of the fever was looked for. Every officer who could be spared was permitted to leave, and this brave officer could have been detached upon application, but he scorned the thought.

August 14, 1883, the fever reappeared. Overexertion and exposure to the sun had caused Surgeon Owen a partial sunstroke in July, and while yet suffering from this, he was, on August 16, himself seized with the fever. For two days there was no one on land to treat the hero, and on the 22d he died. His faithful wife was untiring in her efforts at his bedside, and within a day or so after his death she was stricken with the same disease; at midnight of the 29th she was buried by his side.

They left behind them four children, between the ages of three months and eight years, each of whom and their nurse also had the fever.

The committee therefore recommend that the amounts named in the bill be allowed to the four children of the deceased.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senate has passed a bill allowing $100 instead of $60. This is the House bill. The Senate bill has been held in the House committee, and I now move that the House be requested to return the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered unless objection be made.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does not this bill mean that if a man served in the Army and did not die and did not get killed and did not get wounded, and if after the war he died of yellow fever we will pension his family? Does not the bill mean just that and nothing else?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no bill before the Senate. The Secretary will read the next bill.

MARY A. VAN ETTEN.

The bill (H. R. 6170) granting a pension to Mary A. Van Etten was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Van Etten, widow of James F. Van Etten, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 4552) for the relief of Susan Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Susan Smith, widow of Michael Smith, late first lieutenant of Company I, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. D. HOBBS.

The bill (S. 2463) granting a pension to H. D. Hobbs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of H. D. Hobbs, late a private in Company G, Second Regiment District of Columbia Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISE PAUL.

The bill (S. 2502) granting a pension to Louise Paul was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Louise Paul, widow of Brig. Gen. Gabriel R. Paul, deceased, late of the United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCY E. ANDERSON.

The bill (S. 2301) granting a pension to Lucy E. Anderson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the committee with an amendment, which was, in line 7, after the word "Anderson," to insert:

Late first lieutenant and adjutant Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, afterward captain, and appointed major of volunteers by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the campaign terminating in the capture of Petersburg and the surrender of the insurgent army of Northern Virginia.

So that the bill as amended will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitation of the pension laws, the name of Lucy E. Anderson, widow of Maj. William A. Anderson, late first lieutenant and adjutant Twentieth Indiana Volunteers, afterward captain, and appointed major of volunteers by brevet for gallant and meritorious services in the campaign terminating in the capture of Petersburg and the surrender of the insurgent army of Northern Virginia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HORACE W. BROWNELL.

The bill (S. 2570) granting a pension to Horace W. Brownell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Horace W. Brownell, late a second lieutenant in the Sixth Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY HOWARD FARQUHAR.

The bill (H. R. 1201) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar was considered as in committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Howard Farquhar, widow of the late Maj. and Bvt. Lieut. Col. Francis V. Farquhar, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and daughter of the late Maj. Gen. Alpheus S. Williams, United States volunteers, at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. CLARK.

The bill (H. R. 4386) granting an increase of pension to William F. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William F. Clark, formerly of the First Connecticut Cavalry, at the rate of $45 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET LUCY.

The bill (H. R. 7511) granting a pension to Margaret Lucy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Lucy, dependent mother of George W. Lucy, late a private in Company G, Nineteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELVIRA BLISS SHELDON.

The bill (S. 2029) granting an increase of pension to Elvira Bliss Sheldon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "of," to strike out the word "forty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elvira Bliss Sheldon, an ex-Army nurse and widow of Joel S. Sheldon, late a commissary and lieutenant of volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the pension bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I respectfully move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 7, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 5, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL CLERK IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the disbursing clerk of the Department recommending that provision be made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for an additional clerk in his office for the next fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BURLEIGH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. FLEEGER, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FREDERICK, for ten days, on account of important business.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask by unanimous consent to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 206) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Zanesville, Ohio, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Zanesville, in the State of Ohio, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue office, pension office, and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $150,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 50 feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Ohio shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRISON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Is it usual to put the appropriation in bills of this kind?

Mr. WILKINS. It has been done on very many occasions, and on most of the bills that have passed this House. I am quite willing the appropriation should be stricken out if the gentleman from Illinois desires it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the whole appropriation made?

Mr. WILKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I propose to strike out $50,000, and limit the amount to $100,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the understanding that it will not be hereafter increased?

Mr. WILKINS. Certainly. That clause is in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILKINS. I move to amend by striking out "$150,000" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask by unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 763), and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, internal-revenue office, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Sioux City, Iowa. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less that 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Iowa shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein. For the purposes of this act the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommended the following amendment:

Insert in the twelfth line, after the word "dollars," the following:

"Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STRUBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of standing and select committees.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will withdraw the call for the regular order for a moment to enable me to call up a bill. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is the call for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] asks unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill indicated by him. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair will proceed to call the standing and select committees.

BRIDGE NEAR CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SECTION 4887 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ATKINSON, from the Committee on Patents, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3656, a bill (H. R. 9128) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 3656) was laid on the table.

SAMUEL SAWYER.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4028) granting a pension to Samuel Sawyer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA WISWELL.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported a bill (H. R. 9129) granting a pension to Rebecca Wiswell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JANE D. MUMFORD.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1184) granting a pension to Jane D. Mumford; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GRACE F. EDES.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the bill (S. 2144) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes; which, on motion of Mr. RANDALL, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE BLISS.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the bill (S. 1783) granting an increase of pension to George Bliss; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH O'BRIEN.

Mr. PINDAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. 9130) granting a pension to Sarah O'Brien; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. PINDAR, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8838) granting a pension to Louise Paul; and also of the bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech; and the same were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WILLIAM H. RANDLE.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5111) for the relief of William H. Randle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. Res. 7, a joint resolution (H. Res. 179) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made; also, in relation to the claim of William E. Woodbridge, based upon the plea of alleged priority in this line of invention; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original joint resolution (H. Res. 7) was laid on the table.

DAVIDSON DICKSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. SMALLS, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 290) for the relief of Davidson Dickson and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of standing and select committees was concluded, no further reports being presented.

SEMON BACHE & CO.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask consent to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations touching an item in the Book of Estimates, of which the committee desire some other of the standing committees should have jurisdiction by authority of the House. I desire to submit by instructions of the Committee on Appropriations the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the consideration of an item in the Book of Estimates for 1887, page 205:

"To refund the duty paid by Semon Bache & Co., of New York, upon glass from imported stock furnished to the National Museum and the New Orleans, Louisville, and Cincinnati expositions for exhibition cases, $3,562.56."

And that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not clear whether this might not properly go to the Committee on Ways and Means——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, except by unanimous consent. It appears to be a claim against the United States; and although it may have arisen out of the administration of the revenue laws, yet under the amended rules of the House all claims of every character, unless unanimous consent be given for some other reference, must go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RANDALL. That was the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act; asked a conference with the House upon the amendments to said bill; and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. VAN WYCK, and Mr. WALTHALL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment. On behalf of the Committee on Public Lands, I desire to ask the House to consider a Senate bill reported from that committee and now on the Calendar.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up and put on its passage at this time the bill (S. 149) forfeiting a part of certain lands granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads in that State, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

Mr. STRAIT and others called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. STRUBLE. Has not the Committee on Public Lands the right of way, and may it not call up that bill at the present time?

The SPEAKER. That right would not operate until after the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now renew my motion.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. By order of the House the business of the Committee on Pacific Railroads is made a special order for to-day. I wish to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who has just proposed to bring up the legislative appropriation bill at this time, that there is a very important bill reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads which we would like to have considered to-day; and I think we can get through with it in an hour or two. Indeed, I think we can get through to-day with all the bills reported from our committee. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will consent to give way for the consideration of this business.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is necessary, as the gentleman knows, that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill should become a law before the 1st of July; and the Committee on Appropriations would hardly feel justified in taking the responsibility of further delay in the consideration of that bill. Otherwise, of course, I would not hesitate a moment to accede to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana. Would not the gentleman be satisfied to allow us an hour or an hour and a half for the consideration of our business, if we consent to yield the remainder of the day?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the appropriation bill will necessarily give rise to some general debate; and it would be impossible for me, as a representative of the Committee on Appropriations, to enter into any engagement of that character. I would be very glad to do so if I could.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Then I will inquire of the Chair whether it is not in order for us to antagonize the consideration of the legislative bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that if the House should refuse to agree to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana it will be in order, after an hour has been occupied in the consideration of bills reported from committees, to consider special orders, but not until then. The special order which the gentleman from Texas desires to bring up and the special order in which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] is interested are both operative only after the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will indulge me for a moment, I desire to say to gentlemen sitting about me who may not have heard the discussion upon the other side, that this matter of the consideration of the legislative bill was referred to in the Committee on Appropriations to-day; and I believe, from the expression there made, there was a very general feeling in that committee that the application for the consideration of that bill to-day should be merely to throw upon the House the responsibility of determining what business it would consider, the committee or most of its members I think feeling that this day is perhaps the only day that the Committee on Pacific Railroads will have, and recognizing the fact that the bill which the gentleman from Texas desires to bring up, whatever its merits, of which I express no opinion at this time, may involve to the Government over $100,000,000.

And they felt that perhaps this should be submitted to the House, so that it could use its own determination touching the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wish to say that I am not permitted, of course, to state what transpired in the Committee on Appropriations, but I have no doubt my friend from Illinois has expressed in some degree the views of the various members.

Every gentleman can see for himself the propriety of the passage of this bill before the 1st of July, since if not passed before that time, and the fiscal year then expiring, it becomes necessary to extend into the next year a law of the same character; and all gentleman understand the objections and inconvenience of that arrangement.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Concerning the understanding of the Committee on Appropriations, or some members of that committee, and the members of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, I desire to state if the House does not take up the appropriation bill, that under the order of May 17, giving the Committee on Labor the 3d of June and all days succeeding until the business of that committee is disposed of, I will endeavor to call up the reports from that committee, as I believe it is a prior order to the order for the Pacific railroads business.

Mr. RANDALL. The order provides that this shall be a continuing order, whereas the business of the Committee on the Pacific Railroads is confined to this day only, as I recollect it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No; the Committee on Pacific Railroads has a continuing order until two days shall have been consumed. Our order provides that it shall continue until all our bills are disposed of.

Mr. CRISP. If the House will indulge me a moment, the Committee on Appropriations, if they do not succeed in getting up their bill to-day, can do so on the next legislative day. To vote down the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole involves to them the loss of one day, and one day only. To vote down the proposition to consider the special order assigned for to-day involves, I may say, the failure, the absolute failure, to consider the question of the adjustment of this great indebtedness of $125,000,000 due by the railroads to the Government. On the question submitted by the gentleman from Missouri I would say to the House that by the terms of the order for the consideration of his business it is not to interfere with prior orders. The gentleman conceives that the priority there referred to means priority of assignment. I respectfully submit to him that it means priority in the time of obtaining the order. For instance, when the gentleman obtained his order ours had been already obtained; and when he, by the terms of his order, said we will not interfere with prior orders, it was exactly the same as if he had said in terms he would not interfere or seek to interfere with the order granted by the House to our committee.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am perfectly willing to leave the determination of that question to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. CRISP. I therefore ask that this day be devoted to the consideration of business of the Pacific Railroads Committee, so that the House may act promptly upon this important question which they present.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable except by unanimous consent, and the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. RANDALL. So much time is lost in debate on the order of business that we will save time by coming to a vote.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if it would be in order for the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads to move to postpone to a given day the consideration of bills to be called up by that committee?

The SPEAKER. That can be done by a vote of the majority whenever the bills are taken up and are under consideration before the House. It can only be done by unanimous consent at any other time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask if this is not a continuing order?

The SPEAKER. The Calendar shows that both are continuing orders, one until all of the bills are disposed of and the other until two days have been occupied.

Mr. SPRINGER. I respectfully submit to the House that this Pacific Railroad matter is one covering a period of seventy years, and there is no necessity for such extraordinary haste in its consideration, whereas the legislative bill must be passed by both Houses within twenty-six days from this time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, there were on a division—ayes 51, noes 67.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. THROCKMORTON were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 99.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the point that no quorum has voted.

So (no further count being demanded,) the motion of Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees, which begins at five minutes to 12 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a question of order. By the terms of the order assigning to-day for the Committee on Pacific Railroads the second hour was expressly excluded. The question was raised, if the Chair will recollect, at the time as to what was meant by the word "hours" as used in the resolution. The resolution used the term "hours" instead of hour. It expressly declared, and reference to the RECORD will show it, that the second hour was excluded altogether, and this business was to be taken up immediately after the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Georgia is correct in the statement he has just made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers something occurred about the use of the word "hour," and will cause the RECORD to be examined.

Mr. STEELE. As some members of the Committee on Military Affairs are absent on public business, I shall ask that the hour for the consideration of bills be not used to-day.

The SPEAKER. On examination of the engrossed copy of the order it appears that the letter "s" was stricken out of the word "hours," so that the meaning of the resolution is that this day, after the morning hour, is set apart for consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the special order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise for a question of information. Under the special order adopted May 17 it was

Resolved, That Thursday, the 3d day of June, 1886, after the hour for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on Labor; this order not to interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills, bills reported from the Committee on Public Lands, or prior orders; and whether so interfered with on that day or not, shall be a continuing order as above until the bills presented by said committee shall be disposed of.

I ask if that does not constitute a prior order for the Committee on Labor over the Committee on Pacific Railroads?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in response to the gentleman from Missouri that it is not necessary now for the Chair to decide which of these special orders shall have priority over the other. In case they had both been fixed for consideration after the hour for consideration of bills that question would have arisen. But with the amendment made by the House to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] setting apart this day, immediately after the morning hour, for the consideration of measures reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads that order takes effect before the hour for the consideration of bills reported by the committee, whereas the order made on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri in any state of the case could only take effect after the hour for the consideration of bills, and that hour has not yet been used. The gentleman from Georgia calls up, as he has a right to do under the amended order, at this time the measures reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask the attention of the Chair to the special order, which is a continuing order, not to interfere with revenue or general appropriation bills, setting apart the 6th of May, 1886, for the consideration of Senate bill No. 9, to provide for and regulate the electoral count. I want to know if that order has not priority; if it is not a prior order to that setting apart to-day for business of the Committee on Pacific Railroads. Have I the right to call up that order now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the order to which the gentleman from Tennessee alludes would have priority over certain other special orders. But this day, the 5th of June, is specifically set apart in terms by order of the House for the consideration of certain business reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads. Besides, the order alluded to by the gentleman from Tennessee does not take effect until after the hour for the consideration of bills. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] calls for consideration under the special order——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Is it in order to raise the question of consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is always in the power of the House to raise the question of consideration against each bill as it is called.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I raise the question of consideration, my purpose being to call up measures reported by the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Cleark read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8318) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri raises the question of consideration against this bill. Is the reading of the bill demanded before the question is put on consideration? If not, the question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read?

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 31.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. HENLEY. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] will take his place as a teller.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 41.

So the House determined to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the payment of the respective indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, to which companies the subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in aid of the Pacific railroads and branches, be authorized and required upon the terms and conditions and in the manner hereinafter provided, so that the average date of maturity of the installments in which said debts shall be arranged to be paid shall be October 1, 1921; and the payments to be made by said companies, respectively, shall be computed and ascertained as follows by the Secretary of the Treasury:

First. To the sums of the principal of said subsidy bonds attributable to each of said companies shall be added the interest paid or to be paid by the United States upon the same (so as to ascertain the total amounts that would have been due the United States for principal and interest paid on the bonds issued to each of said companies, at their maturity, if no payments or reimbursements had been made thereon by the companies).

Second. From said amounts so ascertained shall be deducted any payments or reimbursements made by any of said companies upon their indebtedness at any time before the 1st day of October, 1886; and also the amounts in the sinking fund properly applicable to the respective companies (computing the value of any bonds in such sinking fund at their market value, at a day to be agreed upon by the presidents of the companies interested therein and the Secretary of the Treasury), and simple interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum upon said amounts in the sinking fund, from such day agreed upon until the average date of the maturity of the subsidy bonds.

Third. Upon the remainder thus found shall be computed simple interest at 3½ per cent. per annum from the average date of maturity of the subsidy bonds until the 1st day of October, A. D. 1921, which interest shall be added to said remainder, and the amount so obtained shall be divided into one hundred and forty equal parts, one of which equal parts shall be due and payable April 1, 1887, and an additional one at the end of each six months thereafter until the whole one hundred and forty shall have been paid. That is to say, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and its successors, shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, when the same shall become due and payable as aforesaid, these installments of the indebtedness of itself and the Western Pacific Railroad Company; the Union Pacific Railway Company (successor to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company) and its successors, shall pay those of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Kansas and Pacific Railroad Company; the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and its successors, shall pay those of itself; and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and its successors, those of itself.

SEC. 2. That the statutory lien and security created and subsisting under and by virtue of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, and the act of July 2, 1864, and the act of May 7, 1878, to secure the repayment of said subsidy bonds and the interest thereon, as set forth in said acts, and upon all the property therein subjected to said statutory lien and security, shall be and remain as security for the payment of the said installments of said indebtedness; and in addition thereto, and as a further security for the prompt payment of all sums required to be paid into the Treasury of the United States under this act, upon the acceptance of this act as hereinafter provided, by any of said companies, all the installments of the indebtedness of said company are hereby declared to become and be a lien on any stocks, bonds, or securities of every kind or description, and on all railroads now owned or hereafter constructed or acquired by such compeny, wherever the same may be situated, and all their franchises, telegraph lines, their rolling-stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description, as well as that which it, its successors or assigns, may hereafter acquire, subject to any bona fide lawfully prior and paramount lien, claim, or mortgage upon any railroads now owned by such company, or upon any railroad which such company may acquire. But this section shall not be construed to prevent said companies, respectively, from using and disposing of any of their property or assets in the ordinary, proper, and lawful course of their current business, in good faith and for valuable consideration, and not in violation or diminution of the security and lien of the Government: Provided, That every such disposition of any stocks, bonds, or other securities owned by either of said companies, whether by sale, pledge, or otherwise, shall be reported to the Secretary of the Treasury by the company making the same, within thirty days after such disposition has been made: And provided further, That any of said companies shall be permitted to extend the payment of or refund any balance of its indebtedness authorized by the tenth section of the act approved July 2, 1864, which it may be unable to pay when the same shall become due according to the terms of said section, at a lower rate of interest than it now bears (not to exceed 4 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually); and the lien of the United States shall continue to be subordinate to that of the extended payments or refunding bonds of any or either of said companies which shall so extend or refund, on that property only of said company upon which the original lien was permitted by said section of said act. Any or either of said companies so entitled to extend or refund such balance of said indebtedness may issue their new first-mortgage bonds on the original property only, and shall establish, and sustain by semi-annual deposits therein, a sinking fund amply sufficient to pay off and discharge said new first-mortgage bonds at their maturity, and shall promptly pay the interest upon such new first-mortgage bonds.

SEC. 3. That to the said several companies, or any of them, accepting this act, or any of their successors or assigns, no money shall thereafter be paid from the United States Treasury for or on account of services rendered to the United States, or any Department of the Government thereof, over or upon the said railroad and telegraph line so aided by the advances of subsidy bonds, or upon any railroads or telegraph lines owned, leased, or operated by said company, until the installment next maturing after such services are rendered shall be fully paid as herein provided; but the obligation to pay said installments so to be paid to the United States by said companies, and the obligation of the United States to pay for services, shall be deemed otherwise independent: Provided, That no dividends shall be paid by any of said companies unless the same shall have been actually earned, nor unless said company shall have paid to the United States the amount of all matured indebtedness then due and payable under this act, and shall also have paid all debts and interest which have previously matured, which are secured by a lien paramount to that of the United States, except in so far as said debt shall have been extended or refunded according to the second section of this act.

SEC. 4. That so long as each and every of said companies, their successors and assigns, shall keep their said railroads and telegraph lines in proper repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph lines, and transport mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies of public stores, and Government property upon said railroads, for the Government, or any Department thereof, whenever required to do so (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the lowest rates paid by any private party for the same kind of service, and subject to and bound by the provisions of any act of Congress, and the authority exercised thereunder, relating to postal, military, or any other Government transportation, applicable alike to other railway or railroad companies), and shall give the Government preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, as mentioned in the sixth section of the act of July 1, 1862, and all acts amendatory of said act, and shall make punctual payment of the said installments of their indebtedness, and of any debt and interest secured by a lien paramount to that of the United States, no other or further sums shall be demanded or required of the company, its successors or assigns, so performing said service and complying with this act. Each of said companies, its successors and assigns, shall also in each year expend whatever sums are necessary to maintain its railroad, rolling-stock, equipments, and operating property of every description in as good condition as the same now are, and in all respects in proper condition to do its business.

SEC. 5. That a failure for six months to pay any of said installments, as the same shall become due and payable, as hereinbefore provided, shall be deemed, taken, and held to make all the said installments due and payable; and all the rights and securities of the United States shall be thereupon enforced.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect, as to the said companies and their branches, respectively, as hereinbefore described, upon its acceptance by their boards of directors and under their corporate seals, signed by their presidents and countersigned by their secretaries, respectively, being filed or deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury within three months from the passage of this act; but if such acceptance be not so filed, said companies shall take no benefit therefrom. Upon said acceptance being filed, and the settlement in this act provided for being completed, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to sell any securities held in the sinking fund for said companies; any excess realized from such sale above the value of said securities, as estimated under the first section of this act, to be credited to the company to whose sinking fund said securities belonged, as a payment upon its next maturing installment, and any deficiency below such value to be paid by said company upon demand made by the Secretary of the Treasury after such sale; and said settlement shall be completed on or before the 1st day of April, A. D. 1887. And at the time of said acceptance, and as a part thereof, each of said companies shall also file with the Secretary of the Treasury a full and complete list and description of all the railroads and telegraph lines, of all stocks, bonds, and securities of every kind, and of all property whatsoever to become and be subject to the lien of the United States hereinbefore provided for. Said lists and descriptions shall be given by their boards of directors and under their corporate seals, signed by their presidents and countersigned by their secretaries. But such lists and descriptions shall not be held to be conclusive against the United States as to any matter or thing omitted therefrom which ought to be included therein.

SEC. 7. That the acceptance of this act shall be deemed and held to be an acceptance of the act approved May 7, 1878, entitled "An act to alter and amend the act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-mentioned act."

SEC. 8. That if any of said companies shall fail to accept the foregoing provisions of this act, or if said settlement shall fail to be completed as and within the time in this act provided, there shall be charged and collected from such company or companies, their successors and assigns, so failing, from and after the 1st day of July, 1886, 40 per cent. of their annual net earnings, to be ascertained as provided in section 1 of the act of May 7, 1878, in lieu of the 25 per cent. provided for in said act; and to that end said act of May 7, 1878, commonly called the "sinking-fund act," and any and all amendments or modifications thereof, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company; and said act, and all amendments or modifications thereof, shall henceforth apply to said corporations equally as to those specifically named in said act.

SEC. 9. That in the event of the non-acceptance of the provisions of this act by said companies, or in the event of the failure to complete the settlement hereinbefore provided for in this act, it is further provided that section 3 of said act of May 7, 1878, be, and the same hereby is, so amended as to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the sinking funds of said companies in the first-mortgage bonds of said companies, or any bonds or securities of the United States, in his discretion; or he may, with the assent of the companies, apply the same to the extinguishment of the interest of the subsidy bonds.

SEC. 10. That whenever, in the opinion of the President of the United States, it shall be deemed necessary to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of the several companies named in the first section of this act, upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States for the same property, or any part of the same, may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or otherwise clear off such paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury; and the United States shall thereupon become and be subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, mortgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made: Provided, That whenever it shall so become necessary for the United States to pay off any part of any such paramount incumbrance as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury may require the payment of all money paid for such purpose, with costs, expenses, and interest; and upon the failure of the company for whom such payment shall have been made to make such repayment, with all costs, expenses, and interest thereon, within twelve months after being notified so to do, the whole indebtedness of said company to the United States shall, at the discretion and option of the President of the United States, become due and payable at any day thereafter, and all the rights of the United States shall thereupon be enforced.

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act contained shall operate to discharge, extinguish, diminish, or affect the rights of the United States in the property now belonging to or hereafter to be acquired by any of said companies, their successors or assigns, as against any person or corporation who may have acquired or shall hereafter acquire rights in the same subsequent and subject to the rights of the United States, or in any way diminish or affect the rights, if any, of such person or corporation to redeem such property, or be substituted thereto on paying the debt due to the United States; nor shall anything in this act be construed or taken in any wise to affect or impair the right of Congress, at any time hereafter, further to alter, amend, or repeal the said acts hereinbefore mentioned; and this act shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal, as in the opinion of Congress justice or the public welfare may require; and nothing herein contained shall be held to deny, exclude, or impair any right or remedy in the premises now existing in favor of the United States.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to cause the provisions of this act to be enforced, and he shall take all steps needful to that end, and shall make report to the President each year or oftener thereon, which report shall be laid before Congress; and until the settlement in this act provided for shall be completed, all existing provisions of law relating to said companies, respectively, shall remain in force; and on and after the said 1st day of April, 1887, sections 8 and 9 of this act shall, if said settlement fail to be completed, take effect.

SEC. 13. That this act, and each and every provision thereof, shall severally and respectively be deemed, taken, and held as in alteration and amendment of said act of 1862, and of said act of 1864, and of said act of 1878, respectively, and of all of said acts.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. How much time does the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] desire?

Mr. HENLEY. In reply to the query of the gentleman from Texas I will state that I may have something to say in respect to this measure before we get through, and I certainly shall ask leave to print some remarks upon it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] at what time he desires to have the previous question ordered on this bill.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Just as early as possible.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the bill been reported unanimously by the Committee on Pacific Railroads?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. It has.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then no member of that committee desires to be heard in opposition to it.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. No, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire before the previous question is moved to be permitted to make some remarks on this bill, and I would like to know how much time those in favor of the bill desire to occupy.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I think those in favor of the bill will not occupy more than two hours and a half, or two hours and three-quarters.

Mr. HENLEY. I do not know that I shall want to occupy an hour, but I shall probably want to express some views upon the bill, and may occupy that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a bill of great importance, and I believe that those who favor it are desirous that it should be thoroughly discussed before the vote is taken. I confess that I am not sufficiently advised now as to its merits to say what course I shall take in regard to the bill. I desire to be enlightened; I am here for that purpose, and I desire to reserve the right to be heard as this discussion progresses. The bill is so important that it certainly ought not to pass until after an exhaustive discussion.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I think the members of the committee can get through in two hours. Would three hours as the limit of debate satisfy the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] has expressed a desire to reserve at least an hour, and I suggest that the time be four hours.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I will ask that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the pending amendments at 4 o'clock to-day, unless we get through the discussion sooner.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, is this bill in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; it is in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was not this bill referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the bill was referred to the House Calendar, and that it was considered in the House on a previous day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] if it is understood that I can control an hour of the time.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Do you mean yourself or you and the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] together?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from California must speak for himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Texas as now asking unanimous consent that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock to-day?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Yes; or sooner, if we get through sooner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered upon this bill and the pending amendments at 4 o'clock to-day, unless the discussion be completed at an earlier hour; one-half the time to be controlled by those advocating the bill, and the other half by those opposing it. Is there objection?

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] who reported this bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is what it is described to be in the last clause of the title. It is a bill to secure to the United States the payment of the indebtedness of certain railroad companies therein mentioned. This House and preceding Houses of Congress have considered so frequently the debt due the Government from the Pacific railroads, the manner in which it originated, the laws which authorized it, and the condition into which it has fallen, that it is scarcely necessary for me at this time to rehearse any of those facts. I will direct my remarks to these questions:

(1) Why is it necessary that Congress should take some action at this time?

(2) What plan has this committee offered to subserve the best interests of the Government in this particular?

It is evident that some steps are necessary because of the simple fact that a debt which at the time of its inception was but $64,000,000 has gradually increased until it now reaches the enormous sum of $109,249,527.62, due from all these companies.

The following table will exhibit the status of each, June 30, 1885, which is sufficiently near to show the necessity of some action being taken by Congress to secure repayment to the Government of the large and increasing debts from these roads, if repayment is desired or expected.

Name of railway.	Principal outstanding.	Interest accrued and not yet paid by United States, due July 1, 1885.	Interest paid by United States.	Interest repaid by companies to credit of bond and interest account.		Balance of interest paid by United States.
				By transportation services.	By cash, 5 per cent. of net earnings.
Central Pacific	$25,885,120	$776,553 60	$25,782,216 07	$5,134,185 31	$648,271 96	$19,999,758 80
Western Pacific	1,970,560	59,116 80	1,845,599 34	9,367 00	.....	1,836,232 34
Union Pacific	27,236,512	817,095 36	27,409,136 49	10,647,579 36	283,162 99	16,478,394 14
Kansas Pacific	6,303,000	189,090 00	6,696,603 09	3,284,294 23	.....	3,412,308 86
Central Branch Union Pacific	1,600,000	48,000 00	1,693,808 26	219,746 48	6,926 91	1,467,134 87
Sioux City and Pacific	1,628,320	48,849 60	1,610,846 29	178,659 68	.....	1,432,186 61
Total	64,623,512	1,938,705 36	65,038,209 54	19,473,832 06	938,361 86	44,626,015 62

This table is from the public debt statement and report of Commissioner of Railroads, 1885, page 3.

It was stated in the House but a short time ago that this indebtedness was $102,834,794; that is, after crediting to the companies all the moneys in the sinking fund, which by law are not strictly entitled to be credited to them, but by this bill are sought to be taken for the purpose of a credit or a present payment. This indebtedness, it was shown, has been increasing at the rate of over $1,600,000 per annum. It is increasing daily; it is increasing monthly; it is increasing yearly; and the time is rapidly drawing near when these companies should be called upon to pay the Government.

Now why is it that this arrearage has grown? Why is it that the companies have failed to keep up with what would seem to be proper business requirements in a case like this? It must be borne in mind that the Government itself provided the manner in which the payments should be made, and provided that the interest upon this great indebtedness should not be due until the time when the bonds themselves are due. That is a provision in the charter which has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States; and it is a provision which can not be changed, can not be affected in any manner, except with the consent of the companies interested therein.

Provisions have been made to secure a sinking fund tending not only to care for this debt, but to care for a debt of equal amount which was permitted by the Government by the act of July 2, 1864—that debt for which the first mortgage of the companies was given and that debt which must be paid off before the debt of the Government can be collected by virtue of law.

Now with this indebtedness increasing there comes to the people of this country these questions: Shall you risk this debt to go on increasing until the end of the thirty years and the possibility of the companies being able to pay you at that time? Will this Government be in any better position if it permits this debt to go on increasing and places itself in very great danger of having to redeem the underlying or first mortgages to the same amount?

Will this Government provide a way by which these companies can enter upon a course of fixed annual payments sufficient to pay off the debt in a given length of time, or will it push these companies into immediate bankruptcy? Will the Government decide that these debtors that have become embarrassed, it may be, through some fault of their own, but chiefly through the regulations which were made by Congress as to what payments should be made, shall be pushed into bankrupcy and that the Government shall take possession of the roads? For that is a question, a strong and living question, shall the Government submit itself to be placed in danger of having to take possession of these roads at the maturity of the debt? In order to do this the Government must pay the whole of the first-mortgage debt, not the interest, because the companies have kept paid up the interest on that indebtedness, but the principal amounting to $64,623,512. For if no extension be given, the probabilities are that the foreclosure of the first-mortgage bonds would extinguish the debt of the Government, unless it is prepared to pay for the Central Branch Union Pacific $1,600,000; for the Union Pacific, including the Kansas Pacific, $33,532,000; for the Sioux City and Pacific, $1,628,320; and for the Central Pacific $27,741,000, to cover the debt with interest of the mortgage which has priority over the Government.

Let us consider some of the things which may have affected unfavorably the results of those provisions of the law made for securing the repayment by the companies of at least a portion of the interest paid by the Government on the subsidy bonds. They were based upon percentages of net earnings, described in a particular manner. Now, it is a fact that the net earnings of these roads have considerably diminished since 1881, and that the net earnings of these several roads were not nearly so large last year as they were in previous years. It is charged against the companies that while the net earnings of the subsidized portions of the roads have diminished the earnings of certain branch lines belonging to or under the control of the systems have increased.

This is true; and whether it has resulted from the manner in which these railroads have kept their accounts or whether it has been because of the growth of the country being greater in the vicinity of the branch lines than on the long stretch of the main line, or whether it has resulted from some evil method of book-keeping, matters little to us. There is, however, one good reason why this has occurred; and that is that since these roads were constructed, partly through the aid of the Government giving large grants of land to other lines, which may be strictly termed opposition or competing lines, there have been built to the Pacific three other through lines which compete with these roads. Besides these, other lines have pushed out with numerous branches into the adjacent country, one of which has been extended almost across.

The Canada Pacific must also hereafter interfere to some extent with their transcontinental traffic. There is here in the hall a map of these roads, showing their branch lines and showing the subsidized portions of the main lines; this map will enable any gentleman who will take the opportunity to study it for a few moments to see that these reasons may have entered without any evil on the part of the companies into this diminution of their earnings. The rates upon freight and passengers have been continually falling.

How far has the sinking fund proved a failure—the sinking fund which was provided for in the act which was termed the Thurman act? I wish to call the attention of the House to what was expected of that act by its author at the time it was introduced. He expected, in brief, that this amount which was required would be sufficient at compound interest to provide for the payment of the indebtedness of the companies at maturity. At the time the bill was under consideration in the Senate in 1878 he said:

> Twenty-three years from now they will have to pay the accumulated 6 per cent. interest; but there are no rests. If any one will make a computation he will find that money at 5 per cent. compounded semi-annually, as it is here provided that it shall be compounded, will produce in the time we have to consider a larger sum than 6 per cent. upon the same amount of money not compounded. It is obvious that the amount of accretion on this sinking fund, that is, the interest upon it, ought to be sufficient to meet the interest which the companies will have to pay for the same period of time on the Government loan.

Now, the causes I have enumerated have tended to diminish the amount expected to be realized from the companies for the sinking fund. But the failure to have it increase at the rate expected has been chiefly due to this fact: the sinking-fund provision required these funds to be invested in Government 5 per cent. bonds, or in other United States bonds at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

No one foresaw at that time the remarkable course of financial events in this country, which has reduced the ruling rates of interest from 5 and 6 per cent. down to 3 per cent. In making the investment for that fund the Secretary of the Treasury has been compelled to pay out premiums in some instances as high as 35 per cent. So the investments have resulted in procuring as a return for the benefit of the companies and for the increase of that fund not as much as has been paid out in premiums alone on this sinking fund.

Virtually, it has not grown at all. There have remained in the Treasury at different times large sums; and I have here a table which shows the amount uninvested in the sinking fund on account of high premiums which would have to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury.

At different times the Commissioner of Railroads has reported that because of the high premium upon the bonds there remained in the Treasury belonging to this sinking fund uninvested—

	Central Pacific.	Union Pacific.	Both companies.
June 30, 1881	$63,176 89	$75,880 21	$139,057 10
June 30, 1882	527,886 53	407,441 99	935,328 52
June 30, 1883	845,652 13	858,532 16	1,703,184 29
June 30, 1884	1,089,159 75	992,485 91	2,081,645 66
June 30, 1885	2,020,900 13	220,448 68	2,241,348 81

It shows from an uninvested sum of $139,057 on June 30, 1881, it had increased on June 30, 1885, to $2,241,348.81, or that there had remained in the sinking fund an average of over $1,420,000 which has been uninvested because of the high rate of premium.

Now, then, I wish to call the attention of the House to the plan which has been adopted and presented in this bill. And I wish to say this bill is unlike in its plan any other proposition or any other project ever offered here in Congress or to the public for procuring the adjustment and settlement of this indebtedness.

It starts out by fixing an average state of maturity of the indebtedness October 1, 1921; taking a point thirty-five years hence. Then the plan requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall find out not the present worth of the indebtedness, not any amount which is the result of discounting, but find out the total amount which the Government shall have advanced to or for the benefit of the specific railway. This new principal is the principal of the bonds and the interest upon those bonds for thirty years at 6 per cent.

In the report of the committee, on page 7, will be found simply an example illustrating how this computation will result. This example, which is found on page 7, is not incorporated in the law. It is simply an illustration of the working of the requirements of the bill, which will prove it is different from any other plan projected, and a plan which will result in the payment of all the indebtedness and the payment of all the interest on all the indebtedness.

After having found this principal sum which becomes due upon an average at some date in 1897, certain credits are made, as I will show in a few moments. It may be well here to state why an average date must be selected, that is, the average date when the bonds of any one of these companies shall become due. As you are all aware, these bonds were delivered to the companies for their use and benefit during the period of three and four years as the construction of the roads went on. Therefore it is but fair to take notice of this fact to reach a just calculation and make a computation to the average period of maturity of all the bonds issued for each company. Having found the total amount, principal and interest, that shall have been paid for each one of the companies by the United States, from that amount are to be deducted the proper credits that they are entitled to. These credits consist of reimbursements or repayments heretofore made according to the requirements of law, some in cash, some compensation for services rendered the Government, and these credits are given without any computation or consideration of interest.

There is another necessary credit to that sum at that date. Bear in mind we are at a future date, a date at which we commence to compute interest to another fixed date, October 1, 1921. We are considering the indebtedness of the companies as it will be at the average date of the maturity of the subsidy bonds in 1897, and we should give them credit for their sinking funds. As that sinking fund ought to produce at least 3 per cent. simple interest, we compute 3 per cent. on the sinking fund from the 1st of October of this year. Add that to the sinking fund and this amount constitutes another credit. Certainly the railroads can not complain of any injustice or unfairness in that respect. They can not complain that the sinking fund does not make them a larger credit than that, because, as invested heretofore, it has not given them as much on the average as that rate of 3 per cent.

We compute interest on the remainder of the debt and interest, after making these deductions, at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum until October 1, 1921, such a date as will be the average date of one hundred and forty equal semi-annual payments. Add this interest to the remainder of the debt and interest aforesaid, and divide the sum so found into one hundred and forty equal parts, each company to pay the first of these equal installments on the 1st of April, 1887, and another even payment every six months thereafter until the whole one hundred and forty shall have been paid.

If it were possible for these companies to commence now and pay such a sum as would pay their debt in twenty-two years, it would be divisible into forty-four payments. Thus commencing eleven years before it became due, any one will concede that the debtor should have eleven years after.

It would not be demanding too much to say that you shall commence at the end of six months and pay one twenty-second of the amount, and so on continually every six months until the whole amount is liquidated. But upon an examination of the affairs of the various companies, examining their net earnings, their annual earnings, examining their receipts from all sources and their expenditures generally and condition in various respects, the committee came to the conclusion that it would be utterly fruitless to make such a requirement, and very unwise to expect that such demand could be complied with by the companies. We saw that in order to have safety and certainty of regular payments very much longer time must be given, and finally decided that the companies could bear such semi-annual payments as would entirely obliterate these debts by giving them upon the average the still further period of time, to October 1, 1921, and computing the interest at 3½ per cent. to that date. We do not want any member of this House to imagine that we claim the Government will get the whole amount of 3½ per cent.

That rate of 3½ per cent. is chosen for this purpose. You will observe in this provision that we will require the whole of this 6 per cent., which will be paid out by the Government for the benefit of these companies from this time on until the maturity of the principal, and that we then compute 3½ per cent. upon the amount of the principal and this interest combined. The committee desired to collect from each company such a fixed installment every six months as would pay interest at 3 per cent. on the present value of their debt and make such reductions of the principal of that present value as would entirely pay it off in the time given them. It was necessary to adopt 3½ per cent. to attain this object. A careful observation of certain plans proposed will show the reason.

For instance, a plan which was proposed and urged upon the committee as one that would be acceptable was that eighty years should be taken as the time within which this indebtedness should be liquidated, and that the present worth of the indebtedness should be taken at October 1 of this year, upon which further computation should be based and the amount of the debt ascertained for that period. Interest for the average period upon that present worth of the indebtedness, to wit, forty years and six months, should be computed at 3 per cent. and this interest added to the principal, the whole then divided into one hundred and sixty annual payments, and one of these parts be paid at the end of every six months continually until the whole should be liquidated.

This calculation, Mr. Speaker, will show the remarkable fact that by such manipulation of figures the whole of the principal of the indebtedness is averaged out of existence. That would result, if it were accepted, in the Government making an appropriation to these railroads of the whole of their debt and part of the interest thereon by permitting them to pay their indebtedness in eighty years by paying less than 3 per cent semi-annually upon the present worth of the debt.

It would not provide for the payment of a single cent of the principal of that indebtedness. That was the plan suggested and it has been represented on this floor as the plan of this bill. By no member of this committee has it been urged as being an appropriate plan of adjustment. There was another feature of this rejected method to which I wish to call the attention of the House, because the plan we propose has no such weakness or objectionable features.

I refer to a provision which was made in that plan, that, after the companies had issued their bonds to comply with the calculation made, as I have before stated, they should be permitted to take up and discount their own bonds, taking them up at an abatement of 3 per cent. interest. That provision, if strictly carried out, and the Government should be compelled to make good all of the abatement of interest upon the indebtedness so provided, would require a payment to the companies upon final settlement of an amount equal to nearly one-third of the whole indebtedness. There is no such weakness as that in the plan suggested by this committee.

Now, as to the features of this plan which should commend itself to the House as a very strong requirement in favor of the Government, I wish to call attention very briefly. The first feature to which I wish to call attention is this, as you will see by reference to page 7 of the report of the committee. There is embodied the result of a division of the whole payments required into one hundred and forty installments (referring now to the Union Pacific Railway Company), which requires a payment of $903,617.03 at the end of each six months; and for the convenience of any gentleman who might wish to make the computation for himself the present worth of that indebtedness is also given a few lines above as $52,897,885.55.

If you take the interest on that present worth for six months you will see that this payment which is required amounts to a sum sufficient to pay that interest upon the present worth and $110,000 toward liquidating the principal. The very first payment has that effect. The first payment makes that provision, and of course when the $110,000 is applied toward the principal of the debt the next computation upon the principal remaining will produce less interest, and the amount which will go to reducing the principal is greater. That will continue until by the end of one hundred and forty of these payments the total indebtedness is obliterated. Now, this calculation is correct, and I do not ask the House to take it upon my statement only, for it has been made by other members of the committee, who have worked it out by the rules of partial payments.

A like computation has been made by two accountants in the office of the Railroad Commissioner, and is corroborated and sustained by a statement of the actuary of the Treasury, Mr. Elliott, who in making his computation worked it out, not by partial payments, but by a mathematical process well known to such skilled mathematicians as he; and he arrives at the conclusion that this fixed sum will provide for the payment of the interest semi-annually upon the present worth and given in the example at the rate of 3 per cent. within one hundredth of 1 per cent. and such an increasing payment upon the principal each year as will obliterate it in the seventy years. It may be a little more or a little less, but will not vary much either way, depending altogether upon the accuracy of the calculation which is authorized to be made by this bill.

Another provision which this committee have been careful to place in this bill is that which preserves the lien of the Government and all the rights that the Government now has upon all the lines that were subsidized by the Government in the outset. It goes still further, and extends the lien of the Government to all the branch lines, all of the operated lines, all of the leased lines of these railway companies, their telegraph lines, franchises, rolling-stock, and property of every description.

I call attention to this map again which is before you, which will show the great extent of these branch lines and of the lines which are operated or leased by the companies. And there is in the report of the committee, on page 9, a statement of those companies whose securities the Union Pacific now holds—a statement of the relationship of those companies to the Union Pacific. I know it has been questioned that the Union Pacific has the control that is represented by these companies. I know it has been questioned that the Union Pacific possesses this property as herein stated. I have to say, in reply to that, that these statements are made in the public reports of the company which are sent abroad to its stockholders and sent abroad to the public, and accepted by the stockholders and by the public as being true. And I have still further to say that the United States Government has recognized the control of the Union Pacific with regard to at least thirteen of these roads in having made within recent years settlements with the Union Pacific by which the earnings for compensation of these roads were paid over to the United States Government in adjustment of a debt of the Union Pacific. The Union Pacific had the control of the compensation that was coming to these several roads, and the Union Pacific, acting upon that ownership, offered it to the United States Government in settlement, and the United States has accepted it.

On pages 9 and 10 is a brief statement of the relationship of these roads and other properties which are owned by the Union Pacific, and which are to become an additional security for the payment of this indebtedness. The total amount of these investments is something over $79,269,000, as shown by that table, and the cost of them to these companies is something over $45,753,000.

It will be seen from the foregoing statements that—

On these 2,687.08 miles of road there have been issued in stock	$41,469,450 00
Of which said company owns	33,421,600 00
On the same mileage bonds have been issued to the amount of	39,683,000 00
Of which said company owns	23,135,000 00
In addition to these that company owns other securities—
Miscellaneous bonds	$6,221,500 00
Miscellaneous stocks	11,039,475 00
Miscellaneous investments	604,631 25
Investment accounts	4,847,784 68
Total	79,269,990 93
The cost of these securities, as shown by the books of the company, was	45,753,297 75

In addition to that security and in addition to that means of paying the debt which the companies ought to furnish, and which this bill requires they shall furnish if they accept the provisions of the act, it is well to observe the additional number of miles on which the compensation for services rendered the Government will be retained to secure the payment of these installments.

I will submit a table of the mileage of the Union Pacific Railroad Company system and another of the Central Pacific system:

	Miles.
Road covered by lien of the United States	1,423.12
Road owned by Union Pacific not covered by Government lien	407.33
Road controlled by Union Pacific not covered by Government lien	2,687.10
Total number of miles not covered by the Government lien	3,094.41
Total number of miles Union Pacific proper	1,832.45
Total number of miles embraced in the system	4,519.53
MILEAGE OF CENTRAL PACIFIC SYSTEM.
Road covered by lien of the United States	865.66
Road owned by Central Pacific not covered by the Government lien	333.94
Road controlled by the Central Pacific not covered by Government lien, operated under leases	400.26
Total number of miles not covered by the Government lien	784.20
Total number of miles Central Pacific proper	1,249.60
Total number of miles embraced in system	1,649.86

This figures are valuable for this purpose: They show the number of miles of road that these companies own or control or operate and of which these companies are entitled to the earnings, the compensation paid by the Government for transportation of troops, for transportation of mails, for transportation of all kinds of stores that may be sent over the lines by the Government or any Department thereof, and as an additional security for the payment of its indebtedness, as an additional guarantee that the companies will comply with this proposition if accepted by them. We show this number of miles upon which, as I said a while ago, the earnings in many instances are increasing. The earnings shall be submitted to the Government; they shall draw none of the compensation. You might say, then why does not the Government withhold the compensation from these lines now and apply it to the payment of the debt? The Government has tried to do that and the matter has been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it has been decided the Government is not authorized to do so under the law as it now exists, and therefore this feature is necessary, at least in order to command the control of the earnings of these roads to be applied to the payment of the indebtedness of the United States Government.

Then, in addition to that, these companies have unsold lands available to a very slight extent as a security. The Union Pacific has 7,446,585 acres of land of the estimated value of somewhere from eleven to thirteen millions of dollars. I have said that is only available as a security to a slight extent. That is to say, there are mortgages upon these lands. But in the case of the Union Pacific Railway Company, there are already funds, cash in hand, securities, land contracts, &c., sufficient to obliterate that indebtedness, and the Government of the United States will be entitled, however, to the equity that remains in the company when the mortgages are paid.

As to the Central Pacific, it has 2,271,872 acres of land patented, which, estimated at $2.50 per acre, would produce about five and a half million dollars. That is in about the same condition as the land of the Union Pacific. This company has in addition lands and water-front in San Francisco, Oakland, and Sacramento, valued at $7,750,000, which also would become in like manner subject to this lien. These are the unsold lands of these companies, and they are the lands which the report says are to some extent available. Therefore if this demand that we make, especially the demand upon the Central Pacific, is a little heavy to be borne, if it is even greater than the net earnings of the company will justify, still they have assets, they have means out of which and through which they ought to be able to make these payments as required.

The net earnings under the Thurman law of the Union Pacific Company last year amounted to about three and a half million dollars upon that portion of their system which is subject to the lien of the United States, and the net earnings of the Central Pacific upon its subsidized portion was about one and one-fourth millions; so that the Government requirement would be more than the net earnings. But the compensation which was paid to those two companies by the Government last year, and which may be taken as a proper average of what it may have to pay them in years to come, is sufficient in the case of the Union Pacific to pay about two-thirds of the annual requirement of the Government, and in the case of the Central Pacific is sufficient to pay $100,000 more than one-half of the annual requirement. If, then, these requirements are made of these companies, they have to some extent the certainty of being able to pay them, even if the demands amount to more than half of the net earnings in one instance and to all the net earnings in the other.

It is the intention of the committee to suggest at the proper time an amendment to one of the sections of this bill with regard to permission to extend or refund the companies' own debt. As members are aware, that large debt becomes due at the same time that the debt to the Government becomes due. In order to permit the refunding of that debt before it becomes due, and at a lower rate of interest, some legislation is necessary. With their bonds so near maturity the companies ought to be able to replace this debt by a bonded indebtedness at a rate of interest at least as low as 4 per cent. If they do that, then the 2 per cent. saved becomes so much security for the payment of the Government indebtedness, for it will be in so much reduction of the annual fixed charges that come in before anything is to be paid to the Government. Therefore the bill provides that the companies shall have the privilege of refunding, but it also carefully provides that in this permission to extend or refund that indebtedness no right or privilege is included which will invalidate or weaken in the least degree the security of the Government.

The lien of the refunded debt is continued only on the property that was originally subject to it, and is not permitted to extend to any other property of the company. Another provision in this bill is that no dividend shall be paid by any of these companies until the installment next coming due to the Government shall have been first paid. That is in addition to the other provision, that the money to be applied to the dividend shall first be earned.

There is also in this bill a provision which will prevent some of the questions of difference that have heretofore arisen between the Government and the companies, the provision that the companies shall carry all the Government mails, munitions of war, stores, &c., at the lowest rates paid by any private parties for the same kind of service, "subject to and bound by the provisions of any act of Congress and the authority exercised thereunder relating to postal, military, or other Government transportation applicable alike to other railway or railroad companies." The necessity for this provision is that the companies have heretofore insisted that under their charter they were not subject to the general laws in relation to the transportation of mail matter, but were at liberty to charge express rates for such service. This provision is put in to prevent any such claim being made hereafter, and leaving no opportunity for question or dispute.

Further, the companies are required to keep their roads in good condition; and let me say that the investigation of the Railroad Commissioner shows that they are keeping up their roads in such condition that they will be well prepared to do the business of the Government and of the country through which they run.

I wish particularly that the attention of the House shall be directed to section 5 of this bill, which in itself seems to be a sufficient guarantee that these railroad companies, if they shall accept the provisions of the act, will comply with them. Section 5 of the bill reads:

> That a failure for six months to pay any of said installments as the same shall become due and payable, as hereinbefore provided, shall be deemed, taken, and held to make all the said installments due and payable; and all the rights and securities of the United States shall be thereupon enforced.

This bill provides, further, that the companies, in order to avail themselves of the provision that they may have further time in which to pay their indebtedness, must yield to lien of the Government everything they have, all their stocks, all their bonds, all their securities, all their branch lines, all the lines in which they have an interest or which they control to that extent. They must submit to the withholding of all the compensation that the Government would pay them for transportation; such compensation so withheld to go toward paying the next maturing installment of this indebtedness. They are required to place themselves in the position that if they fail for six months to comply with the terms of the bill then all their indebtedness becomes due. These provisions require, as I have said, about $3,757,496 annually, and under the present law we get about one-half of this amount.

This feature is worthy of notice, that by the requirements of this bill these companies, commencing to pay eleven years before the indebtedness is due and paying the amount herein provided during those eleven years, will have paid, before the indebtedness becomes due, over $41,000,000.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The gentleman says, as I understand, that if the companies, after accepting the provisions of this bill, do not comply with those provisions, the Government can then step in and consider all their indebtedness at once due. In that case what will become of the prior liens?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Of course that proceeding can not affect the prior liens; and there is a provision in the bill that the Government may take up the prior liens.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Is it not a fact that the prior liens on the main lines and its branches, which the companies propose to give as security to the Government, would, if enforced, amount to as much as the road and branches are now worth?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no doubt of this. When you wreck a railroad company you never get what it is worth.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then the Government would be paying for the property twice.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. When you have all there is you have as much as can be expected.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I believe it was stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] that it was worth more.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is undoubtedly worth more; it is undoubtedly worth twice as much as the first-mortgage indebtedness.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman did not understand me. I meant that the mortgage lien is now more than the value of the entire property of the road.

Mr. MILLS. Land grant and all?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Land grant and all.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not think that is so. The prior lien is for $64,000,000. The value represented by the cost of construction and by the bonds and other securities which are now held by these companies would amount to four or five times that.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Is it not a fact that all these branches which the companies now propose to offer to the Government as additional security are already mortgaged to their full value?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is not a fact, and yet it is a fact. They are mortgaged to their full value; but the Union Pacific Railroad Company owns a very large proportion of those bonds and stock, as is shown by the table given in the report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Allow me a suggestion showing the value of these auxiliary lines. The income of the Union Pacific Railway system is about $5,000,000, and the net income about $3,500,000, which goes into the system, showing the value of the roads over and above the incumbrances which may be upon them.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, let me understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]; I know we both want to be understood. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the cash value to-day of the property on which the Government has a second-mortgage lien is double, or is greater by any amount than, the amount of the first-mortgage lien? Does the gentleman mean to say that the cash value of the property on which the Government has a lien to-day is greater than the amount of the first-mortgage lien?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I believe it is.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If that is so, why would it not be a good plan for the Government to pay off the first-mortgage lien?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And take the road?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Simply because the most injurious thing which could happen to this Government would be for it to go into the railroad business.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is a different proposition. Some of us may differ with the gentleman on that.

Mr. MILLS. How much of the lands heretofore granted do the companies still retain?

Mr. HENLEY. Will the gentleman from Texas amend his question so as to include this interrogatory: Whether or not the land-grant bonds and the land grant itself are under this bill to be turned over by the railroad companies to the Government as security?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In reply to the first question I will say, as I stated a few moments ago, that there are 7,446,585 acres of unsold lands of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the estimated value of which is from $11,000,000 to $13,000,000. The Central Pacific Railroad Company has 2,271,872 acres of land undisposed of, and has large claims for lands which are in question between it and the Government, the lands not having been patented to the company.

Mr. LONG. Amounting in value to how much?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The amount has not been estimated, because it is impossible to determine it. Now, as to whether all the bonds which are in the possession of any of these companies are to become subject to the lien of the United States Government for the payment of this indebtedness, I will say that all of them are to become subject to this lien.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does that statement include the bonds represented by the mortgages upon these branch roads?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It does include all those bonds (a table of which is given in the report) and such stock of the companies.

Mr. SPRINGER. But in the mean time, between now and the time when the lien of the Government is to be asserted, may not the railroad companies dispose of any of these bonds in the ordinary course of business?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suppose that might be done if the railroad companies desired to place themselves in the position of openly and boldly attempting to perpetrate a fraud upon the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not provided in the bill that they may dispose of any of these securities?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is provided they may do so in the ordinary course of business; and that has been the provision of the law from the beginning, as it is the law now. But there is an express provision that these securities shall not be disposed of in any way to the injury or diminution of the security of the Government. The companies may dispose of the securities in the ordinary course of business; but a disposition of them in such a way that the companies would not receive back value which would then be subject to this lien would not be disposition in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who is to judge of that fact?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The Secretary of the Treasury. I suppose at least their disposal is to be reported to that officer.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the railroad companies in the first instance would be the judge of the propriety of these transactions.

Several MEMBERS. Of course.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the only way to reach the companies, if the securities were disposed of improperly, would be to bring suit against them for the violation of their obligations under the law.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEBER. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois that authority on the part of these companies to dispose of these securities in the ordinary, lawful course of their business now exists; and the provision inserted in this bill by the committee requires that this shall not be done in violation of the rights of the Government or in diminution of its security; and requires, furthermore, that report be made to the Secretary of the Treasury of such disposition within thirty days.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me another question? I understood the gentleman to say a while ago that the greater portion of the bonds secured by mortgage upon these branch lines, upon which the Government has now no security, are owned by these parent companies.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then if the companies are so anxious to secure the Government against loss, what prevents them from making over to the Government now, in payment of this indebtedness, those bonds and obligations?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is nothing that prevents their doing so; and unless this bill be accepted there is no law that provides for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The debt is not due for twelve years.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And the companies are entitled to stand upon their right based upon the fact that the debt is not due until twelve years hence.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that. My question is, is there anything which prevents the companies from paying them if they are anxious to do so, or to their being received by the United States Government?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Who is authorized to do so?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is there anything which prevents the company from paying them to the United States Government?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But who is authorized to receive them?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No one is authorized to receive them; neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Secretary of the Interior nor any other officer of the Government of the United States is authorized to receive those bonds.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Did the committee consider whether it would be better to have the Government take possession of those bonds than to take possession of the net earnings?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The commitee have not been under the necessity of considering that, because they propose in this bill to take possession of both of them—not all of the net earnings, but that portion which they might receive or be entitled to for any services rendered to the Government of the United States over the main lines or the branch lines.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And also these bonds?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And also these bonds. They are to have a lien on these bonds and hold them in payment of this indebtedness.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit me to make one further suggestion right here?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Is not this the precise point, that in consideration of the company giving this additional security they get extension of the time of payment?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You have stated it well and strongly, as I would like to have done in the first instance.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Is the security any more than is sufficient to pay the lien? Why do they ask for an extension? They can foreclose the mortgage and take the property.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will allow me a moment——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. CRISP. My friend from Iowa entirely misconceives my statement.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to hear the gentleman state it then.

Mr. CRISP. I wish to state, if the gentleman yields to me, in reply to the question which has been suggested——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia with pleasure.

Mr. CRISP. I gave it as my opinion—and it is only my opinion—that the value of the subsidized portion of these railroads was not more than enough to pay the first-mortgage bonds. It has no reference whatever to the unsubsidized railroads, which, according to the proposition of this bill, ought to be held subject to the lien of the Government.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But this does not give you a lien.

Mr. CRISP. With the consent of the company.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But you can not legislate a lien.

Mr. CRISP. The Government is not asked to legislate a lien.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will come to order and the Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether he yields to these interruptions?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Everybody seems to be talking at the same time, and nobody seems to be asking me to yield to him, but all have taken possession of the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is entitled to the floor, and will proceed with his remarks without interruption.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I want to find out whatever objections there may be to the plan suggested in this bill, and I am perfectly willing to yield to any inquiry in regard to this matter which any gentleman may desire to propose. I will hear now the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I am not making any inquiry now. I simply asked a question of the gentleman from Georgia in the colloquy which was taking place at the time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this proposition provides for a semi-annual payment, a fixed payment, a payment not depending upon the net earnings, not depending on any other consideration, but a payment large enough in amount to pay 3 per cent. semi-annually upon the present value of the indebtedness, and also to make a payment upon the principal in the case of the Union Pacific of $220,-269.34, and in the case of the Central Pacific of $212,157.80 the first year. And to such an extent do these partial payments go that they will entirely obliterate the indebtedness in the number of years given in this bill.

These payments will make over $41,000,000 that will be paid by these roads before their indebtedness becomes due. In connection with the credits the companies will be properly entitled to have, there will be paid by this bill, if it shall be placed upon the statute-book, some $76,000,000 in the aggregate, or nearly $12,000,000 more than the total original indebtedness of these companies.

Therefore, if these companies shall be willing to place as security all they have, all they control, all they can command in any manner whatever, and will consent if at any time they shall fail for six months to pay any one of these installments of indebtedness as they shall become due that all of them shall become due at once; and if they will refund their other underlying or first-mortgage debt at a lower rate of interest and consent that if they make default of payment therein, so that the Government must step in and pay off that portion upon which default shall be made, and they fail to repay the same to the Government on demand and pay interest, costs, and all expenses thereon within twelve months thereafter, then all the installments of indebtedness shall become due and payable, I submit we shall have taken about as close a hold upon these companies as the Government possibly can take at this time.

If they do not accept the terms there is a provision in this bill that the Government shall collect from them 40 per cent. of their net earnings hereafter.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will you permit another question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I wish to ask now this question: You undertake by this bill, of course with the acceptance of its provisions by the companies, to extend the time in which the money is to be paid seventy years; is that the figure?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Seventy years from this date. Let me state again that this is not an extension of seventy years, for they begin paying eleven years before it is due, and should be entitled to eleven years at the end, or twenty-two years in all, and taking twenty-two years from seventy leaves forty-eight, and averaging that gives, if they anticipate their indebtedness, only an average extension of twenty-four years.

Mr. MCKENNA. And that is all the Government surrenders.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir; and it gathers in everything it possibly can.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Now, during this extension of time, these companies making these partial payments, suppose while they make them upon the debt to the Government they should default upon the interest and principal of this prior lien, and the Government having agreed to extend the time to this period, will it not give these prior bondholders an opportunity to come in and gobble up the whole property to the exclusion of the indebtedness to the Government altogether?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not conceive it possible that such a result could be achieved under this bill. It is neither reasonable nor, in my judgment, possible under its provisions.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the Government to do now if that condition of things should happen.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, that is true; the Government can do nothing whatever now.

In answer further to the gentleman from Florida let me state there is also an express provision embodied in the bill that does not exist in the present law; that the Government in case of default may come in and pay off the lien and then demand repayment; and all of the rights of the United States may be enforced, for the whole indebtedness becomes due if such repayment is not made within twelve months.

Now, I can not see how any legislation that can possibly be made would be more in the interest of the Government in the event of a default than this.

Mr. CANNON. If I understood the gentleman from Iowa aright a moment ago he claimed that the railway companies would not avail themselves of the provisions of this act.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand the gentleman from Ohio in reply, and I ask the question in good faith for information, he said that if the railway companies refused to avail themselves of that act we will have 40 per cent of their net earnings instead of 25 per cent. as under the present law?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will yield additional time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That was my statement; and I will make further statement by way of explanation of this provision of the bill: This bill requires the acceptance by the companies within ninety days after its passage. The House will be in session shortly thereafter. If then these companies fail to avail themselves of this plain business proposition they will admit to the House and to the country that their intentions are evil; and this same committee that gave consideration to the present measure, and the same House, will be here to prepare and make some legislation which will enable the Government of the United States to foreclose, if necessary and possible, or perfect any other plan that to its wisdom shall seem necessary.

Mr. LONG. The companies will be required also to pay 15 per cent. more than they now pay out of their net earnings?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir; that will be the effect.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. May I ask my colleague a question? I have not had an opportunity to examine as carefully as I desired the provisions of this bill, but I wish to make one or two inquiries. My colleague may have explained them before, but I did not hear it. This bill, as I understand it, makes no provision whatever for the first-mortgage indebtedness of the road. It does not deal with that, in other words, except in certain contingencies?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It permits the roads to refund at a lower rate of interest, not to exceed 4 per cent.; and if they should default, the President of the United States may direct the Secretary of the Treasury to take up the default and require payment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will my colleague state the amount of the first-mortgage lien?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Sixty-four millions of dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is the first mortgage or prior lien?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is the amount also of the Government bonds which are secured by the second mortgage?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir. There is interest, of course, to be added on the Government bonds.

Mr. SPRINGER. The total indebtedness is about $109,000,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. When does this second mortgage mature?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. At the same time the subsidy bonds mature—in about eleven years.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That was my understanding.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The average is eleven years and a few months.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then this amounts to an extension or a continuance of the first-mortgage indebtedness into the future?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It does.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The Government retaining simply the second-mortgage lien and extending the first mortgage indefinitely.

Mr. HEWITT. Not indefinitely.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This requires the companies to keep a sinking fund and put into it a certain fund, and to keep it up in such a sum as will be sufficient to pay the debt at its maturity.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. For my part I should much rather the Government would do what any individual owner of a second mortgage would do where the property was encumbered by a prior lien. He would take up that mortgage himself. The Government should take up the prior lien itself. The Government should pay off those bonds and take a first mortgage covering the whole amount.

Mr. LONG. A business man would very rarely do that under circumstances like these.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. He would certainly do it in this case; especially as the Government has funds, and this would provide a sinking fund, or a fund that might be utilized as a sinking fund by the Government.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think in reply to the gentleman from Ohio I may say that this bill is directly in the line that he suggests as far as it is possible to be unless it made an express provision for the Government taking up all the indebtedness.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Why not make that express provision?

Mr. LONG. There is in this bill a provision for this very thing, for taking up the prior lien in the discretion of the President.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In the discretion of the President. But we were not disposed to say that it was advisable for the United States Government to put sixty-four millions of dollars more in those roads at this time. The Thurman act, which provided for the payment of 25 per cent., extended only to four of these roads, while this act, in case it is refused, extends the provisions of the Thurman act amended to all the Pacific roads that received aid from the Government.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will yield now to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I shall want some time hereafter, but not just now.

Mr. HENLEY addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are ten minutes of the hour remaining, and forty-four minutes afterward before the previous question will begin to operate.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPRINGER. It was understood, I believe, that I was to control one hour; and, if so, I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Supposing I would have some time in my own right, I promised to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. SPRINGER. At the time consent was given that the previous question be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock, I stated that I consented only on the understanding that I should be entitled to control an hour.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. We have only thirty-eight minutes left of the time on our side; and we do not propose to divide that with gentlemen on the other side. We concede the right of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to divide his own time as he may see proper.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we have on this side one hour and five minutes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] after I am through.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House I will state as briefly as possible my views on this bill. I confess very frankly I have not had time to examine it very thoroughly, and hence I am necessarily somewhat in the position of a seeker after information.

This bill relates to one of the most remarkable business transactions in the history of modern times. The original act of July 1, 1862, granted to these Pacific railroads an immense subsidy of lands and 6 per cent. bonds—more than sufficient to construct and equip the roads. By the terms of this act the Government was to have a prior lien to secure the payment of the bonds, principal and interest. Waiving all consideration as to the propriety of the original act, I come to the act of July 2, 1864. Concerning this last act the committee, in their report accompanying this bill, say:

> The grant in lands and bonds was doubled by the act of July 2, 1864, and many other powers given the companies, among which was to place a first mortgage upon their railroads equal in amount to the subsidy in bonds given by the Government, and prior in lien to the lien heretofore held by the Government. (See section 10, act of 1864.)
> They were also granted powers of consolidation, and were compelled by the twelfth section to operate all the roads and branches, as far as transportation was concerned, as a continuous route.

The theory upon which the bonds were first issued and the lands granted to these various companies was that the bonds would be amply secured, and that competition would be provided, and that the rates of traffic and passenger transportation would be regulated by such competition. But the act of July 2, 1864, struck down all these considerations and cast them to the winds. It made the Government lien a second-mortgage lien; it struck down competition by expressly authorizing combination.

This act of 1864 was a terrible betrayal of the interests and rights of the American people. I have referred to the Journal of the House which records the vote on the passage of this act. Turning to page 895 of the House Journal, first session Thirty-eighth Congress, I find the fact recorded that the bill passed in this House by a vote of 71 yeas to 37 nays, 74 members not voting. It was passed by 21 votes less than was required to constitute a quorum of the House. A vote like this, sir, placed this Government in the position of a second-mortgage lien-holder and in such a position that terms can be dictated to it by a corporation of its own creation.

Of course it is scarcely germane so far as the present bill is concerned to refer to these things, because this bill is presented to us as a business proposition in view of present surroundings. And I concede that some features of this bill are plausible. But I shall not support the measure; first, for the reason that I have been substantially instructed by the Legislature of my State to vote against it. It is true that the joint resolution passed by the Iowa Legislature refers to the Senate bill not the House bill, but it refers substantially to the whole proposition; and hence, following my own best judgment as well as my instructions, I must vote against this measure.

But I think the people of this country ought to know who are responsible for the passage of the act which places us in this situation. The very first name that I find recorded in favor of that measure is that of Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, of my own State; I find also the name of Hon. JAMES F. WILSON, another Representative from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you find any of your present political allies voting for it?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will refer to the whole list, and I intend to print it with my remarks. I shall give the names of those voting in the affirmative, those voting in the negative, and those not voting at all. I do not intend to shield anybody, nor do I intend to assail anybody's motives. I shall simply give the facts.

I simply regard it as a remarkable fact in the parliamentary history of this country that an act of this kind could be passed by 71 votes in a House numbering one hundred and eighty-two members.

I find among the affirmative vote upon this bill the names also of many other distinguished men, some of whom have passed away and some of whom are now living. I find Hon. James G. Blaine recorded as voting for the bill. I find on the same side my good friend Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, now a member of this House.

Here is the vote on the passage of this act July 2, 1864:

Those who voted in the affirmative were—

William B. Allison,	John A. Griswold,	Charles O'Neill,
Oakes Ames,	James T. Hale,	James W. Patterson,
James M. Ashley,	William Higby,	Sidney Perham,
Augustus C. Baldwin,	Samuel Hooper,	Theodore M. Pomeroy,

This record shows, Mr. Speaker, how loosely the legislation of this country was conducted in that period. Congress seems to have gone wild and to have supposed that to this generation the whole continent belonged, and that nothing whatever was due to posterity. All conceptions of duty seem to have been lost for the time and everybody ran riot. The whole continent was parceled out among speculators and the people were forgotten.

Mr. HOLMES. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMES. Did my colleague take exception or raise his voice against the passage of that act in 1864?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I was in the Army up to about the time the act of July, 1864, was passed. I was not in Congress at the time. I was in the Republican party, it is true, for many years, and at that time, when this matter was called to the attention of the public, it was condemned, and I condemned it both when I was a member of the Republican party and since.

Mr. HOLMES. Did the gentleman ever raise his voice against it at the time?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I knew but little about it at the time, if, indeed, anything at all. Nor did the people. I never uttered when I was a member of the Republican party, nor since I have been out of the Republican party, one word in favor of the act of 1864. Not one word, sir. It was the principal business of the Republican speakers up to the time that I left the party, and since that time, to call attention to the condition of things down South and to wave the bloody shirt, as the gentleman well knows, instead of to such matters as we are now considering.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman state where he ever did denounce this act or the passage of this act? Where did he ever denounce it? If he ever did, let him tell us where it was.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I can not tell the particular place, but everywhere when I was a member of the Republican party, and for years before I left it, the gentleman knows, and the leaders of the Republican party of Iowa know, that I was so strong an anti-monopolist and an anti-bank man that my views were well understood in the Republican party long before I left it, so much so that I was criticised in consequence of it.

Let me allude to some other facts in connection with this remarkable transaction. How much interest has been paid by the Government of the United States for these various railroads? The following table will answer:

Name of railway.	Principal outstanding.	Interest accrued and not yet paid by United States, due July 1, 1885.	Interest paid by United States.	Interest repaid by companies to credit of bond and interest account.		Balance of interest paid by United States.
				By transportation services.	By cash, 5 per cent. of net earnings.
Central Pacific	$25,885,120	$776,553 60	$25,782,216 07	$5,134,185 31	$648,271 96	$19,999,758 80

Take the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, in my own State. That branch is built from Sioux City in the direction of Council Bluffs along the Missouri Valley and about 100 miles in length. I know all about that railroad and every mile of it. It is built on the dead level of the Missouri Valley. The fall is no more than the natural curvature of the earth, about one foot to the mile. It is practically upon a dead level, and could be constructed by the plow and scraper so far as the grade is concerned. Yet, sir, the Government paid to that railroad company in subsidy bonds $1,628,320.00, and upon those bonds interest to the amount of $1,610,846.29, of which there is a balance remaining due to the United States of $1,432,186.61.

What excuse, in the name of common sense, can there be for such a transaction?

Mr. Speaker, I can not support this bill. I much prefer that the Government shall buy in the first-mortgage lien at the end of eleven years from now, and then compel the company to pay the whole claim or sell out the road. This is infinitely better than to extend this indebtedness for seventy years. We know what our rights are under the present law, but who can foresee what advantages will be taken of the present bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. How much of the forty-five minutes remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa occupied seventeen minutes. Twenty-eight minutes remain.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the Pacific railroads are now indebted to the United States Government to the amount of something over $100,000,000, which is secured by a second-mortgage lien upon the property of these companies. There exists also a first mortgage securing the $64,000,000 of first-mortgage bonds. It is proposed in this bill to extend the time of paying the debt to the Government seventy years.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, no.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes; one hundred and forty semi-annual payments would extend to seventy years. The second-mortgage lien is to continue and extend to branch roads, how fully mortgaged now, I do not know. It is proposed also to extend the first-mortgage lien for seventy years——

Mr. DUNN. No, the gentleman is mistaken in that. The lien expires in seventy years——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The mortgage remains, and it is practically an extension for seventy years.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no such provision in this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It authorizes the company to renew its first-mortgage bonds without stating for how long, and I assume that it is at least to be coextensive with the second-mortgage bonds, which are to run seventy years.

Now, as a financial or business operation for the Government, that does not commend itself to me as being a wise arrangement. I do not think it is what an individual owner of a second mortgage would do where the property which was his security was subject to a prior lien. The first mortgage would certainly be a better security than the second mortgage. If I owned such a second mortgage and had more money which I wished to invest, and I was asked to extend my second mortgage seventy years, and also to permit the extension of the first mortgage, I would likely say, oh no, I will take the first mortgage myself, and thus improve my whole security. I will extend the debt, provided I am sure of my interest and an annual payment as a sinking fund. In other words, I would say let the whole debt be consolidated that I may control it all. Any business man, I say, being able to buy up prior liens would undoubtedly do so instead of permitting a first mortgage to be extended and put beyond his control. Now that, I think, is what the Government should do in this case. It should become the owner of the first-mortgage lien by paying the first-mortgage bonds when they become due, letting the railroad companies become indebted to the Government for the entire amount of both mortgages.

I have no objection to letting the property remain in the hands of the present companies, to be operated and managed by them, provided the stipulated interest is paid to the Government and a sinking fund is provided or other means for final payment of the entire debt. But I have another reason for wanting the Government to pay off the first-mortgage bonds and thereby become the sole mortgage creditor, the debt being consolidated under one mortgage to the Government.

We have now but one hundred and fifty-four millions of Government bonds payable at the option of the Government, and there is more than money enough in the Treasury to pay them, and they ought to be paid.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will yield for a question, but my time is very limited.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman think it is any more probable that there will be a payment on any of these railroad bonds than there is of the present administration paying off the Government bonds?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This $150,000,000 must be paid. The sinking fund requires a payment of about fifty millions a year. In 1891 two hundred and fifty millions more—the four and a halfs—become payable, and no other bonds are payable until 1907, so that between 1895, when the bonds of the Pacific roads become payable, and 1907 there will be no bonds subject to call. Now, the Government can just as well as not, and better than not, pay the first bonds upon the railroads, and thus consolidate the whole debt and become the sole mortgagee of these railroads. These first-mortgage bonds could be made a part of the sinking fund, or otherwise be made to constitute a cumulative fund ready to be applied to the bonds maturing in 1907.

That is in my judgment, Mr. Speaker, what ought to be done, and if that be done I will support the bill; but to allow the first-mortgage lien to be extended indefinitely, or for seventy years, the Government holding all the time only a second mortgage I think is objectionable, and I shall feel bound to vote against the bill as presented.

Mr. HENLEY. I yield my twenty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is whether or not this arrangement proposed will be beneficial to the Government? It is assumed by gentlemen that the only assurance we have of the ultimate payment of this great debt, and that the Government shall sustain no serious loss, will be by this extension of time. And I take it for granted, on account of the earnestness with which gentlemen have pressed the importance of extending the time for the payment of this debt and securing the Government, gentlemen feel that to carry this bonded debt for near three generations and keep up our relations to these great corporations for that great length of time is not a proper thing to be done; that only a high and imperative necessity on the part of the Government would justify it.

Now, what is the actual condition of these corporations? I refer to two of them alone, the two great corporations, the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific. I have no time to refer to others. What is their condition? What security have we now for ultimate payment? Basing the answer on the report made to this Congress by the Commissioner of Railroads, the only authority to which we can refer with confidence and safety at this time with which I am acquainted, I ask the question, What are the assets of these corporations according to the report of the Commissioner last December, when his last report was made to Congress?

I answer from the report of the Commissioner, which I have before me, beginning on page 589, Executive Document 1, part 5, first session Forty-ninth Congress:

Assets of the Union Pacific, $252,041,633; assets of Central Pacific, $177,655,098; making the entire assets of these two corporations—the Union Pacific, of course embracing the Kansas branch, and the Central Pacific embracing what was formerly known as the Western Pacific—the entire assets of those two companies amount to $429,696,731. The assets of those two corporations then is $429,696,731.

And gentleman must bear in mind that that amount of $429,696,731 are the tangible assets of these corporations. Now, what are the liabilities of these two corporations (I speak of them as two, although, in fact, four), as shown by this report?

The liabilities of the Union Pacific were $164,686,247, of the Central Pacific $120,547,718; in all $285,233,965; including every dollar of the indebtedness of these two corporations to the Government, principal and interest, on the subsidy bonds, in December last when that report was made.

A MEMBER. Not stock?

Mr. HOLMAN. We are not taking that into account upon a question whether the Government should get back the money it advanced to create this corporate wealth. I trust the question of stock is not to be involved in this controversy.

Now, sir, what is the result? That there is a balance of assets, according to the report of your Commissioner of Railroads only last December, taking every element of assets, every element of indebtedness into account over the indebtedness of the two corporations, of $144,462,766—one hundred and forty-four millions—all the indebtedness of these corporations upon their first-mortgage bonds, upon their second-mortgage bonds, the interest paid by the Government, and all else of indebtedness taken into account. Here you have assets to the amount of more than one hundred and forty-four millions as a guarantee of payment of your bonds beyond the entire indebtedness of these corporations' first and second mortgages and all other debts taken into the account. Yes, sir; $144,462,766 of surplus wealth to meet your great claim when it becomes due ten or eleven years hence.

Those liabilities embrace your bonded debt and the interest you have paid for these corporations. And what, sir, is the amount of that debt as against these two corporations. The Union Pacific, at the time the report was made, owed you on the subsidy bonds, $48,914,056; the Central Pacific. $47,488,887; in all, $96,402,933, a sum less, mark you, gentlemen, by more than $48,000,000 than the sum of the assets of these corporations over all indebtedness, as showu by the report.

The following tables from the report show the facts:

From these tables it appears that the assets of these corporations exceed their liabilities, all elements considered, the sum I have named—$144,462,766. Of course the stock is not taken into the account.

Now, if under the circumstances it can be said that it is better for us to take a security from these corporations, running through a period of seventy years, and during all that time keep up our relations with two great and powerful corporations growing more powerful every successive year, I am not able to see it. I am astonished at such a proposition.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRISP. Had we not better take a lien on that $144,000,000 to secure the debt than enable the company between now and 1898 to dispose of it?

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not get security by this bill on any more of that one hundred and forty-four millions than we have now. It is the substantial property of these corporations—the roads and the rolling stock and all else of their possessions—they are the assets of the two corporations.

Mr. CRISP. Of the Pacific Railway Company, not the Pacific Railroad Company. The gentleman does not appear to see the distinction.

Mr. HOLMAN. The debt is secure enough now if the report of the Commissioner is true. It is proposed to extend the time seventy years and to have by way of additional security certain branch roads, all of which are under heavy mortgage. Let us see how this case stands, no matter how earnestly this has been pressed upon us by eminent capitalists of our great cities.

How does it happen that in addition to your mortgage the Union Pacific road, it is said, carries a mortgage subject to yours amounting to $14,483,000, at 8 per cent., bonds? Do you suppose the capitalists of this country, ever vigilant, would take bonds at long time subject to both mortgages?

Mr. CRISP. Does not the gentleman know that is on the unsubsidized parts of the road?

Mr. HOLMAN. On the Union Pacific?

Mr. CRISP. The unsubsidized portion of the road.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend is correct, I am mistaken. I am not so informed.

Mr. CRISP. You are.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I am assuming that my data are as reliable as those of my friend from Georgia. Take the Kansas branch——

Mr. DUNN. Do you argue that you do not want to collect the debt because it is safe?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I want to collect it; that is what I am aiming at; but I am not in favor of extending the time to seventy years or to any other period. I am claiming that the debt shall be closed up when it is due. Take the Kansas Pacific. There is a mortgage on that road, it is said, of $14,000,000, subject to your mortgage and the preceding one, and running until 1902. Is it likely that capitalists would run that kind of risk if there is uncertainty in the security?

But, again, let us see for a moment how these corporations have been repaying you for the enormous sums you have paid as interest on the bonds you issued in their behalf by their transportation services. Let us see how they have so far repaid you, even in the comparatively small sums they have paid you. Of course I take the account as shown by the Commissioner. Take the Union Pacific: "Transportation applied to bond and interest account, $13,931,873.59." In other words, of the $19,737,380.32 that you collected, $13,931,873—nearly fourten millions—is what you have paid for the transportation of your supplies, and over that single road.

Take the Central Pacific as furnishing some data on this subject——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Was the rate of freight charges paid by the Government any higher?

Mr. HOLMAN. Greatly above, sir. Take the Central Pacific. Their aggregate is $8,830,288.13, while your transportation account is $5,143,552.31.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment. The meaning of all this is simply that after furnishing these corporations an empire of land—37,000,000 of acres—out of which, together with bonuses in the form of dividends and otherwise, the shareholders of the Union Pacific alone have realized already $121,000,000 of wealth—after all this, you are paying these enormous sums of money to these companies for transportation and greatly above the rates you have paid to other railroad companies, and at the same time this debt of yours is to be postponed seventy years, perhaps indefinitely, to the end that, by the enormous charges which will be made against you for transportation, exceeding those paid to the other railroad companies, these Pacific Railroad corporations may be enabled to pay off this debt without any embarrassment to their shareholders, without impairing the value of their stock, and on a basis which will bear heavily upon you and your posterity on account of their exactions, their charges being, as is shown by the decisions of the Supreme Court, greatly in excess of what you would have paid if those corporations had not been enriched by your bounty and their roads built on your credit by your bonds.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is not the gentleman mistaken as to the amount which he has stated being for transportation alone? I have in my hands the last report of the Commissioner of Railroads, which reads: "Transportation performed and money paid into the Treasury, $13,931,873.59."

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I am not mistaken. It reads: "Transportation performed and money paid into the Treasury: Transportation applied to bonds and interest account, $13,931,873.59."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But I have reference to the larger sum which the gentleman mentioned—the thirteen millions. Does not the report of the Commissioner show that that was for transportation and moneys?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will please remember that this is my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But I want to know whether or not you are mistaken on that point?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not mistaken. I will read the statement again: "Transportation performed and money paid into the Treasury: Transportation applied to bonds and interest account, $13,931,873.59." Now who is mistaken? Now it is time for my friend to explain his mistake. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Who is mistaken about that any way, the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My friend has got it wrong.

Mr. HOLMAN. The statement shows "Transportation applied to bond and interest account, $13,931,873," as I have stated.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But a large proportion of that is money paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend require me to read this whole statement? Here it is:

Transportation performed and money paid into the Treasury:
Transportation applied to bond and interest account	$13,931,873 59
Cash payments applied to bond and interest account	283,162 99
Transportation applied to sinking fund	3,873,664 08
Cash payments to sinking fund	1,421,714 46
Interest on sinking-fund investments	226,965 20

"Transportation applied to sinking fund"—ah, another item, it is greater than I thought—$3,863,608. So, instead of the total paid by "transportation" being thirteen millions, it is over sixteen millions, nearly seventeen millions of dollars. That is the amount of the exorbitant charges made by this one corporation against you. Almost all of their credits seem to be created by charges against you at exorbitant rates for transportation.

So it is proposed to make this imperial estate of railroads almost a direct gift to a few of your citizens. It seemed to be assuming that shape in former years, but now you are making it much more definite and effective by this proposed legislation. You are saying to this corporation, "Notwithstanding the enormous sums you have already realized—unexampled estates—you shall have such an extension of time as that the transportation of the supplies for the Government, for which you will charge, according to former precedents, at a higher rate than other railways demand, you will in these seventy years more than extinguish the enormous debt which you owe to the United States." The great debt that created your wealth will be no burden to you. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look for a moment at the profits of these companies. One of these corporations—the Union Pacific—mark you, gentlemen, last year, as shown in the Commissioner's report, made net earnings to the amount of $8,738,407.05, and of that sum if you had only taken 50 per cent. it would have gone far to meet the claims of the Government.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is not that the net earnings of the whole system?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. I am talking about one road at a time. I do not intend to confuse things. I am now speaking of the Union Pacific. Fifty per cent. of the net earnings, as stated in this report, is more than $4,350,000. Is it not an easy thing for us to see that on the basis of even 50 per cent. if you require these corporations to pay on their net earnings you will realize at the end of the next twelve years a larger sum of money than you can realize under the system proposed by this bill, and with the large amount of property on which the Government has a just claim, amounting to more than $144,000,000 above all liabilities, can any gentleman be apprehensive that this great debt will be lost, unless these corporations exercise the same control over us that they did when the act of 1864 was passed, the passage of which I very well remember.

Take this other corporation, the Central Pacific. The net earnings of this company last year—of course they are now somewhat less—were $7,820,371.41, as stated in the report.

Mr. CRISP. That is for the whole system, is it not?

Mr. HOLMAN. I speak of the Central Pacific road. If the able gentleman at the head of the Bureau of Railroads has confounded branch roads (with which we have nothing to do) with the Central Pacific, I am not to blame. I am simply reading from his report. Fifty per cent. on $7,820,371.41—and if you should take even 60 per cent. it would be but just, if you should take the whole to meet the debt due the Government no fair-minded man could complain; but even at 50 per cent. the arrangement would be far better than what is proposed by this bill, without reference to the misfortune of extending this enormous debt and the connection of the Government with these corporations during this longer period of seventy years.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then I understand the gentleman to maintain that the committee are mistaken both in their facts and in their conclusions.

Mr. HOLMAN. All I have said is based on this public record of your Commissioner of Railroads. I have taken my figures from his report.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has now twenty-two minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this matter must be passed upon after so brief a discussion as has been permitted. The Committee on Pacific Railroads has already reported to this House for its favorable consideration a joint resolution introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commission of three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough and careful investigation of the affairs of the Pacific Railroads. The salary of each member of this commission is fixed at $3,000 per annum for the time during which the commission may be occupied, which would lead us to infer that it would take some time for this commission to complete the arduous labors which this joint resolution is designed to impose upon them. The committee in their report to the House upon this resolution use the following language:

The committee are of opinion that an examination should be made into the workings and financial management of the Pacific railroads that have received aid from the Government in bonds or lands, to ascertain whether they have observed all the obligations imposed upon them by the laws under which they received such aid, or which have been since passed in reference thereto.

In view of the vast interest the Government has in these railroads, and its liability for them, it is of the utmost importance that Congress shall know whether or not said obligations have been and are being disregarded by said companies. It is, by the committee, deemed important that the system of keeping the books and accounts of the roads be also investigated. The committee have reasons to believe that their books are not so kept as to show properly their net earnings. It is important to ascertain if there have been diversions of the earnings of said aided roads to less productive unaided branches, or any other wrongful or improper purpose, and if so, to what extent; and also whether or not there have been discriminations in rates in favor of unaided as against aided roads. Your committee are of opinion that considerable money is due to the United States from said railroads on account of mistaken or erroneous reports, settlements, or accounts made and rendered by them. Further, it is believed that proceeds of the trust funds or lands loaned or granted them have been diverted from their lawful use.

To the end that an investigation may be had covering these alleged evils and irregularities, your committee are of opinion that the Secretary of the Interior should be clothed with power and have the necessary funds provided him with which to make such examination.

The resolution providing for this commission appropriates, I believe, $30,000 for the purpose of paying the expenses of the commission. Now, I ask this committee and this House—I do not desire an answer now, but in the time of the gentlemen on the other side—of what avail is this investigation, what purpose is to be accomplished by it, unless it is to enlighten this House and the Senate upon just such a subject as that which we have now before us?

Mr. DUNN. We desire to pass that resolution to-day as well as this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want the resolution passed; I am in favor of its passage; but are we going to pass the present bill, putting this question out of our hands for seventy years, and afterward institute this investigation into the affairs of these companies to ascertain whether they have complied with the law?

Mr. DUNN rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no time to yield. Let gentlemen answer in their own time. I want some gentleman to state why an investigation of this sort should be instituted after you have permanently disposed of this question by legislation.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. What assurance has the gentleman that the Senate will pass this bill if the House passes it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I assume that it will. It never fails to pass a good thing for the railroad companies.

Mr. Speaker, we are told that this bill is to be of great advantage to the Government. In the report submitted by the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] it is shown that under this bill the railroad companies embraced within its provisions will pay to the Government $3,757,496 a year for seventy years, at the end of which time the principal and interest of the indebtedness due by the railroad companies to the United States will be liquidated. Now, is this a good arrangement for the Government? That is the question before this House to-day. What is the present condition of things? The railroad companies covered by this bill owe the Government to-day $109,000,000. Are they able to pay it? Will they be able in the future to pay this sum? Does the Government need to go about looking for new securities in order to make this indebtedness worth its par value?

Mr. Speaker, what will be the condition of this country seventy years hence? What will it be at the end of eleven years when it is provided the first payment shall be made?

Mr. DUNN. The first payment is to be made next year.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am speaking of payments under the law without any further legislation. I maintain, sir, this is a good investment for the Government. In eleven years from now the population of this country will have increased many millions, and that largely increased population will be settled principally upon the lines of these several railroads. Seventy years from this time there will be perhaps 200,000,000 of people within the limits of the United States; and the vast plains of the West, which are now little better in most places than a "howling wilderness," will abound in wealth and be seats of empire composed of many prosperous communities.

The Government, therefore, to my mind, has a good investment in these roads, and ought to hold on to it. I desire to recur for a moment to the time when in 1864 we held the first mortgage on these roads, and when Congress surrendered that first mortgage, believing in so doing it was accomplishing a good thing in then helping these roads out of difficulty, thereby securing their rapid completion. We gave them that great advantage then, but I hope gentlemen will pause before giving them now an advantage even greater than they had at that time.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the present indebtedness of the Pacific railroads to the United States amounts to $109,000,000. This indebtedness consists of bonds issued to the Pacific railroads drawing 6 per cent. interest, amounting to $64,623,512, and the balance of interest paid by the United States over and above the interest paid by the companies to the credit of the bonds and interest account. I hold that the railroad companies are able to pay this intebtedness and that the Government has a good security for it. It is worth its face in bonds drawing 3 per cent. interest. If so funded into bonds drawing 3 per cent. interest, the interest account would amount to $3,270,000 a year; and in seventy years the companies would pay in interest at this rate an aggregate of $228,900,000.

The principal of $109,000,000 would still remain due and unpaid. Under the provisions of the pending bill, according to the report submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], if the bill is passed the railroad companies would pay to the United States the sum of $3,757,496 annually for seventy years, at which time the whole amount of principal and interest would be liquidated. The aggregate payments at this rate, under the bill, in seventy years would amount to $263,024,720. Subtracting from this sum the $228,900,000 which the Government would receive as interest upon the present indebtedness at 3 per cent., would leave a difference of $34,000,000; in other words, under the present bill the companies would pay but $34,000,000 more in seventy years in interest than they would if their present indebtedness was funded at 3 per cent.

But at the end of seventy years, under the present bill, the entire principal and interest would be extinguished. But by funding the present indebtedness at 3 per cent. the excess of interest would amount to but $34,000,000, while the whole amount of principal would still remain unpaid. Therefore, deducting the $34,000,000 of excess of interest from the principal of $109,000,000, we would have left $75,000,000 of principal of the debt remaining unpaid and due the United States. Hence the advantage to the railroad companies in paying this indebtedness in the manner provided in the pending bill amounts in round numbers to $75,000,000 as compared with the payment of their present indebtedness in the same length of time funded into bonds bearing 3 per cent. interest.

In 1864, when the first lien of the Government was made a second lien, a great advantage was obtained by the railroad company. The action of Congress at that time has been severely condemned by the people of this country. But if this bill passes, even a much greater advantage than ever attained heretofore will be obtained by the railroad companies. If we consider their indebtedness as worth its face and 3 per cent. interest, the advantage in the seventy years covered by this bill amounts, as I have already said, to $75,000,000. The representatives of the people should consider well what they are doing. There is no necessity for this haste. Let us postpone consideration of this bill until December next, and in the mean time secure the investigation of the affairs of the railroad companies, which is provided for in the resolution to which I have already referred. Are we prepared to say, by an act of Congress, that the Pacific roads are entitled to a further bounty of $75,000,000 from the Government?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is $109,000,000 at a period not yet commenced.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the interest is accruing at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on the $64,000,000 of bonds, and the railroad companies must pay it all back to us some time or other. I maintain they are able to do so, and the future will show they can pay this indebtedness.

Now, what are these lines of railroads which owe this large indebtedness to the United States? They are among the greatest of modern undertakings. That they are to be useless in the future is to deny the truth of all history and to close our eyes to all past experience. We must not forget the character of the country through which these roads run, or the fact that population increases in our country at the rate of more than a million of inhabitants every year.

If we are to suppose these railroads in the future are to be profitable to those who own them, then rather than pass this bill let things remain as they now are, or amend the Thurman act and secure our just and legal rights. If in eleven years these companies can not make profitable arrangements with us, let us enforce the liens which we hold upon them by paying the prior liens, and we will own the entire property, unless they can meet both liens. But by this bill you put it out of the power of the Government to deal with the subject for seventy years. You place it out of the control of Congress to interfere with these companies, if they pay this sum annually, for seventy long years. I am not particular what will be the condition of things seventy years hence; I do not think I will be here; but, sir, when that time shall have come, I hope those who will then be in existence will turn back to the files of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and see what good reason was given for the passage of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has my friend considered the fact that the Central Pacific Railroad has been transferred by a long lease for ninety-nine years?

Mr. HENLEY. For ninety-nine years, to a Kentucky corporation, taking it out of the jurisdiction of the courts of the different States through which it passes, and the passage of this act would have the effect by Congress to relieve that company by that extraordinary transaction.

Mr. DUNN. No; the lien carries with it all the obligations the Central owes the Government. It is expressly so stipulated.

Mr. HENLEY. It is the monetary obligations, not the governmental obligations. The object of that transfer was to get rid of the legal jurisdiction of the courts there.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman from California say they can make a transfer of their property which would deprive the United States of any of its rights?

Mr. HENLEY. I do not say that. I do not know; but that is the claim of the company.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know what the company claims, but I know what the facts are.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am aware of the facts suggested by the gentlemen from Indiana and California; and I know in addition that this bill would simply give the Government an additional lien or mortgage upon the property. It simply takes possession of other property which is already heavily mortgaged.

Mr. DUNN. Here is the value: We get the branch lines, the Government now only having security on the trunk lines.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not dispute the fact we get this additional security, for I have just stated it; but we take the branch lines, with all of their liabilities and debts, and the great sums of money which the gentleman has cited here as coming into our possession are not assets at all, but debts and obligations of these companies; and in such a transaction as this we are simply taking additional security subject to the liabilities and indebtedness which the companies have already assumed on these roads. We take a lien subject to an indebtedness equal to the bonded debt and capital of the roads.

Mr. DUNN. But the Union and Central now own these bonds.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; but they are debts, not assets; we are to get their debts and hold them as additional security for the debts they owe, and that is all there is of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before we deliberately pass a measure of this importance, stretching over a vast period of time, we should stop at least long enough to investigate the facts and understand what we are about to do. I would prefer, for my own part, the postponement of this bill until the first Monday in December next, and in the mean time this commission could go on as proposed by the resolution to which I have referred, make their investigation, and come in and submit their report to Congress, showing whether the present security is good or not, and whether we need additional branch lines and other bonded indebtedness to make us secure.

If they make their report, as I believe they will, that this is one of the richest properties in the world, then there will be no necessity for such legislation, because we will secure the debt we have against the company. They may report that the value of the property is in excess of the amount of the indebtedness of the roads, and that even if the Government debt is a second mortgage it is well secured and will bring its full value in all the markets of the world. If that be the report, then to-day we are guilty of a great breach of trust as the representatives of the people in giving the railroad companies the privileges and advantages which this bill would secure to them. It will give them an additional pecuniary advantage amounting to at least $75,000,000 and not render any more secure the claim of the Government.

Therefore, in the interest of the people of this country who have been once before betrayed in the house of their friends in the allowance of a first mortgage to be put on this property as against their own, I plead that we shall not now allow another act to be passed which will put this great property out of our control for a period of seventy years. Let us gather all of the facts, and then in December, when we meet again and the report is laid before us, we may all be willing to agree that this bill should pass; but if, on the contrary, the facts submitted be such as I anticipate they will be, then we can intelligently say it ought not to pass.

There is no necessity for such haste about it. It is eleven years before this indebtedness is due, and consequently there is no need of pressing the matter through the House in such hot haste. Let us wait and get a little more light. Let us get the results of this investigation. Let us understand if we are really in extremis, as we are led to believe by the arguments which we have heard here to-day. For myself, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Government of the United States needs this alleged additional security. I believe all the provisions of this bill will inure not to the benefit of the Government, but to the benefit of the railroad companies; and it certainly will be so under this act.

This vast and valuable property is subject to our lien. If it is not worth the lien then it is worthless to us, for we have to take it for better or worse, with all of its indebtedness, under this arrangement. If the indebtedness is secured and the railroad companies can pay it, then we do not need this, the alleged advantages of this bill. If our indebtedness on the other hand is not secured, if the roads are worthless, we can not get our money under any circumstances. The individual stockholders are not coming forward as a mere matter of charity to help the Government out of its dilemma.

They are going to run it as long as it proves to be profitable to them; when it proves to be unprofitable to them they will give it up. So if it is worthless and if this bill is passed, we will get it without the passage of this bill, and we do not need the passage of the bill to enable us to do so. On the other hand, if it is valuable, as I believe it to be, then we have no reason to anticipate that our claims will not be paid in full. They may not be able to pay to-day.

This bill is not dealing with to-day. It is spreading itself over two or three generations, and therefore there is no necessity for haste; but, on the contrary, we should go slowly, and take great care not to make any mistake on this important subject. Let us investigate first and legislate afterward, and not legislate first and then proceed to investigate the railroads to ascertain their condition, their ability to pay, and the value of the Government's lien. A few months' delay can not possibly embarrass the Government or hazard any of our present advantages. But hasty action may prove to be detrimental to the interests of the Government and bring upon us the just condemnation of the people.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield the remainder of the time to my colleague [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. The Union Pacific Railroad, or system of railroads, owes the United States more than a hundred millions of dollars, counting in the sixty-four millions of bonds guaranteed, which to all appearances we shall be compelled to pay. After one attempt by the Thurman act to compel the road to keep its contract and save the Government harmless, the amount of indebtedness to the Government continues to increase. In fact we have a hard bargain with the railroad company, one in which the company or companies fall further short of their engagements each succeeding year.

This bill is intended to fund, extend the time of payment, and increase the security for the final payment of the debt guaranteed by the Government. Were I assured the bill would accomplish its purpose I would vote for it, and it may be my own fault that I do not have that assurance, for I have confidence in both the intelligence and the purpose of the committee from which the bill comes.

The corporation, or men composing it, availed themselves of what turned out to be an enormous grant, built the road, squeezed all there was in it into their own pockets, in fact left it something of a wreck in the hands of men for the most part in no way responsible for the monstrous frauds practiced by their predecessors on the Government and the people. Our duty is now to make the most we can out of what is left—to deal rightly with the situation as we find it.

In the discussion much has been said of the bad bargain and alleged bad faith of the legislation of 1864 on this subject. Well, sir, viewed from this standpoint, it was a bad or hard bargain. If my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] had been here then and as wise as they are now, twenty-two years later, they probably would not have been parties to its ratification. [Laughter]. They talk as if they believed we had given away a first-mortgage lien upon a railroad. Why, sir, in 1862 a grant had been made to certain parties; yes, to any parties or anybody who would build a railroad to California and tie it fast onto the Union. Nobody under that legislation put a spade in the ground or built any road. Two years afterward, and after we had tried in vain to obtain the building of the road under the first grant, it became apparent to all that the capital of the country would not take the risk of the enterprise. It substantially declared the capital of the country will not stand second; if you, the representatives of the people, want the railroad built the Government must take the second place and the first risk.

I remember, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does, some of the occurrences of the occasion. The gentlemen charged with legislation then (the majority) were on the other side of the Hall. They were especially charged with or took to themselves the control of legislation affecting the conduct of the war. They said from the other side, this grant has been made and offered to the capital of the country and is yet unaccepted. Nobody will under this offer build a road to the Pacific Ocean. Is my time out, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I hope his time will be extended.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will give the gentleman three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts has any time to give.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Can not the time be extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to proceed five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON. I think if any one will take the trouble to inspect the House Journal it will be found that many members were in doubt as to their votes and more declined to vote than voted for the law now criticised. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] voted no; I voted ay. I was just out of the Army, a Union man, and he professed to be [laughter], and I believe was. Then, as now, in California there was a bright, intelligent people, largely Southern men, with big brains and big hearts, whose sympathies and aspirations were with the South, and they desired to cast their fortunes with the South also. Men of the North wanted to tie them on to the North. Half way between us and California were a people alien to us in religion and in everything unfriendly. The question was presented, or believed to be presented, here, will we tie the people of California on with iron bands and bring them near to us, or take the risk, by refusing to do so, of allowing them to unite with the South, as many of their leading men desired to do?

I agreed with those who wanted to bring them near to us by enabling us to get near to them, and as I remember, after some effort to get it amended, voted for it, and, as I always do, assume whatever responsibility belongs to me. [Applause.] At the time it appeared to me to be the right thing to do, and none of the wise critics of to-day know that it was not the right thing to do. Nearly all, I think all, my anti-war colleagues voted against the bill or did not vote at all. And at that time, while I believed I was tying on California (for the Pacific road bill was then a war measure), many of those who now regard that legislation as a betrayal of the people's interests were beating about the bush and very uncertain on every public question of that time.

With the lights before us to-day it is a very easy thing to talk of grants to great corporations. The grant was an invitation to the capital of the country, an invitation to invest in what was believed to be a most hazardous enterprise, probably never to be undertaken by anybody, but of great national interest. The gentleman from Indiana or my colleague or the gentleman from Iowa was at liberty to invest in it.

I think if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] had been here he might have voted as I did; perhaps not. Some of the best men in the country voted against it, and some did not vote at all. The two distinguished gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Messrs. KELLEY and RANDALL] were members at the time, but did not vote.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Julian and Mr. English voted for it.

Mr. MORRISON. Several of my colleagues from Illinois did not vote, but I did.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My question is, whether it is not the fact that for years preceding that date the Government had been paying $7,200,000 for transportation from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and whether that has not been reduced more than one-half by the building of this road?

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman is most likely correct, but I do not know the facts. In fact, I did not then count things by dollars [laughter] so much as in later years.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the time has not expired I wish to ask my friend a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has one minute left.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the time the acts passed in 1864, had there not been a careful survey made of the route over which the road was to run from the Pacific Ocean to the Mississippi River? Had not the character of the country become to be better known, and was it not understood that the undertaking would not be so extraordinary or perilous as in former years it had been supposed to be? And did not these facts which I have here mentioned come to light soon after the passage of the act?

Mr. MORRISON. Possibly, but that did not afford us any light when the act was passed and when nothing was known here of any survey. The question was presented: "Gentlemen will you build this railroad to the Pacific? Will you take the risk, or will you leave it unbuilt?" That was all the light we had.

Mr. HOLMAN. The corporation had been formed?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; corporators were in the act of 1862, and there was, I think, an organization, a paper organization; no road; and I have heard and believe that whatever survey was made was not by the corporation or men who afterward built the road.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I should be content but for the statements of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to leave this argument wholly to others; but I propose to assume the full responsibility for the part I have taken in this matter, and I propose that those two gentlemen shall assume before the country their proper responsibility for the representations they have made here. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior. He is in the habit of examining figures, and the statement he made was calculated to mislead this House. I have before me the identical document used by him. On it I find marks that refer to the figures to which he called attention.

In the book, in connection with the figures, in connection with the identical statements from which the gentleman read, are clear and distinct refutations of what he has said here. He stated to you that the assets of the Union Pacific Railway Company were two hundred and fifty million and odd dollars, when there was included in that statement the unsubsidized lines, to which we have no claim and on which we have no lien. There are 2,687 miles of line of that sort.

The gentleman stated that the net earnings of the Union Pacific Railway were $8,738,407.55, when the very same book, in the very same connection——

Mr. HOLMAN. What page?

Mr. CRISP. Page 597. The very next page after that from which the gentleman read shows that the net earnings of that company, within the meaning of the Thurman act, were $4,540,880.62.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is not marked, is it? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. That is not marked, but I am marking it now for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman point to the page that he refers to?

Mr. CRISP. It is page 597, the one following that from which the distinguished gentleman from Indiana read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman present in his speech the whole of that table?

Mr. CRISP. I present here a refutation of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana. And mark, I called the gentleman's attention to it at the time, and so did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. We told him that the figures he was giving were not the net earnings within the meaning of the Thurman act.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that this table reads as follows——

Mr. CRISP. I do not yield, Mr. Speaker. I have but five minutes. If the House will give me five minutes more I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes, and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] also have five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed ten minutes more.

Mr. HENLEY. There will be no unanimous consent unless the same privilege is given to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] asks unanimous consent that five minutes' additional time be allowed to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to amend by making it ten.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Under the order of the House the previous question is ordered upon this bill at 4 o'clock to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that this extension of time, if granted, will extend the time under the order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I object.

Several MEMBERS. "Withdraw the objection!"

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] object?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I understand the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. HENLEY. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated the request. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has asked unanimous consent that five minutes' additional time be given to the gentleman from Georgia and five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I sought to amend that proposition so as to allow ten minutes to each gentleman.

Mr. HENLEY. Five minutes are enough; I have no objection to five minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that ten minutes——

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I withdraw the proposition.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, five minutes will be allowed to each of the gentlemen named, and the time for taking the vote will be extended accordingly. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN (to Mr. CRISP). Now go ahead and occupy your time.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman from Indiana desires now to make his explanation I would be glad to have him do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have five minutes, and will answer the gentleman when he is through.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa (to Mr. CRISP). You can reserve two or three minutes of your time.

Mr. CRISP. I will try to see that I have time for a reply, if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the figures which I have quoted in the hearing of the House are in the report. They were and they are before the gentleman from Indiana, and while there is a statement in this report that the net earnings were as he says $8,738,407.55, the same statement shows further on that the net earnings within the meaning of the Thurman act, so far as this Government has anything to do with the question, were about half of that sum. Now why did the gentleman make that statement?

As to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the gentleman from Indiana said the net earnings were $7,820,371.41. That is marked in the book, but when it comes to the net earnings within the meaning of the Thurman act—the earnings of the subsidized lines, not those vast lines designated on the map by red lines, but the subsidized lines indicated by the black lines—when it comes to the net earnings within the meaning of the Thurman act the amount is $1,212,526.45.

And this is the distinguished gentleman that is posing in this House as the friend of the people, when he is seeking by statements of that kind to keep this House from endeavoring to collect the just debts due the Government! I say to him, sir, and I say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that they may not, with my consent, pose here as the friends of the Treasury, when by resorting to such means as that they are endeavoring to prevent those who are honestly the friends of the Government from collecting what is justly its due. Those gentlemen can not, by seeking to excite prejudices in reference to the past acts of these corporations, blind the eyes of business men to the present facts.

I reserve the minute and a half that I have remaining until the gentleman from Indiana gets through.

By virtue of the leave granted me by the House I append the following tables, taken from the report of Commissioner of Railroads, embraced in the report of the Secretary of the Interior made November 1, 1885, showing the net earnings of the Union and Cental Pacific Railroads on the subsidized and unsubsidized lines together and also on the subsidized lines alone, under the rule established by the Thurman act of 1878; the first beginning on page 594 of report of Secretary of Interior and ending on page 597, the second beginning on page 604 and ending on page 606 of said report:

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us see now who is correct. Let this public document speak the truth, and let us see whether gentlemen who thought proper to applaud a discourteous statement did an honorable thing. I I have this record from which I read before me—the report of the Commissioner of Railroads. There is first the statement (page 592) that the Union Pacific road is composed of the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific, and the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company. Gentlemen are aware that these are portions of the Union Pacific system. Then there is a "a comparative statement of earnings and expenses of the Union Pacific Railway Company"—the Union Pacific Railway Company. Let us see now who should apologize to the House.

Comparative statement of earnings and expenses of the Union Pacific Railway Company.

Every word and figure of this table shall go into my remarks unless objection is made.

Here is the table (page 595, Executive Document 1, part 5, first session Forty-ninth Congress):

Then follows a statement of "net earnings, average per mile;" "earnings per mile;" "expenses per mile;" "net earnings per mile;" "percentage of expenses and earnings."

Mr. DUNN. That includes all the unsubsidized lines——

Mr. HOLMAN. It embraces what I have read.

Mr. DUNN. Over 3,000 miles.

Mr. HOLMAN. It embraces what I have read—"comparative statement of earnings and expenses of the Union Pacific Railway Company;" and it gives the earnings as I have read them. No gentleman who has this document before him can fail to see that this display of passion was not the result apparently of a fair controversy over a question of what a public record states.

Turning further, here is a comparative statement of the earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad and the Western Pacific, both subsidized roads under the name of the Central Pacific, net earnings $7,820,371.41; "earnings per mile;" "expenses per mile;" "percentage of expenses of earnings." There are the tables, gentlemen.

There are the tables; and if the gentleman can point out an error in the statement made by your public officers let him do it.

I publish the whole of the tables, and the country will see what the truth is.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman may publish it. I ask nothing better than an appeal to the country on a question of this sort. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, in a business body like this, so far as I am concerned, in every judgment I make I seek to be guided by business principles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to put in both of the tables.

Mr. CRISP. I ask to put in both of the tables.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask by unanimous consent that leave be granted to all gentlemen on either side of the House who may wish to do so to print remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. It seems to me they are undertaking to dispose of a very important measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THROCKMORTON] has yielded the floor to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I move the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, the relations of the Pacific railroads with the Government of the United States come down to us as legislative legacies of former Congresses, out of which have grown burdens and liabilities increasing in weight with time, until now some additional legislation seems absolutely necessary to prevent the probability of a total wreck of the interests of the people therein involved.

In the consideration of such legislative measures present conditions and future relief are subjects more profitable for discussion and will be more fruitful of results than denunciations of these corporations for past transgressions, richly deserving of such denunciations though they are as I believe. The experience of the past, however, should be drawn upon for present guidance, and in view of such additional aid our action now will not receive the charitable consideration that was invoked and accorded to our predecessors, who grappled with an enterprise looked upon by many as visionary and impracticable.

HISTORY OF PACIFIC RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

For a brief history of Pacific railroad legislation I quote from the report of the committee as follows:

On the 1st day of July, 1862, Congress passed "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," by which lands and bonds were granted to certain railroads therein mentioned, to aid in their construction. By section 6 of said act it was provided "that the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, &c., and all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid. Said company may also pay the United States, wholly or in part, in the same or other bonds, Treasury notes, or other evidences of debt against the United States, to be allowed at par; and after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least 5 per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also annually be applied to the payment thereof.

The grant in lands and bonds was doubled by the act of July 2, 1864, and many other powers given the companies, among which was to place a first mortgage upon their railroads equal in amount to the subsidy in bonds given by the Government, and prior in lien to the lien heretofore held by the Government. (See section 10, act of 1864.)

* * * * * * *

It is evident that when the bonds were given to aid the roads the intention was for them to provide out of their assets for the payment of the interest as it fell due, and also to provide a 5 per cent. sinking fund, which would retire the principal at the end of twenty years from the completion of the roads. It was stated upon the floor of Congress, and generally believed, that the compensation then being paid out for transportation of mails and Government supplies, all of which would be carried by the roads, along the routes aided, was nearly double the interest on the subsidy bonds, and that to retain one-half of said compensation would be sufficient in the hands of the Government to meet the interest payments, leaving the 5 per cent. of net earnings to liquidate the principal and any interest left unsettled. So by the fifth section of the act of 1864 it was provided "that only one-half of the compensation for services rendered for the Government by said companies shall be required to be applied to the payment of the bonds issued by the Government in aid of the construction of said roads."

The words in the act of 1862 to which all compensation was to be applied were "bonds and interest;" the term here used is simply "bonds," nothing being said about interest; from which we might reasonably conclude that there was a fixed determination to have the interest paid from time to time, if it took all the compensation to do it, but a willingness to remit one-half, so far as the bonds themselves were concerned, leaving the 5 per cent. to take care of them.

* * * * * * *

After the bonds were received by the roads, and transportation commenced, the officers of the Treasury gave such a construction to the act of 1864 that they only retained one-half the compensation for any purpose, and the 5 per cent. of net earnings. It was found that this sum was wholly inadequate to repay the interest which the Government had to pay out semi-annually for the roads, and by an act of March 3, 1873, afterwards carried into section 5260 of the Revised Statutes, Congress again directed that the Secretary of the Treasury withhold "all payments to any railroad company, and its assigns, on account of freights or transportation over their respective roads of any kind, to the amount of payments made by the United States for interest upon bonds of the United States issued to any such company, and which shall not have been reimbursed, together with the 5 per cent. of net earnings due and unapplied as provided by law," and then provided for suit to be brought by any company for transportation, which is practically a declaration by Congress that the whole should be retained and applied, if it can legally be done, to the payment of interest. After the passage of this act the officers of the Treasury withheld all payments from the roads on the accounts mentioned and applied them to the payment of interest until May 7, 1878, when Congress passed what is known as the "Thurman sinking-fund act." We regret to say this act, in financial results, has not fully met the expectations of its authors, for it was not then foreseen that the 6, 5, and 4 per cent. Government bonds might be called in and extended at a lower rate. But it established one most important point—the control of the Government over these companies.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS.

By this we find that the grants under the first act, which by reason of the wonderful developments brought about through the agencies created by governmental grants, raised them to that princely degree we know them to be now, but not realized then, yet were insufficient to induce capital to invest in the undertaking, and the enterprise languished until the passage of the amendatory acts of 1864 doubling the land grants, reducing the application of compensation for governmental transportation to one-half, and permitting a mortgage of equal amount to the subsidy of the Government to be placed ahead of it as the first lien upon the road.

GOVERNMENT TRANSPORTATION COMPENSATION.

As is stated in the report of the committee, it was believed that one-half of the charges for the transportation of the mails and Government supplies, which, according to the report of the Secretary of War made in March, 1862, averaged for the five years previous, for the transportation of mails, troops, and munitions of war between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and intermediate points, $7,309,341 annually, would be sufficient to repay the interest on the subsidy bonds, and the 5 per cent. would wipe out the principal before maturity; but the building of the roads immediately reduced the cost of transportation to insignificant figures in comparison with previous cost.

LITIGATION BETWEEN THE COMPANIES AND THE GOVERNMENT.

Various questions have arisen resulting in litigation between the corporations and the United States, the most important of which, as to whether the companies were obliged to pay the interest upon the bonds until the maturity of the principal, was decided by the Supreme Court in favor of the railroads and against the Government.

THURMAN ACT OF 1878.

Following this came the Thurman act, from which so much was expected, and which in financial results, as stated in the report, has not yielded according to the expectation of its authors. Under its provisions the Union Pacific Company paid to the Government for the year ending December 31, 1885, the sum of $1,184,053.05, while the amount actually paid by the Government for this company for that period was $2,012,370.72, showing a deficiency in the interest account of $828,317.67 for one year.

Brief extracts from the report of the committee will enable us to reach an understanding of the situation as it now confronts us:

The act of May 7, 1878, was expected to keep down the indebtedness of the roads, but it has failed to do so. The unpaid interest accounts have continued to increase from year to year, and will continue to do so until the maturity of the subsidy bonds. The total debt amounts now to $109,249,527.62. This is an enormous debt, increasing more than $1,500,000 a year, and will mature in about twelve years, for the payment of which no provision is being made by the companies voluntarily. There seems to be a fear, possibly with some foundation, that they are discriminating in through freights against the subsidized roads. The receipts upon this portion of the large roads upon which the lien exists are declining, while upon several of the branch roads not subject to the lien the earnings are increasing. Whether this is at the expense of the former is an unsettled question.

"How far it may be to the interest of the owners and controllers of the Union and Central Pacific to build parallel roads, surround and cut off the trade legitimately belonging to the subsidized roads as population increases in the West and States grow up, and thereby render these lines useful only to their systems and profitable only to them, can only be determined by their present conduct. If they are strangling them now, it is not without a purpose, and we may expect a continuation of this policy. The tendency of this is to endanger the final payment of the debt which will soon be due the Government."

The Canada Pacific must interfere to some extent with their transcontinental traffic hereafter.

The Northern Pacific has withdrawn from these lines a large proportion of the trade of Oregon, Washington, and Montana. The Atlantic and Pacific, as a central line, competes directly for the trade of San Francisco, Central California, and the intervening territory.

The Southern Pacific competes directly for the trade of Southern California, and thus is withdrawn to sustain these three great competing lines a large proportion of the traffic upon which the earnings of the Central and Union Pacific companies depend. Apart from all questions of traffic purposely diverted from the subsidized and non-subsidized roads, if any there be, the necessary and natural competition between these same roads seriously impairs the earnings of both and renders the payment of this enormous debt at least doubtful under any system which depends upon the levying of a percentage of net earnings.

Your committee has therefore come to the conclusion that the best interests of the Government and a just regard for the interests of the stockholders, thousands of whom have purchased their stock since the year 1878, and of the communities through which the roads run, requires that some method be devised whereby the Government shall be secured the certain payment of all the money it has advanced to the Pacific Railroads, and that the immediate commencement of payment thereon in fixed semi-annual amounts be arranged for. * * *

The present board of Government directors, all of whom were appointed during the year of 1885, in their report of January 30, 1886, among other things say:

RELATIONS OF THE RAILWAY COMPANY TO THE GOVERNMENT.

The salient feature in the relations of the Union Pacific to the Government is that the road is a debtor to the Government to a very large amount, the debt being secured only by a second mortgage upon a portion of the property of the company. Under these circumstances there has grown up an uneasiness on the part of Congress lest the debt to the United States might be finally lost, and legislation has been had with a view to prevent that result.

But the legislation had so far seems admitted upon all sides to have failed of its object and to have brought about a state of affairs which calls for early action.

For some years every Secretary of the Treasury, every Commissioner of Railroads, and every board of Government directors, has reported to Congress that the Thurman act, under conditions changed since its passage, is yearly locking up in comparative idleness large sums of money, to the mutual loss and injury of debtor and creditor.

* * * * * * *

As matters now stand, the debt of the road is growing larger from year to year, and the time of its maturity is not far distant. The uncertain attitude and intentions of the Government are calculated to impair the credit of the company and not only hamper it in efforts to secure its present and future business on a safe foundation, but even, in case of a serious financial crisis, to threaten grave present disaster.

This is so clear and so simple that no argument seems necessary to enforce it.

The Government is the principal creditor of the company, and has power to precipitate it into bankruptcy should it choose to exercise it. To let matters alone is practically to exercise the power, for every year that a settlement is postponed the position of the company is weakened.

The course of the Government should be that which any practical business man would pursue with a private debtor in a similar situation.

He would first estimate carefully the value of the debtor's business, and decide whether it was such that it could reasonably be expected to pay off the debt, if extended and made to fall due in installments.

If satisfied that it could, the creditor, while maintaining his lien upon the property, would promptly make whatever announcements and arrangements might be necessary to establish the general credit of the debtor in his business, and enable him to extend it, and put it upon the firmest foundation possible.

And in estimating what extension of time could be given, and what installments should be paid, a prudent business man would allow some margin for possible fluctuations in business, as well as a reasonable support for the debtor, to assure a faithful and competent management of the business.

It is for Congress to apply these principles to the case of the Union Pacific road.

The following table will exhibit the status of the account with each of these roads June 30, 1885, taken from the public-debt statement and report of the Commissioner of Railroads for 1885.

WHAT IS BEST NOW TO DO?

And this brings us to the consideration of what is best now to do. The present amount of the debt is over $109,000,000, which, under existing conditions, is increasing about $1,600,000 yearly; and yet the companies are seemingly acting in compliance with the law. The question suggests itself, why do not the yields under the Thurman act correspond in increase to the increase of percentage of the net earnings as required by that act? And I know of no better answer than that any system which is based upon a percentage of earnings of a business in which the accounts are kept by one of the partners (and this in effect is the relationship under existing law between the Government and these corporations), in which freight tariffs between the main lines and branches over which there is no governmental lien are arranged and adjusted by the different managers who yet have a common interest, the inevitable result must be to place the largest benefits to the credit of the represented interests at the expense of the unrepresented interest, which in these arrangements means the Government of the United States.

And upon this point the Government directors in their last report say:

PAYMENTS BASED ON NET EARNINGS.

Under the existing laws the annual payments by the railway company to the Government are made to depend upon the net earnings of the company. The expression "net earnings" is so indefinite and vague that parties adversely interested will rarely agree upon a definition without the decision of a court upon disputed points, and new points are liable to arise year by year. For this reason alone it is most desirable that in any new legislation the amount of the annual payments should be a definitely fixed sum, to be paid absolutely, without regard to net earnings, gross earnings, or any contingency whatever; and, when this change is made in the present laws, the restrictions upon the financial operations of the company imposed to protect the annual net earnings should be removed that the company may be unembarrassed in the use of its credit. As before stated, it is of vital importance to the company, and to the Government as its principal creditor, that the company shall not be left behind by its rivals in occupying adjacent territory with branch lines, and in securing or keeping open important connections. It can only do this by being as free as its rivals are to use its credit promptly as contingencies may arise.

The lien of the Government, of course, should remain paramount and unaffected by any possible event; but under that condition the company should be given full liberty and the usual powers possessed by railroad companies to develop and extend its system and do all things pertinent to its business at its own risk.

Hence one of the main features kept in view by the committee in the bill presented was to abolish the partnership relation between the Government and the companies and establish that of debtor and creditor by fixity of payments, irrespective of earning exhibits, book-keeping systems, or tariff adjustments among each other. Into this calculation enters the ability of the companies to make the payments and meet the conditions imposed. It is claimed by the corporations that the burdens imposed by this bill are heavier than their present circumstances and prospects will bear, but the official returns and reports induce the committee to believe that the amounts required can be met without endangering their ability to make and continue the payments of interest and finally extinguish the principal of the indebtedness.

The question may arise: Can not we safely insist upon larger payments? Can we not amend the Thurman act by simply changing the requirements of the Government and increase the percentage from 25 to 40 or 50, or even 75 per cent.? The objection to this has already been generally stated. The increase from 5 to 25 per cent. has failed to satisfactorily swell the results.

THE EXISTING PLAN IS DEFECTIVE.

The plan is defective, the system is at fault, and the financial results are a failure as the figures prove. To be sure, this same feature or plan will be continued in a more stringent form by making the percentage 40 instead of as now 25 per cent., if the companies refuse to accept the provisions of this bill, should it become law. But as their acceptance is necessary to the change this seems to be the only policy, defective though it be, that can be pursued. It is an alternative which I hope will not be forced upon us, but if it is, I venture to predict that the object for which we are striving, namely, the payment of current interest and ultimate extinction of the debt, will not be materially advanced.

Why not, then, it may be asked, adopt the substantial features of the committee's bill, that of extension, but reduce the time so that the payments will be larger and the end be sooner reached?

QUESTION OF THE TIME OF EXTENSION.

In the matter of time there are several features to consider. It will perhaps be admitted that wisdom dictates that the governmental demands should not be crowded to the extreme of the present earning ability of these roads. As stated in the report, the competition of the Northern Pacific, the Atlantic and Pacific, and the Southern Pacific has already seriously impaired the earning capacity of the subsidized roads, while the Canadian Pacific will undoubtedly soon interfere with their transcontinental traffic.

STOCKHOLDERS' INTERESTS.

But back of all this are the interests of the stockholders, which we are bound to consider, from selfish motives if no other. The question arises, what concern have we in the stockholders? Their rights and interests are behind those of the Government. For the stockholders per se we need have no care. The cry that the stock has been largely transferred to innocent and honest holders, who have invested their moneys in good faith, since the dishonest manipulators have unloaded at enormous and ill-gotten profits, need not move us a particle, nor need the widows-and-orphans dodge appeal to our sympathies. That is a bulwark behind which many a soulless, merciless, and plundering corporation has sought shelter and protection from outraged public sentiment. Business investments recognize no such distinctions. Speculative enterprises distribute the burdens and the hazard according to the amounts involved, irrespective of sex or age. But this fact remains, that the management of these corporations continues in the hands of directors chosen by the stockholders. Reduce the returns to the stockholders to nothing and their interest in the management of the roads will keep pace. Impose burdens which will prevent dividends or destroy the expectation of dividends for half a century and the price of such stock will be but nominal. It will become the prey of stock-jobbers and the football of Wall street. Its value will consist chiefly in the control of its management. The money that there will be in such management will be the measure and criterion of the worth of its stock. The result would be reckless and corrupt management under a skinning process, inability to meet governmental requirements, and the ultimate transfer of ownership to the United States, which I assume is a result above all others to be deplored and avoided.

Hence the interests of the stockholders, good, bad, and indifferent, so far as they impair or advance the interests of the Government, are properly objects of our solicitude and no further.

And in this view we are ably sustained by Senator Thurman, who stated, when reporting his act—that the committee had recognized the fact that it is for the interest not only of the companies but of the country that the public and the stockholders should receive some reasonable dividends, because where roads pay dividends they are always better managed than where they pay none.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

The extension of the time for the money payments already made and hereafter required to be made by the United States in accordance with existing obligations, with the methods of carrying into effect the plan upon which such extension is based, are set out in detail in the report of the committee.

In substance it amounts to this: The present actual indebtedness is first ascertained. Into this calculation enters all of the moneys paid and to be paid by the United States. This includes the difference between the 6 per cent. rate of interest until maturity of the bonds for which the Government is holden and the 3 per cent. interest which the companies will be required to pay hereafter. From this is deducted the sums already paid by the companies. This present indebtedness so arrived at is divided into one hundred and forty semi-annual parts. To each part is added the interest on the sums remaining unpaid from half-year to half-year until the final extinguishment of debt.

This is the practical outcome of the transaction and its substantial effect, although the details of the arrangement are changed so as to distribute the strain upon the companies equally over the term and within their probable earning abilities. By making the payments uniform throughout the term the first half will not reach the figures of equal installments of principal and interest on unpaid sums added, while the latter half will exceed in the same proportion, and thus produce equality and fairness between the Government and the companies. To illustrate this without going through the entire mass of figures I take the case of the Union Pacific company and the present worth of its indebtedness, as shown in the report, which I assume to be correct:

The figures of present indebtedness are $52,897,885.55, divided into one hundred and forty equal parts	$377,842 00
Add 3 per cent. interest, six months, on principal	793,468 28
Total payment first six months	1,171,310 28
Payment required by the proposed plan	903,617 03
This would show a deficiency of	267,693 25

Which deficiency each six months would grow less, and finally develop into a surplus, growing each half-year, and exactly counterbalance the deficiencies of the early payments, the last payment, for instance, furnishing an excess of $514,439.77. The fixed payment of $903,617.03 semi-annually is supposed to be the product of an exact equalization of the payments, based upon one hundred and forty semi-annual installments, one of which, with interest on the sums remaining from time to time unpaid, being paid each half-year. These results of figures have been demonstrated, and furnished to the committee by expert official accountants, and I assume that they are correct.

ADDITIONAL SECURITY.

Section 2 of the proposed act provides that the statutory lien and security now existing shall remain, and in addition be extended to cover all stocks, bonds, or securities of every kind or description, and all railroads now owned or hereafter constructed or acquired, and all franchises, telegraph lines, rolling-stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description. It would seem as if this was comprehensive enough to reach everything, and if anything has been omitted I am sure the committee would be glad to include it. Now, as it has been claimed that this additional security amounts to nothing, let us examine the facts and see if that be so. On page 139 of the last report of the Union Pacific Company the following statement shows:

Number of miles of Union Pacific Railroad Company	1,832
Number of miles of its branch lines	3,308
Debt per mile, irrespective of stock, on the Union Pacific Railroad Company	$71,763 00
Debt per mile, irrespective of stock, on branch lines	9,263 00
Total fixed charges for the year ending September 30, 1885, per mile, for the Union Pacific Railroad Company	3,477 67
Same for the branch lines	562 43

The debt of the Union Pacific Railroad Company ahead of the Government per mile is more than twice that of the branch lines.

The branch lines have grown in mileage until they are nearly double that of the trunk or main line. The limbs have outgrown the body, and over the limbs we have now no controlling power. It may become financially cheaper for the Union Pacific Company to form a new company, build another main line, and abandon the old one to the tender mercies of the first-mortgage bondholders and the Government of the United States. Those two liens are in the neighborhood of $40,000 per mile, and this statement, with the possible outcome of a failure on the part of the Government to fasten its grasp on the entire system, to my mind gives to the additional security its chief value.

The opinions of the Government directors on the value of the branch lines is interesting:

BRANCH LINES.

The directors can not emphasize too strongly the value to the Union Pacific of its auxiliary or branch-line system as a whole. Some of the lines, it is true, are injudiciously located and in themselves are only operated at a loss. But as feeders to the main line all have a value which does not appear on their own balance-sheets.

In fact, without them the main line would to-day be a bankrupt property.

OTHER FEATURES.

The same section gives to the companies the right to use and dispose of their property or assets in the ordinary, proper, and lawful course of their current business.

With regard to this privilege, I desire to say for myself, inasmuch as it is realized that the settlement of these vast financial transactions extending so far into the future will be adjudged wise or unwise by those who come after us according to the degree of success attained, there seems to be attached to this permission a defect, which the committee, in the general features of its plan, have sought to avoid—that is, the uncertainties or contingencies depending upon the correctness of company books or statements, and the necessity of governmental supervision of their transactions, which at best must be comparatively superficial. But there seems to be no way to avoid the objections without paralyzing the ability of the corporations upon which depends the payment of the indebtedness to the Government. We might tighten the grip, and in so doing strangle the subject, which, should it ever fall into the possession of the Government, I venture to predict, will prove to be a blasted trunk, furnishing rich pickings for official favorites in the endeavor to keep the surplus of the Treasury circulating as life-blood in a decaying corpse.

But this privilege we find they now enjoy under existing law, and the committee have added that it shall not be exercised in violation or diminution of the security and lien of the Government, requiring also reports of such transactions to be made within thirty days to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Then, again, they are permitted to extend the payment of or refund the indebtedness now prior to that of the Government. This privilege I apprehend now exists under and by virtue of the act of March, 1873, but the committee limits the rate of interest to 4 per cent. per annum instead of 6 per cent. as now being paid. This limitation would prevent the managers, if so disposed, from extending these bonds on long time at a high rate of interest and disposing of them to favored parties. This also reduces the amount of interest on bonds paramount to those of the Government, and which must first be paid, and in such protection of its own interests the Government necessarily protects to that degree the interests of the stockholders.

Other sections provide that nothing is to be paid by the Government for or on account of transportation services until the installment next maturing shall have been paid, as well as matured debts and interest secured by a paramount lien.

Failure for six months to meet the payments as required makes the whole indebtedness due and payable, and all the rights and securities of the United States shall be thereupon enforced.

ADDITIONAL PROTECTION TO THE INTERESTS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Section 10 embraces the last of the important features of the bill and deserves careful consideration. It seeks to provide a remedy for the protection of the interests of the Government which does not now exist, and which interests might be cut off.

Under existing law, if foreclosure of the mortgage prior to the lien of the Government is brought about by intentional or unavoidable default in interest payments the Government has not the power of an ordinary second mortgagee to bid in or force up the bidding on the property, because the authority to do so does not now exist. This provision in the bill vests such power in the President of the United States whenever in his opinion it shall be deemed necessary to use it in the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of these companies upon which there exists liens or incumbrances paramount to those of the Government. It enables the Secretary of the Treasury to pay off such prior incumbrance and collect repayment from the companies within twelve months, or upon failure of the companies to make such repayment their whole indebtedness to the United States shall become due and payable, and all its rights shall thereupon be enforced. The exercise of this power rests entirely upon the opinion and discretion of the President.

The provision adds no new liability to the Government, but creates an additional safeguard to prevent total loss in consequence of the foreclosure of the prior liens.

RECAPITULATION.

This, in substance, comprises the salient features of the bill. The future may not approve of it as the wisest measure to have adopted, but with the collective wisdom of this House to perfect its details and the experience of the past to guide us, it would seem as if some legislation might be effected which will justify the committee in their assertion of the claim that this bill presents the basis of a plan that promises the collection of the people's money by a simple, sensible, and practical business-like method. In its substantial points it is in harmony, I believe, with the views of the Railroad Commissioner, the Government directors, the Secretary of the Interior, and of a unanimous committee. It largely increases the existing requirements of annual payments into the United States Treasury; requires the payment of over $40,000,000 before the debt and interest are due and payable according to the Supreme Court decision; enables us to foreclose at any time after a six months' default, instead of being compelled to wait until 1898, according to the existing law; avoids the necessity of supervision of the bookkeeping system of the companies, at which I have no doubt the Government has been and would hereafter be beaten; wipes out a partnership relation between the Government and the corporations, where the profits seem to have gone to the companies and the losses to the Government; and brings down our business transactions with them to the simpler basis of debtor and creditor, adding no new liability to the Government, releasing no security now in hand, extending our lien over everything the railroads own, and which, whether much or little be added, embraces everything they have.

CONCLUSION.

If the desire be to chastise these corporations for past transgressions I might be favorably inclined to any plan tending in that direction the execution of which will not punish the Government the more. If the desire be to secure the repayment of advances made and to be made out of the public Treasury, then we must adopt a plan other than that based upon existing laws, for that has been tried and found wanting. If, however, the desire be to secure governmental control and ownership of these roads, then indeed it is entirely consistent to oppose this bill, oppose all legislation involving changes; but the cost of such a step should be well considered and not buried in an avalanche of denunciation for past misdeeds, and which will likely result in a total governmental expenditure of nearly $200,000,000. I object to the cost and am opposed to the policy of governmental ownership and management of railroads.

In conclusion, I trust that in this bill the legal meshes have been drawn close enough to prevent the corporations from slipping through, but the responsibility for this I leave upon others of the committee—all being lawyers, except one, besides myself.

I know this of law, that it is good to let alone, and that litigation is a luxury the poor can not afford and the rich do not enjoy, even so wealthy a client as the Government of the United States.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I yield to my colleague [Mr. OUTHWAITE] for the purpose of enabling him to offer an amendment which he has been instructed by the committee to present.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to offer an amendment to the second section, authorized by the committee, and which provides that instead of the companies having authority to refund or extend their debt when it becomes due, they may refund or extend it before it becomes due, so that the sooner it can be refunded at a low rate of interest, 4 per cent., the sooner the Government security will be extended, and so that the company will be able to take advantage of any favorable turn in the money market before the debt becomes due.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "balance," in section 2, line 37; the words "which it may be unable to pay when the same shall become due according to the terms of said section," in lines 39, 40, and 41; and the words "such balance of," in line 49.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent the previous question was ordered upon this bill at 4 o'clock to day.

The SPEAKER. The time was extended by unanimous consent for fifteen minutes longer.

Mr. CRISP. That time having arrived, I ask that the vote be now taken; or I am willing, and I think the committee are willing, that the vote shall be postponed until Monday, when we shall have a fuller House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit an amendment before the question is taken.

Mr. CRISP. The previous question has been ordered by the unanimous action of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to amend section 8, line 7, by striking out "forty" and inserting "fifty;" so as to make it read: "Fifty per cent. of their annual net earnings."

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair was absent at the moment when the order of the House was made, and does not know exactly what were its terms.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I have no authority from the committee, but speaking for myself, I have no objection at all to making the proportion 50 per cent., none in the world. But, Mr. Speaker, it was agreed that the previous question should be considered as ordered upon the passage of this bill at 4 o'clock to-day.

The SPEAKER. Not upon its passage; upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CRISP. Very well. Now, for myself, I am perfectly willing to have a vote upon the amendment which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] proposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8, line 7, by striking out the word "forty" and inserting the word "fifty;" making the clause read "so failing, from and after the 1st day of July, 1886, 50 per cent. of their annual net earnings," &c.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the first Monday in December next?

The SPEAKER. As soon as the operation of the previous question has been exhausted that motion will be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I give notice that I shall make that motion.

Mr. CRISP. And I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I shall ask the House to order the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Even then a motion to recommit will be in order.

Mr. CRISP. Yes; but not a motion to postpone.

The amendment offered by Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on ordering this bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, called for a division, but withdrew the call, saying, "I will take it on the final passage of the bill."

Several members renewed the call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 40.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Florida, Mr. DOUGHERTY, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP, to act as tellers.

Mr. HENLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to make a proposition which I think will facilitate business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we will have an adjournment.

Mr. CRISP. I hope the House will hear the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. That is not in the control of the Chair when gentlemen demand the regular order.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 58, noes 79.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, if the House will allow me I will say in behalf of the committee that we know the time from now until 5 o'clock can be consumed, and therefore we do not propose to engage in any contest about it. We make no objection to the House adjourning now, but give notice that on next Tuesday, under the special order which we already have, we shall ask the House to vote on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. SPRINGER. I insist upon my demand unless gentlemen will agree to let this bill rest and take up the resolution providing for an investigation. Let us take that up and pass it; I am sure we can pass it without objection.

Mr. CRISP. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. HENLEY. No, sir; I do not withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays insisted upon?

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. Upon this motion the ayes are 58 and the noes are 79; so the House refuses to adjourn.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw that motion in order that we may take up and consider the resolution ordering an investigation.

Mr. CRISP. If there is no objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time I will yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. If the bill now under consideration be laid aside, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], under the order of the House, has a right to call up the resolution.

Mr. CRISP. I call up that resolution.

Mr. HENLEY. I insist upon the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion has been lost; the Chair has already announced that it was lost.

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair distinctly asked whether the demand for the yeas and nays was insisted upon, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who made the demand, said that it was not insisted upon; whereupon the Chair announced the result of the vote—ayes 58, noes 79, and declared the motion lost.

The gentleman from Georgia now calls up for consideration——

Mr. CRISP. On consultation with the committee I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I make the point of order that the House has just voted down that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that, no intervening business having transpired, the motion to adjourn is not in order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has called up a resolution which the Clerk will read.

Mr. CRISP. On further consultation with the committee I decline to call up the resolution at this time.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House adjourns without final disposition of the matter now under consideration, will it come up as a special order on Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as a special order on any day that the committee desire to call it up not otherwise set apart; but of course the question of consideration can be raised against it.

Mr. PAYSON. Under the rules, is the question of order just propounded such intervening business as authorizes the motion to adjourn to be now made?

The SPEAKER. That is not business of the House; it is simply a question addressed to the Chair.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock and 59 minutes a. m. Monday next.

Mr. REAGAN. Has the previous question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It has been ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill; not upon its passage. That is the present status of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does that give the bill any other status than as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It will remain as unfinished business unless called up some other time under the special order assigning two days to this committee.

The gentleman from Indiana now moves that the House take a recess until Monday next at 10 o'clock and 59 minutes a. m.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Delia Clark Hurd, daughter of Robert M. Clark, and of Jesse Corgyle, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. C. WHITE: Petition of G. W. Dempsey and others, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILKINS: Petition from Dan Brown Post, No. 380, Grand Army of the Republic, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 7, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRISON presented a petition of J. H. Cissell and 168 other citizens of Indiana and Illinois, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1579, for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, and Senate bill No. 1405, in relation to the study of the effects of stimulants and narcotics on the human system; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the State board of agriculture of Maine, praying for the passage of a bill preventing the illegal sale of imitation dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Robert Purvis, Mrs. J. Haines, and other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the better legal protection of young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, favoring the adoption by Congress at its present session of such measures as may be deemed most effectual to repress attempts that may be made by threats, intimidation, or violence to disturb the peaceful flow of commerce among the States, and to protect the rights and provide for the security of all citizens lawfully engaged in such traffic. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Amos Romine, of Holliday, Fayette County, Illinois, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of the Farmers' Club, of Columbia County, New York, and a petition of 76 citizens of Taberg, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing all imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. COCKRELL presented resolutions of the Chicago Freight Bureau Association, praying the passage of the bill (S. 1877) relating to trade from foreign countries; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2065) to extend the act of June 15, 1880, to all homestead entries;

A bill (S. 1613) in relation to homestead entries;

A bill (S. 1415) to promote the reclamation of the desert lands of the United States;

A bill (S. 1913) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories;" and

A bill (S. 2241) providing in certain cases for the forfeiture of wagon-road grants in the State of Oregon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2428) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2438) to authorize the Postmaster-General to allow compensation to railroad companies in certain cases for apartment service heretofore furnished pursuant to agreement, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1232) granting an increase of pension to John S. Hale, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2610) to secure a larger circulation of United States notes of the denominations of $1 and $2; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2611) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2612) making an appropriation for the purchase of Fairbanks & Co.'s infallible American gold and silver coin scale and counterfeit-coin detector for use in the post-offices throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2613) granting badges to the officers of the Greely relief party; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2614) granting a pension to William Daly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2615) to authorize the payment of certain expenses of the Territory of Utah, and to secure the payment of the indebtedness of said Territory to the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 2616) for the relief of M. W. Locke, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMDEN introduced a bill (S. 2617) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MAHONE and Mr. SPOONER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. HARRIS. Some days ago I was appointed upon the select committee raised for the purpose of investigating the administration of the Indian Office in respect to Indian traders. In view of the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been from his boyhood among my most intimate and fastest personal friends, while I would flatter myself with the hope of being able to impartially perform the duties of such committeeman, I hardly think it proper for me to undertake their discharge. In view of that intimate relation which has so long existed, I ask the Senate to excuse me from service on that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that he be excused from service on the select committee in respect to Indian traderships. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee whether under all the circumstances he would not feel justified in moving to lay that resolution upon the table. It would be for the Senator, I think, from his position and his relations to the Commissioner, if anybody, to make that motion. There is evidently a disposition on the part of the Senate to decline to pursue that investigation.

I am free to think that the members of the Senate are actuated by a feeling of deserved confidence in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and if that is the opinion of the Senate itself it is hardly worth while to pursue the investigation. If some Senator standing in the relation to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that the Senator from Tennessee does would feel it proper and due to him to make the motion, I suggest that a motion be made to lay that resolution upon the table.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust that this matter will pass over for the present until my colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa], who introduced the resolution, comes in and his attention can be called to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will indulge me a single moment to say that the reason I have already stated, my very intimate and close friendship to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, would certainly prevent me from making any such motion or any such suggestion as the one made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Being perfectly satisfied that the administration of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the office over which he presides can stand the test of any scrutiny or any examination which can be made, I could not as his friend seem to shrink, but on the contrary I court the fullest measure of investigation and the most rigid investigation; and he, I know, feels exactly the same way.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I made the suggestion, if the President of the Senate will allow me, as the Senator from Tennessee must be aware, because I thought that no one else could afford to make it if the Senator from Tennessee could not. If the Senator from Tennessee in his relations to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not feel that it ought to be made, certainly I do not make the suggestion. I spoke because of a feeling I have that no good would result from the investigation.

BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a House bill for reference.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine."

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The question is on that motion.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the motion is put I desire to say that I recognize the fact that all the petitions and papers in relation to the oleomargarine and butterine question have been referred to and considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The bill now before the Senate on the question of reference was considered in the other House by the Committee on Agriculture and reported favorably. At the same time this bill as it comes to us from the House appears to contain a tax. If it is to be considered as a tax bill certainly the Committee on Finance should have jurisdiction of it. If it is to be considered as a question in relation to agriculture, then it ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture.

I will merely say that while I have no disposition to arrogate for the Committee on Finance any undue advantage in relation to this matter, if the motion of the Senator from New York should not prevail I shall then feel bound to make a motion to have the bill referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST. I hope the bill will go to the Committee on Finance. My vote in regard to the measure will be determined by the simple question as to whether the Government needs the revenue to be raised under this taxation or not.

I have examined the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. It is a revenue bill or it is nothing. I do not undertake to say what is the position of any Senator except myself upon this matter. For one, I believe that the question whether oleomargarine or butterine is a fraudulent compound and deleterious to health is not to be determined by the Senate of the United States; but that under the Constitution that question has been delegated to the States, and to the States alone.

It therefore depends with me, as to my action upon the bill, whether the revenue it proposes to raise, which is estimated to be from twelve to twenty million dollars, is necessary for the purposes of the Government or not. I believe in taxing for revenue and for revenue alone, and so believing I want to hear from the Committee on Finance whether the Government needs this amount of money in order that it shall be properly carried on.

I hope that the bill will go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. Did I understand the chairman of the Committee on Finance to move to strike out "the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry" and insert "the Committee on Finance?"

Mr. VEST. No; he did not.

Mr. BECK. Then I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order. The question must be taken on motions to refer in the order in which motions are presented, under the rule.

Mr. BECK. Is not a motion to refer amendable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. BECK. I thought it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the rule it is expressly provided that it shall not be amendable. The Chair will call attention to the rule. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXVI.

1. When motions are made for reference of a subject to a select committee, or to a standing committee, the question of reference to a standing committee shall be put first; and a motion simply to refer shall not be open to amendment, except to add instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to amend can only be to instruct the committee; but if the motion to refer to the Committee on Agriculture is voted down, then it will be in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. Then in view of the ruling of the President of the Senate, I only desire to say that if the pending motion is voted down I shall move to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

I think if Senators will look at the bill they will readily understand that if the bill as it came from the House does not go to the Finance Committee, it is hard to imagine any bill that ought to go to that committee. A tariff bill might as well go to the Committee on Agriculture, for that has to do with farmers, with their shoes and stockings, their sugar, their salt, and everything else. If this is to go to that committee because it deals with butter, they had better take charge of all the matters pertaining to the thousand things that the Committee on Finance is supposed to have to deal with, whisky, tobacco, and everything else.

That this bill is a bill purporting to raise revenue and dealing with revenue matters I suppose is too plain for argument. Take section 3 of the bill, which reads:

That special taxes are imposed as follows:

Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer of oleomargarine.

Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480.

It is provided that retail dealers shall pay so much. Then there shall be a tax of 5 cents a pound. Originally it was 10 cents, but the tax was reduced to 5 cents in the other House. Every item of it deals with taxation and with licenses, and with those particular questions of which the Committee on Finance have had charge always. I think it is a question too plain for argument, and I shall not delay the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I do not desire to enter into any discussion of the merits of this measure at this time. The bill comes to us from the other House, having been perfected there in the Committee on Agriculture, having passed the House entirely under the charge of that committee, as the RECORD will show, never having been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, which corresponds to the Finance Committee of this body.

By the common consent of the Senate thus far a vast number of petitions upon this subject, amounting to many thousands, have been referred to the Agricultural Committee at this session. Several bills have been introduced in the Senate regarding the manufacture and sale of imitation butter, which have been referred to that committee. The Committee on Agriculture has already considered the matter at several meetings. It has given two or three public hearings on this question, very important hearings, and it proposes, of course, if the bill shall be referred to it to give other public hearings, to the opponents as well as to the friends of the measure.

What will be the condition of the bill when it shall reappear from that committee, if referred there, I can not tell—whether there will be anything of a tax in it or not. I know nothing whatever about the views of the individual members of that committee. I have not thought it wise or proper that I should in any way interrogate the members of the committee as to their views upon it.

I simply desire to say that if anything can properly be referred to the Agricultural Committee it is certainly this whole subject, and as the committee has been considering it for several weeks it certainly would advance the interests of the public business in this body if the bill should go there, and should be acted upon finally by that committee, and then reported back to the Senate. If then it should come here in such a shape as the Senate thought it wise and proper that it should be referred to some other committee for consideration upon any of its provisions, certainly the Senate would have it within its power to do it.

But I believe it to be unwise and unjust to the great agricultural interests of this country that this measure, which has thus far been considered by a committee appointed for considering questions of this kind, should be taken from that committee and given to another committee which in the nature of the business that comes before it has neither made this subject or any other subject pertaining to the agriculture of the country a particular study. I submit, however, to the judgment of the Senate as to the committee to which the bill shall go.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not conceive how any bill can be properly referred to the Committee on Finance if another committee is entitled to the jurisdiction of this bill. It is a tax bill and nothing else, and refers in every one of its provisions to the taxation of an article of merchandise and the regulation of its sale by the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department.

The Senator from New York says that this subject has been considered by the Committee on Agriculture. How has it been considered by that committee? Not by any express direction of the Senate. The Senator himself, or some other Senator, introduced a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Agriculture without discussion and without objection. That committee in this way, and in this way alone, obtained jurisdiction of this question, and have been considering it.

The Senator from New York says that the bill affects the agricultural interests of the country. Does not the tax upon whisky affect the agricultural interests of the country? Has not the tax upon tobacco something to do with the agricultural interests of the country? If we are to send every tax bill that relates to, or interests, or affects the agricultural interests of the country to the Committee on Agriculture they would usurp all the functions of the Committee on Finance and all other committees of the Senate.

A motion to refer this question of taxation to another committee than the Committee on Finance is equivalent to a vote of want of confidence on the part of the Senate in the committee to which by its own rules and by universal precedents such questions have hitherto been sent.

Mr. MCPHERSON. As I look at the case, the question is simply this: Is it a revenue bill or is it not? If it is a revenue bill it clearly belongs to the Committee on Finance. Is the Senator from New York ready to say that it is not a revenue bill?

Mr. MILLER. As I said before, I do not care to go into a discussion of the bill, but I certainly hope under this bill, or any other that we may pass, no revenue will be derived at all, for I hope the legislation passed here will forever make such a fraudulent manufacture as the imitation of butter impossible in this country. I will state that frankly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is not an answer to the question to say that the tax should be so high that it would tax one industry out of existence for the sake of protecting another. That certainly does not answer the question I put to the Senator from New York.

The simple fact that petitions have been referred to the Committee on Agriculture to my mind means nothing, because perhaps when those petitions came to the Senate no legislation was constructed and the petitions referred to legislation which might be made touching the question.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will permit me to state that perhaps he has not noticed the wording of the petitions. The wording of nearly every petition which has been presented here has been directly in favor of a tax upon the manufacture of oleomargarine, and with that understanding they were sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It would be very difficult to devise a bill by which the object sought to be attained in this matter could be reached except by a tax. That is very evident to everybody.

As to the petitions which are in possession of the Committee on Agriculture, I presume the Committee on Finance could examine those petitions and could pass upon them perhaps fairly and equitably; and as it is a very important question, which touches to my mind rather a new system of taxation in this country, and one that requires careful consideration, it would seem to me to be unwise to send the bill to any other committee than the one which has jurisdiction of those matters. I think no Senator should contend for a moment that the bill ought to go anywhere else but to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. As has been stated by the chairman of the committee, all along, by general consent, it has been understood in the Senate that this subject-matter belonged to the Committee on Agriculture. Various bills have been before it and are there now; hearings have been had and petitions have been considered by the Committee on Agriculture touching this subject. It has never until very lately been suggested that this movement for legislation upon the subject of oleomargarine was connected with the revenue subject incidentally. The main purpose of it is to afford some remedy for an attack which has been made under false pretenses, as I allege, upon the great dairy interests of the country, one of the principal divisions of the agricultural interests of the American people, in which more than twenty-five million American people are engaged to-day.

The matter of a tax has never been understood to be anything more than an incidental one and as affording the necessary revenue by which the necessary expenses of an inspection should be derived, so that there might not be by reason of this legislation and the attempted remedy of this great evil any additional burdens upon the finances of the country. It is only by considering an incident that the Committee on Finance can claim jurisdiction of this subject-matter.

As has been well suggested, if after a primary consideration of the main question, which is that of some method of affording a remedy for this great evil of substituting a fraudulent manufacture for the genuine article to be purchased in the market as an article of food, if after the general question has been considered, the matter of tax should still be retained in the bill and it should come from the Committee on Agriculture as a bill involving taxation to some extent, then there could be no impropriety in referring it to the Committee on Finance; but in the first instance it seems to me that the bill ought to go where everybody has understood the main question to belong, to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MAXEY. If the bill is to be regarded as a bill in the interest of the public health, then it is untenable in my judgment, because the police powers are exclusively in the States. They were so before the adoption of the Constitution, were not parted with in that instrument, and are intact in the States as much so to-day as they were before the adoption of the Constitution, and so the Supreme Court have said.

Even if it be regarded as a bill in the interest of public health the Committee on Agriculture has nothing to do with it. If it be regarded, as it must be regarded, as a revenue measure, then it necessarily belongs to the Committee on Finance and can not belong otherwise. For that reason it seems to me that it is conclusive that in any event the bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, only one word more. That this is a tax bill, as I said, is too obvious for argument. Whatever petitions or bills may have been sent to the Committee on Agriculture, or whatever conclusions they may have arrived at in regard to the matters sent before them, they have reported nothing. We are now dealing with the House bill independent altogether of what may have been sent to the Senate Committee on Agriculture, either in the form of bills or petitions, and independent altogether of their action, for they have not acted.

We are to determine whether the bill sent from the House of Representatives is a tax bill or not. That it is, no man will deny. That it can be made the basis of amendment in the Senate to attach to it free tobacco, free whisky, free salt, free coal, free anything, no man will deny. Being a bill of that character, I say it would not be fair in the Senate—I do not use the term in any improper sense—to deprive of the consideration of the bill the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the ex-Secretary of the Treasury, and other gentlemen who have been selected and placed on the Finance Committee for the purpose of looking into all questions of taxation, both as to the necessity of the tax imposed in the bill and as to the necessity of increasing the machinery of the internal revenue with which they are supposed to be familiar, in the way of licenses for wholesale and retail dealers and every other character of business.

The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is himself a member of the Committee on Finance, and he will have an ample opportunity of guarding all the interests of farmers when the bill comes before the committee of which he is a distinguished member.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] a member of the Committee on Finance?

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is a member of the Committee on Finance with full opportunity to present everything that his Committee on Agriculture may see fit to present. It would be an anomaly in the history of American politics for amendments that can be properly offered to this bill and may be considered, to put tobacco upon the free-list, to take up the wine-culture of California, which is being pressed upon us, and free brandy that they seek to fortify their wines with, or free salt, or free sugar, or free anything, or to rearrange our whole tariff system upon a bill before the Committee on Agriculture.

When the last tariff act was passed it passed the Senate first and never was passed by the other House until we sent it there. Why? Because they had sent us an internal-revenue tax bill upon which we based the whole tariff taxation. When I was a member of the other House if I recollect aright, a question involving free salt alone came to the Senate, and a whole tariff bill was based upon that and sent back to the House as an amendment.

The House bill which I hold in my hand can be amended; and the committee, selected because of their familiarity with questions of that sort, whose sole business it has been to see whether more revenue was needed, what guards should be placed over it, what amendments it would recommend or reject, are to be deprived of a bill like this covering all these consequences, when there can be no possible detriment to any farming interest or any detriment to any gentleman who may desire to offer amendments to it in that committee, of which, as I said, the Senator from New York is himself a distinguished member. By every reason and for every reason the bill ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, a single word and I shall not trouble the Senate again on this question at present.

Every argument which the Senator from Kentucky has presented in favor of the reference of this bill to the Finance Committee could have been made with equal force in the House of Representatives for sending it to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is it in order to refer to what has been done in the other branch of Congress?

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will not trouble himself too much about this I will not infringe on parliamentary rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island raise a question of order?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will suspend. The Senator from Rhode Island will state his question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. That it is not in order to discuss what has been done in another branch of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is hardly considered in the nature of a question of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call the attention of the Chair to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Parliamentary rules forbid such reference; but it is hardly a question of order.

Mr. MILLER. We all know that this bill has passed the other House. The message which was delivered to the Senate when the bill was sent here stated the fact that it had passed the House of Representatives. It is no more an improper reference to say that the bill went through the Committee on Agriculture of the House than to say that it went through the House itself.

The Senator from Kentucky says it would be no reflection on the agricultural interests of this country or no detriment to them to have the bill sent to the other committee. I do not undertake to say how either one of these committees would act upon this matter; but when the House of Representatives has considered the bill in one committee and has upon the report of that committee acted upon it and sent it to this body, I say it would be a direct reflection upon the agricultural interests of the country, and it would be understood by them to be inimical to their interests if it should be sent to any other committee of the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I happen to know that a number of the leading oleomargarine manufacturers of this country have been writing letters to Senators in this body asking them to prevent the reference of this bill to the Agricultural Committee and to vote to send it to the Finance Committee. Senators here have shown me those letters, and I state what I know to be a fact. This is a contest which comes up at the very beginning, and we are to decide here and now whether the agricultural interests of this country can have a fair hearing in this body or not. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from New York before he takes his seat what feature of this bill requires the consideration of the Agricultural Committee?

Mr. MILLER. The whole subject has been considered by the Committee on Agriculture for the last six weeks or more in all its bearings.

Mr. BUTLER. What feature in this bill is there that the Agricultural Committee can consider on the face of the measure?

Mr. MILLER. It is properly a bill which the Agricultural Committee can consider and has been considering.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course the Agricultural Committee can consider it, but I can not see that the Agricultural Committee have jurisdiction of the subject. It is one purely of taxation, as I understand, and simply because somewhere else a committee on agriculture may have considered it furnishes no reason why we should send it to that committee.

Mr. MILLER. It is not simply a bill of taxation and of revenue. It is a bill to regulate and control what is claimed to be a fraudulent industry in this country. It reaches much further and away beyond the question of revenue. The question of revenue is the least important question in the whole measure.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the bill is a fraud upon its face if it is not intended for the purpose of raising revenue.

Mr. MILLER. It is not a fraud on its face, for it is a bill to regulate the sale and manufacture of imitation butter.

Mr. BUTLER. It comes in here under false pretenses. If it is not for the purpose of raising revenue it has no business in this body or any other legislative body. If this Senate is to take jurisdiction of every fraudulent industry in this country, we should do very little else. I trust the bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance, where it properly belongs, for if it is not intended to raise revenue for this Government it comes to the Senate under false pretenses.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if I understood him correctly as saying that certain letters were in the possession of Senators this morning requesting the reference of this bill to the Committee on Finance? I find that he omitted to state the fact that certain Senators were also in possession of letters asking to have it sent to the Committee on Agriculture. I do not know which are the more numerous. In my mail this morning I found several letters asking me to vote to send the bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the Senator that if he has not received any letter from any oleomargarine manufacturer asking him to vote to send this bill to the Finance Committee he is different from many of his colleagues. If he has received numerous petitions signed by thousands of his fellow-citizens of New Jersey asking that the measure shall be passed, and if he has to-day received letters from a large number of the representatives of the agricultural interests of this country to the effect stated, I hope he will be influenced by their voice and by their wish, and that he will carry out that wish by voting to send this bill to the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I take it, sir, that the Senate at least thinks that either the Committee on Agriculture or the Committee on Finance will deal with this question fairly and properly, and I can not understand why a part of the public outside are so much interested in having the matter referred to the Committee on Agriculture. I can not understand what information, if any, they may have touching the probable action of the Finance Committee which leads them to apprehend that its action may be unfriendly. There is something about this that I do not understand. This appears to be clearly a tax bill. As I suppose the Senate of the United States is evidently able to manage such business as is referred to it, and it being a matter relating entirely to finance and one with which the Finance Committee is accustomed to deal, and that is the committee to which all such matters are referred, I can see no good reason why it should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The inquiry of the Senator from New Jersey might be very properly extended to Senators who persist upon changing the direction of this subject-matter. Why the necessity? This subject has already been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and for weeks been considered by that committee. Now, will the Senator emphasize his inquiry by asking why Senators at this time seek to take this subject-matter from the hands of the Committee on Agriculture and refer it to another committee?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will speak for myself. As to a matter involving taxation on any subject, it matters not whether this subject or or any other, I insist upon it that it is proper to refer it to the Committee on Finance and very improper to refer it elsewhere.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But the leading feature in this bill is not taxation. That is a mere incident. Now, I take it there is no expression of opinion by any Senator here as to the merits of this bill or as to the propriety of taxation. I take it not. But the subject-matter itself has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and the taxation is a mere incident. Suppose, forsooth, any other subject, the adulteration of food, if you please, of flour and of medicines, no matter what, was referred to a proper committee of this body—that is not a matter of taxation, it is not a matter of revenue—but suppose in determining that question the proper committee should determine on a license tax, would that then justify on the report of the committee that it should be immediately transferred to the revenue committee, the Committee on Finance? That I understand is substantially the case here. The great question agitating the people at this time who are interested in this question, the oleomargarine manufacturers and the butter-makers, is not the question of taxation, but shall there be anything done to protect the people or the manufacturers of butter? That is the point.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the Senator to state that the object of the bill is not taxation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; not taxation. The object of those introducing the measure in this body and in the other House was not taxation, not the raising of revenue.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I should like to ask the Senator to point out under what authority the Senate acts, and how Congress gets jurisdiction of the question except by its taxing power.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In the first place, the first feature of the bill mentioned in the title is "defining butter."

Mr. BUTLER. What else?

Mr. VAN WYCK. You ask, where does Congress get jurisdiction to define butter?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I do.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Here it is; they have got it. The House has passed it, and that is the main foundation of this matter.

Mr. BUTLER. "Also imposing a tax upon, and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine."

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely. As the Senator sees, the very first words he reads in this bill show that it properly goes to the Committee on Agriculture—"defining butter." What does the Committee on Finance know about butter? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. What does the Committee on Agriculture know about butter? [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN WYCK. Everything about it. [Laughter.] The Senator has taken away his own foundation from under himself. The first clause of this bill shows that it has no place where he seeks to put it. That is all the object there is, nothing else. In seeking that, there are several propositions proposed, and among them this proposition of the House. It does not follow that the Senate Committee on Agriculture will adopt that—not by any means. This is a mere incident to the end. In the first place we desire pure butter, as we might desire purity in any other article that was being adulterated. Is not that a proper matter for the Agricultural Committee?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think it is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then some say oleomargarine is made pure. Other people say no, it is not pure; it is also adulterated with vile compounds, and therefore it is unhealthy. Is not that a proper matter for the Agricultural Committee?

Mr. BUTLER. I think not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Why not? What other committee possibly has to do with it?

Mr. BUTLER. None.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well. The Senator goes too far. He would throw the whole thing out of Congress entirely.

Mr. BUTLER. I would.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well. It is proper to make that statement if he believes it. Others believe it is a proper subject for legislation by the Congress of the United States; and if it be, is not that the suitable committee to consider it? The Senator will concede that, I take it.

Mr. MAXEY. Suppose the Senate should strike out the tax clause of the bill, which the Senator says is the incident and not the principal object, what is there left?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Everything left. The Committee on Agriculture will see that something is put in the place of the tax to secure what they want. [Laughter.] It is exceedingly funny to gentlemen on the other side. What is there left? The bill that was offered in the first place provided for no tax. I do not remember the exact nature of the bill, but no matter now. They may inflict pains and penalties in place of a tax. They may provide that oleomargarine, if made, shall be made according to law, and make violation of law subject to pains and penalties instead of a tax. We may say this shall be a misdemeanor. There is no trouble about substituting that in place of a tax. To define a crime and then provide a penalty for it is not unusual.

Mr. MAXEY. I now ask the Senator where it is that he gets the authority in Congress to impose pains and penalties on the manufacture in the States of the Union of an article on the ground that it is unwholesome to manufacture it? I am not speaking of the District of Columbia or the Territories. This bill goes far beyond them, and enters the States. What authority is there in the Constitution for you to affix pains and penalties on the manufacture or sale of any article produced within the States on the ground that it is unwholesome?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now the Senator from Texas occupies the same ground as the Senator from South Carolina, that we have no business to touch it at all. That is a question not proper to discuss at this time. The question is as to the reference of this bill, not as to the power of Congress to legislate on this subject. That is not it; but the Senators demonstrate their idea of the merits of the bill and want to carry it into the question of reference. Congress has exercised the power to prevent and punish adulterated and deteriorated drugs, medicines, and medicinal preparations, also adding any ingredient or substance to distilled spirits.

Mr. BUTLER. Would the Senator consent to strike out of this bill the taxing feature of it?

Mr. VAN WYCK. When the bill is under consideration by the Senate they will determine what they will strike out or put in. I am not proposing my notions about this matter now.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad to have the Senator's notions.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If my friend will excuse me, I will give them cheerfully and frankly at the proper time. This is not the proper time. We are not discussing the merits of the bill. I want to say that these gentlemen who are so very anxious about the question of reference do not want anything done. They are opposed to anything being done.

Mr. MAXEY. This bill, as we who oppose its reference to the Committee on Agriculture contend, has no reference whatever and nothing in it has any reference whatever to the duties of the Committee on Agriculture. If it has any merit at all, it is as a revenue measure, and only as a revenue measure. If it be a revenue measure, then necessarily it must go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is the idea I was endeavoring to antagonize. It is not necessarily a revenue measure, was not introduced as a revenue measure, and the object was not to add to the revenues in the Treasury. That was not the object. It was not as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] stated in reference to the case of tobacco. Legislation on tobacco is merely for the purpose of revenue. It is not to provide for its production or for any adulteration connected with it, but purely as a measure to increase the revenue. This bill is not for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. How would it be if the question of imposing a tax on the issues of State banks were presented for the first time in the Senate? To what committee would the Senator refer a proposition to impose a tax of 10 per cent. on the issues of State banks? Would that go to the Committee on Commerce, to the Committee on the Judiciary, or the Committee on Finance?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If we were framing a law in regard to the issue of bank bills in any way and if we were legalizing the issue of bank bills or were endeavoring to prevent the issue of counterfeit bills as some persons are now endeavoring to prevent counterfeit butter and other persons were issuing counterfeit bank bills, I suppose if Congress did not want to legalize it they would not place a tax on them but would provide a penalty, and the man who would issue counterfeits they would subject to a fine in dollars and cents, or to imprisonment in the penitentiary, or both. Congress could prohibit by fines and penalties, or if it legalized, could do so on conditions of paying tax, license, or other conditions.

Mr. BUTLER. That was not the question I put to the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska one question. This bill comes from the House. It is referred no matter where. Is it not in order to amend and send to any committee as a legitimate amendment to this bill propositions providing that sugar shall be placed on the free-list, and that tobacco and salt and coal or anything else shall be made free? May not our tariff taxation be modified as a legitimate amendment to this bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have tried the experiment of propounding some strange amendments in the House to this bill and which the movers claimed to be legitimate without sending it to the House Committee on Ways and Means or Finance, and I suppose the same experiments will be indulged in here.

Mr. MCPHERSON. While I admit that it is unparliamentary under our rules to refer to the action of the House, I understand the Senator to say this is not a revenue bill. I should like to ask the Senator as to the action taken elsewhere if it did not receive precedence elsewhere, in the House if you please, because it was a revenue measure, and if it had not been claimed to be a revenue measure it would not have received consideration at all?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If it was a revenue measure in the House, why did it not come from the revenue committee of the House?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They were antagonizing this bill and fought it week after week. Why was it not sent there if it was a revenue bill?

Mr. BECK. I can not state what took place in the House according to the rules, but the Senator from Nebraska will be much astonished perhaps to find that it never could have been considered in the House except that it was put before them as a revenue measure.

Let me ask one more question and I have done. This bill I understand will raise $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 of revenue. We have a surplus of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 now. Will it not be necessary, if $10,000,000 are added to the revenue by this bill, to devise ways and means whereby $10,000,000 should be taken off from something else; and is not that a subject that the Committee on Finance ought to have referred to it?

Mr. VAN WYCK. We will not be embarrassed in using the money raised by this bill, even though we neglect to deduct the amount from other sources of revenue. It seems a strange position that this was considered as a revenue measure in the other House when it was not so considered there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a question of order. I do not want to interrupt my friend from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will state his question of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object most decidedly, and for public reasons that we all understand, to any reference being made to the proceedings of the House of Representatives to influence our action in one way or another. That is a fundamental rule of parliamentary law, and I ask the Chair to enforce it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Chair was called to the rule by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] a few moments ago. It is a parliamentary rule laid down in Jefferson's Manual that no reference shall be made to the proceedings of the other House. The Chair has not usually regarded it, nor has the Senate regarded it, as a question of order, but rather a question of propriety or impropriety on the part of Senators; and the Chair does not feel at liberty to call a Senator to order for that alone unless there be some breach of the positive rules of the Senate which would justify the Chair in calling a Senator to order. Still if it is the desire of the Senate the Chair will interrupt whenever a reference of this kind is made; but it is so frequently made, sometimes in an innocent way, that the Chair would feel very much disinclined to enforce such a rule unless made a mandatory rule of the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose we can get along in discussing this question without alluding directly to what the House of Representatives did, and yet the very bill here shows what the House did. This very bill prints what the action of the House is on this matter; and we must make no allusion to it? Where is the line to be drawn? We are acting upon a House bill? Now I will read it; and will gentlemen say we must not read it because it is a House bill? If I read something from a newspaper, will that be out of order, or from that interesting sheet the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will that be out of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In order to have it distinctly understood, the Chair will read what is said in Jefferson's Manual on this subject:

> It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses. (8 Grey, 22.)

That is undoubtedly the rule of parliamentary law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to enforce it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What was said in the other House, not what was done there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is criticising upon words. It is perfectly well understood in every parliamentary body under a constitution that organizes its legislature into two independent bodies that no influence is to be brought to bear upon the members of one body by what the gentlemen in the other House think or do in respect of a matter; and the only exception—and that is not really an exception to the rule—is the report of a conference committee. Then the Senate conferees and the House conferees have the right to state what the representatives of the other side have said and insisted upon to them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It will be well incidentally that the Committee on Rules should give this matter incidentally serious consideration at some time, because it seems a reflection upon Senators that they are not able to trust themselves to know what has been done or said in the other House. The point of the rule seems that it may affect, control, or influence. I take it from what the Senator from New York said that the butterine manufacturers outside by a letter would do more controlling than any reference to what may have been said or done in the other House on this matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator alludes to me as having raised the question of order I wish to tell him that I am just as much and probably more in favor of the substance, and for all I know the form, of this bill than he is; but I think it right to have the bill go to the committee where only it can stand as a constitutional bill, and that is the tax committee of this body. I do not want to have the Supreme Court of the United States told by and by, when that question is raised, that the Senate recognized and determined that this was a mere evasion and device. I want it to stand on its honest ground as a tax bill, where alone it can stand, guided by the policy of the Government.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I hope the terrors of the Supreme Court will not be thrown at us now, as well as what has been said in the House of Representatives. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I hope not, because you would be more afraid of the court than you would of the House.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; I think there is more danger when honest legislation is concerned. I suppose it is in order for me to read this bill. Let me leave out a few words in the title, if you please, and then see if anybody will object: "A bill defining butter and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine." Will any gentleman object to that bill as it is read to him "defining butter," leaving out only the words "also imposing a tax upon," "and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine?" Would there be any danger of the Supreme Court on that much? Would there be any objection to sending that bill to the Committee on Agriculture if such was the title? If that was the title of the bill, "A bill defining butter and regulating the manufacture, sale, importatiou, and exportation of oleomargarine;" would the Senator from Kentucky think it ought to go to the Finance Committee then?

Mr. BECK. I do not care what the title might be. The provisions of the bill as they are would decide that. I have examined the character of the bill and I find that it is a tax bill all through in every feature of it. Therefore I do not care to answer what might happen in any supposed case. Even if the title were wrong, it could be amended and it would be amended to correspond with what is in the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The object of this bill is evident from what I have read in the title, and the body of the bill corresponds with the same, "A bill defining butter and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine." Suppose that was the only point for consideration by Congress and by the American people; suppose there was no other. Now that matter is presented in this bill, and the House referred it to the proper committee and they considered the proposed question, defining, first, butter, and then regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. Now, what is the proper question for the Agricultural Committee, where properly it belongs? It seems the bill as presented from the House—it comes from the House, I suppose, as it has "H. R.," House of Representatives, on it—the bill in effecting those objects, to secure those matters, among other things provides for the imposition of a tax, which is not the leading idea, which is not the main thing proposed to be done, but the main thing is in the words which I have read. In endeavoring to secure that object they deem it the best way to impose a tax on the manufacture. Whether that is right or not is a matter to be considered by this body when the question comes before it for consideration and action.

That is all there is about the matter. The only question is as to the protection of a farming industry. The oleomargarine is claimed also to be a farming industry, it is said, by those who manufacture it; and they claim it is a farming interest by the fact that it may be made from the fat of cattle and hogs in the manufacture of imitation butter.

Is not that, above all other questions, one which should properly go to the Agricultural Committee? Why take it away from there except for one purpose? As the House would protect butter, as the House provides how to regulate oleomargarine and imitation butter and the exportation and importation of it, that is a matter that would fairly and properly go to that committee. As I said, whether a tax is the best way, I do not know; what the action of the Senate may be on that point, I do not know, and the committee themselves do not know.

There must be an object and a purpose in this. Why, when it has been with this committee for six weeks, should it now be taken away unless it is to place it in the hands of a committee already overworked and already trying to do too much? That is probably the reason why it is to go to that committee, which will not find it convenient to report it so that it may be acted on by the Senate this session. They may not find it convenient because it is impossible for them to attend to it.

It is a new question for them. They have not considered it, and the Committee on Agriculture have been considering it for six weeks. It is a question that has been discussed and in a measure acted upon by that committee. Now tell the country, will you, who are so anxious to take this bill away from where it properly belongs, from that committee which is made to protect the farming industry of this country, let them explain some time to the great agricultural interest of this country which is interested in this why at this time there should be a necessity to take this question away from a committee which understands it in all its bearings as well or better than the Committee on Finance will after they shall have devoted six weeks to its study and examination. Why take it away except for one purpose, and that is to prevent any legislation on this question? There can be no other. If legislation is desired, the subject is before the proper committee; and if you desire no legislation, gentlemen particularly who believe this is no place for the consideration of this question, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] think, can very easily justify themselves in sending it to a committee which can not have the time to examine it thoroughly and will find it impossible to make any report.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to ask a question. The Constitution declares in terms that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." Therefore if the Senate regard this as a tax bill, as it undoubtedly must be, the course which has been pursued toward the bill elsewhere has not the slightest thing on the face of the earth to do with the action of the Senate, which is an independent body, to determine the rules of its own proceedings. The proper proceeding in this case is to refer it to that committee which has been organized for the purpose of looking into revenue measures.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, it is very obvious, as has been suggested by the very title of this bill, that it embraces several subjects, and those subjects should appropriately be sent to one or the other of several committees. It is a bill "defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine."

Various prominent considerations, whose relative importance it is not now proper to discriminate, might carry this bill to the Agricultural Committee, to the Commerce Committee, or to the tax committee. It is not incompetent for this body to take up these various topics of consideration to be submitted to this or to that committee in such order as it deems fit. Now, the main interest of this bill, it will be seen by reading the text of it as well as by looking at the title, does embrace a very extensive subject that belongs to commerce, also a very important question that regards finance or revenue, and also very serious questions, as may occur to the Senate in future debates, that may involve topics which are proper for consideration by the Judiciary Committee.

The substance of this legislation deals with two agricultural products, two food products, two products of the farm, for in whatever way these two food products, these two farm products may be dealt with in the manufacture and sale, the whole question is of dealing with these two products—the dairy products and the oleaginous products from the farm.

I shall vote for a reference of this bill to the Agricultural Committee for the reason that the great interest shown in this matter upon one side and the other is in the nature of the subject as a food product, and the question of the tax is one thereafter to be raised, after the committee having charge of this subject shall have explored and presented it in the aspect that their deliberations and their examinations shall lead them to present it to us. I can not suppose that if this bill should come in from the Committee on Agriculture it would pass the Senate probably without being considered by the Committee on Finance, and possibly not without being considered by the Committee on Commerce. Certainly a large portion of the dealing with these great interests thus presented here has to do strictly with commerce, both domestic commerce and foreign commerce; but at the bottom of both questions of dealing with it in commerce and of dealing with it in revenue, the nature and character of the interest promoting the bill and the opposing interests are of matters that have to do with farm products, and it is so regarded by the people of this country.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the Senator from New York whether he does not regard wool and tobacco as equally farm products, and if the question of taxation in regard to them came up would he not send them to the Committee on Finance?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] on this question.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY.] I do not know how he would vote if he were here. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT.] Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. HEARST (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. PLUMB (when the name of Mr. INGALLS was called). My colleague [Mr. INGALLS] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. I do not know how he would vote on this motion. If he were here, I would vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. Not regarding this as such, I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is absent, and I will transfer that pair to my colleague. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] is at West Point, charged with a duty by the Senate. He is paired.

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent, paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. LOGAN. I was paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] when I left last week, but I understand the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is now paired with him, and has transferred it to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. That being the case, I vote "yea."

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CONGER. I stated that my colleague [Mr. PALMER] was paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. The pair has been transferred to the Senator's colleague [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. CAMDEN. I announced a pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I have transferred the pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I observe he is not here. I withdraw the pair with the Senator from Nebraska and announce my pair with the Senator from Connecticut. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. He is absent under order of the Senate. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], but understanding that he would if present vote as I do, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—22.

So the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was agreed to.

Mr. BECK subsequently said: I ask leave to offer an amendment to House bill 8328, known as the "oleomargarine bill," not committing myself to all its provisions. The amendment is the House bill in regard to tariff and taxation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. Is the morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman in charge of the appropriation bill, if we can not reach the Calendar to-day, to allow me to call up——

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I think the consular and diplomatic bill will not take an hour of the time of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. It may take more. I desire to say that there are two bills—one for the establishment of light-houses, on which some bills of the Senate Committee on Commerce have been placed as amendments, providing for all the light-houses recommended by the Light-House Board and by the Committee on Commerce; and another for light-ships. I am very anxious to have those bills passed, that a committee of conference may be appointed, and that they may be passed in some form, so that appropriations for them can be placed in the sundry civil bill. I ask this because after to-day I expect to be gone for the remainder of the week. Having had charge of these bills, I desire very much to have them passed this morning.

Mr. DOLPH. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa I desire to state that on Thursday last, when the morning hour was given up to other business, it was agreed that the bill reported by myself from the Committee on Public Lands to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company should come up immediately after the morning business to-day. Of course I do not propose to antagonize the appopriation bill. I am also informed that during my absence it was agreed that to-day and to-morrow should be devoted to unobjected cases on the Calendar. I will not undertake to antagonize that order; but I give notice that on Wednesday, immediately after the morning business, I shall make a motion to take up again for consideration the bill referred to.

Mr. BECK. I intended Saturday morning to call up the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. I do not propose to antagonize what is going on to-day or to-morrow as to the Calendar or to call it up on Wednesday, but on Thursday after the close of the morning business I shall endeavor to call up that bill and ask a vote on it.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it understood that after the conclusion of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill we shall go on with the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands, that after the conclusion of the present bill, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, the Calendar will be taken up under the eighth rule. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

LIGHT-HOUSE SUPPLY STEAMERS.

Mr. CONGER. I believe the Senator from Iowa will yield to allow me to have the light-house and light-ship bills taken up. I ask it simply because I have to leave to be gone the remainder of the week. I ask the courtesy of the Senate to take up these light-house and light-ship bills now. There is no objection to them, I think. They are No. 1460 and No. 1461 in the Order of Business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know when there has been a refusal to a gentleman under such circumstances when he was going away.

The question being again put, the motion was agreed to—ayes 25, noes not counted.

The bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 8, after the word "made," to strike out the words "for that purpose;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to construct a suitable steamer for use in supplying the light-houses on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of the United States, the sum required for construction of the same to be paid from an appropriation hereafter to be made, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $147,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add:

Also to cause to be constructed an iron screw-steamer for use as a light-house tender in the fourth light-house district, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $68,300: Provided, That the contract for the construction of such steamers shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement, and that such steamers shall be built in American ship-yards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the Light-House Board is authorized and required to establish and maintain light-ships at the following-named places: One at or near the southeast end of Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; one at or near the south end of Ram Island Reef, Fisher's Island Sound, Long Island, New York; one, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $40,000, to be stationed off Grosse Point, Lake Saint Clair, Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and for other purposes."

Mr. CONGER. I now ask that a committee of conference be asked for on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

NEW LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I move to take up House bill No. 5862.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, which was to add to the bill:

Also that there be established at or near Point Sur, on the seacoast of California, a light-house and fog-signal station, the entire cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $100,000; also that a light-house and fog-signal be established on Castle Hill, Rhode Island, at the entrance to Newport Harbor, under the direction of the Light-House Board: Provided, That a suitable site for the light-house can be obtained without expense to the Government, upon terms and conditions to be agreed upon by said board with the owner of the land at Castle Hill, the entire cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $10,000; also that there shall be established above Pulpit Point, Whitehall Narrows, New York, a light to guide vessels through said narrows, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $200; also that a light be established on the bridge between New Bedford and Fairhaven, Massachusetts, the entire cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $200; also that a light-house and fog-signal be established on one of the Gull Rocks, opposite the United States Naval Training School, in Upper Newport Harbor, Rhode Island, the entire cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $10,000; also that there be established and erected a light-house on Crabtree's Ledge (so called), between Bean Island and the mainland of Crabtree's Neck, in Frenchman's Bay, Hancock County, Maine, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $10,000; also that there be established a light-house and fog-signal at or near Deer Island, in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $35,000; also that there be established a light-house at or near Lubec Narrows, Maine, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $40,000; also that there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $2,000 for the purchase of a right of way from Cape Orford Light-Station to the town of Cape Orford, Oregon; also that there be established a light-house at Two Harbors, Minnesota, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $10,000; also that there be established a light-house on Gould Island, Narragansett Bay, State of Rhode Island, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $10,000; also that there be established a light-station at or near North Point, to take the place of the old one near Milwaukee, on Milwaukee Bay, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $15,000; also for the purchase of a site and the construction of a first-order coast light-house at Cape Meares, Tillamook Bay, Oregon, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $60,000; also that the appropriation of $15,000 made by the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884, "for removing the Croatan Light-House to a point where it will be of more value to navigators," be made available for the erection of a new light-house at the proposed point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if all these proposed lights and stations have received the approval of the Light-House Board?

Mr. CONGER. They have, all of them, as being among the most necessary lights. Some others have been recommended, but they did not have the recommendation of the board as among those most necessary to be established. The committee have grouped together in this one bill those that seemed most important.

Mr. BECK. I could not quite hear the Senator from Michigan. Does he say that the Committee on Commerce were unanimous in this report?

Mr. CONGER. I understand so, and the Light House Board sent a special recommendation in each case. I will say that several of these items were passed by the House in separate bills, and the Committee on Commerce of the Senate thought it proper to put them all together in one bill.

Mr. HALE. In one of these cases, which is within my knowledge, I know that subsequent investigations have shown that the appropriation for the cost of the structure provided for here ought to be increased. I move in the case of Crabtree's Ledge light to increase the limitation to $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 33 it is proposed to strike out the word "ten" and to insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Also that there be established and erected a light-house on Crabtree's Ledge (so called), between Bean Island and the mainland of Crabtree's Neck, in Frenchman's Bay, Hancock County, Maine, the cost of which shall not exceed the sum of $25,000.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that. I remember that there was a second report. We took the report of the committee of the Light-House Board first, but this was a subsequent report on further examination.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill providing for the establishment of certain light-houses and fog-signals, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I move that a conference be asked on the amendments to this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] suggested rather than moved that a large number of the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be considered as one amendment. If there be no objection that order will be taken in regard to these formal amendments. They will all be stated as one amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection, except that at one particular point I shall ask to have a separate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The text proposed to be stricken out will not be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I will call attention to the amendment I want acted on separately as it is reached.

The Chief Clerk read from line 192 to line 365 of the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

CLASS II.—At $3,500 per annum:

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call attention at this point to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations carry the item for the consul at Apia from class 6 to class 5, increasing the pay of the consul at this point $500, bringing it within the $2,000 class instead of the $1,500. It is stricken out of class 6, and by lines 364 and 365 it is brought over to class 5. It is struck out of the provision on page 20, lines 455 and 456. I merely wished to explain it.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the words proposed to be inserted in lieu of the original bill between lines 188 and 519, as follows:

COMMERCIAL AGENCIES.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 523, to insert:

SCHEDULE C.

Saint Paul de Loando; Levuka; Gaboon.

And in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, exceeds $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out line 542, as follows:

For allowance for clerks at consulates, as follows.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For allowance for clerks at consulates, $50,320, the sum to be allowed at each consulate not to exceed the rate herein specified, as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the beginning of line 577, before the words "for clerks," to strike out "allowance" and insert "for an additional allowance;" so as to make the clause read:

For an additional allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk-hire, no greater portion of this sum than $400 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year: Provided, That the total sum expended in one year shall not exceed amount appropriated, $10,000: And provided further, That out of the amount hereby appropriated the Secretary of State may make such allowance as may to him seem proper to any interpreter for clerical services, in addition to his pay as interpreter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Contingent Expenses, United States Consulates," in line 654, after the word "messenger-service," to insert "traveling expenses of consular clerks;" so as to make the clause read:

Expense of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent, postage, furniture, statistics, newspapers, freight, foreign and domestic, telegrams, advertising, messenger-service, traveling expenses of consular clerks, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and commercial agencies in the transaction of their business, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. EVARTS. In the memorandum that is printed under the authority of the committee having in charge this appropriation bill, there is a clause suggested by the Secretary of State which would properly come in as an amendment following the last line of the bill:

And no expense charge shall be allowed hereafter in the accounts of any consular officer except upon a certificate of approval of the Secretary of State, which certificate shall be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury, and be deemed by them a sufficient voucher for the expenditure it covers.

The Secretary proceeds to say:

The embarrassments of a divided discretion in executive duties are obvious. The impossibility of even defining by name the miscellaneous expenses of a Department proves the equal impossibility of defining the specific amount made necessary for each such expense; and as the total expenditure is carefully estimated and limited by Congress and the accounts in detail are carefully recorded and audited in the State Department under orders of the President, it is unnecessary to have such essential Executive discretion submitted to the revision of the accounting officers of the Treasury, who can not possess the knowledge requisite for the performance of the business of another Department of the Government.

I therefore consider the guards upon allowance or expense are fully furnished in the amendment I have submitted, and that much useless friction can be saved by its adoption.

I can not but concur with the Secretary of State in thinking that many embarrassments do arise in the conduct by officers abroad of their duties in petty matters of expenditures that are recognized by the State Department, and yet they find themselves obstructed in the passing of their accounts when they come to the Treasury officers. Whether or not at any time an arrangement should more completely assign to the Treasury Department a supervision of the consular system, it seems to me entirely incongruous that so long as the appointment and responsibility in regard to these officers is in the State Department—of course, under the President, the Secretary having no authority of his own—there should be a discord which in my own experience and in matters which have been brought to my attention since have arisen.

Sitting here and discussing these matters we probably do not feel or appreciate the difficulties in which our officers abroad, where they are both discreet and frugal, may find themselves in following the directions of the State Department under its system of expenditure and supposing themselves covered thereby, when the accounts reach the Treasury Department where, without any imputation either of integrity or of intelligence of the officers abroad, they are considered under the mere interest and duty of accounting officers. That often brings the parties into a very uncomfortable position. They are not generally persons of much means, and they have not very ample emoluments from the office; and frequently in deficiency bills, after a delay of years sometimes, these matters that are small really but important to the officers abroad, are finally settled and disposed of.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know whether a suggestion of this amendment would encounter the ground of being in the nature of new legislation. My own impression is that it would not be so, but I am entirely in favor of the general proposition that appropriation bills should exclude new legislation. I should hardly think that a clause of this kind, if it should approve itself to the good sense of the Senate, could be discarded upon a suggestion that it was in the nature of new legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the last suggestion made by the Senator from New York, I think it would be new legislation. Whether it is such new legislation in the bill, limiting and controlling as it does the contingent expenses, I do not seek to say. Indeed, I think it very likely, if it was necessary, we could place the limitation proposed by the Senator from New York on this appropriation; but the Committee on Appropriations considered this amendment with a great deal of care, because the Secretary of State very much desired it. He stated to us, as he does in his letter, that there were great inconveniences arising from the fact that these contingent-expense accounts are overhauled by the accounting officers of the Treasury. That is no doubt true, not only with these contingent expenses, but with the contingent expenses of every Department; and the committee believed that if they were to begin this system of regulation, whereby the certificate of one head of Department should be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury, it would be but a little while until, with this class of expenses at least, we should have no accounting officers. I do not know but that would be a wise thing; I am not so clear about it, but certainly it is a radical change and a change that has never been proposed to my knowledge before. Certainly, since the foundation of the Government, the accounting officers of the Treasury have revised every expenditure of the Government, of every department of the Government, of every officer of the Government, except in the single instance wherein by special legislation that power has been reserved to the President for small sums of money respecting our foreign relations. If there is any reservation now in the case of any head of Department, such as is proposed here, I am not aware of it. I appreciate these little annoyances affecting the accounts of the Secretary of State, and the honorable Senator from New York has had the like experience; but it seems to me it is rather a dangerous provision to insert at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the amendment is clearly excluded by the rules.

Mr. EVARTS. I was going to say that I would not insist on the amendment, but perhaps in some reorganization, which is now thought of and spoken of at the last sitting, this may appear as a proper regulation.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1887, and for other purposes."

JUDICIAL CIRCUITS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the first case on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The bill (S. 1286) to amend section 604 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. BECK. That stands on a motion to reconsider, I think, does it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps we had better go on with unobjected cases to-day first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT, and reported adversely from the Committee on Rules by Mr. INGALLS, declaring that executive nominations shall hereafter be considered in open session.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the resolution goes over.

ELON A. MARSH AND MINARD LAFEVER.

The bill (S. 500) for the relief of Elon A. Marsh and Minard Lafever was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a subsitute therefor.

Mr. ALLISON. Read the preamble there referred to that we may hear what it is.

The Chief Clerk read the preamble.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to that, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] not being present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Being objected to, the bill goes over. Does the Senator ask that it hold its place on the Calendar?

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing it shall retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it goes over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

STEPHEN N. SMITH.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the same objection to the next case, the bill (S. 708) for the relief of Stephen N. Smith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM C. DODGE.

The bill (S. 301) for the relief of William C. Dodge was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the report read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will first be read at length.

The bill was read.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

CALIFORNIA LAND SALES.

The bill (S. 994) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of lands in said State was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that had better go over.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that it retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL CADETS.

The bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill being objected to, goes over. Is it desired that the objection shall carry it over to the Calendar under Rule IX, or does it hold its place?

Mr. HALE. That objection can be made at any time hereafter. The bill now holds its place, of course. The Senator who has charge of it is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over, retaining its place.

JAMES S. CLARK & CO.

The bill (S. 41) for the relief of James S. Clark & Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. That was up for consideration before. I now move to substitute for that Order of Business 1312, being Senate bill 2474, and will state that this is a claim for the proceeds of cotton. The facts were found in favor of the claimants by the Court of Claims, but the case was decided adversely to them by a divided court on the statute of limitations. The substitute is simply to send them back to the Court of Claims for a retrial. I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Waiving the statute of limitations?

Mr. DOLPH. To waive the statute. The court itself was divided in regard to the effect of the statute.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Why waive it?

Mr. DOLPH. Because this seems to be a meritorious case.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon will be considered as in Committee of the Whole in lieu of the one just announced.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the report be read.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator let me make a statement? The report is very long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will first be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. 2474) for the relief of James S. Clark & Co., and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider it.

The bill proposes to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to rehear and determine de novo the claim of James S. Clark & Co. for the proceeds of 900 bales of cotton taken from their possession by the United States Treasury agent at Mobile, Ala., in the month of August, 1865, and to determine the suit on the merits, without regard to any statute of limitations or adverse decision of the court or of the Supreme Court on the former hearing.

Mr. DOLPH. If it is desired now I ask that the Secretary may read the portions of the report which I have marked, and I think they will be satisfactory to the Senator from Iowa, the rest being a legal argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read such portions of the report as are indicated by the Senator from Oregon.

The Chief Clerk read the following passages from the report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, April 23, 1884:

The facts in this case, which have been "judicially ascertained" by the Court of Claims, are as follows:

First. That in July and August, 1865, the claimants, James S. Clark and Edward Fulton, together with Joseph C. Palmer, were the owners, jointly, of 900 bales of cotton, which was consigned by them to C. A. Dexter, supervising special agent of the United States Treasury Department, at Mobile, in the State of Alabama, in the last part of said July or the first part of said August.

Second. That the said cotton was so consigned to said Treasury agent by the claimants because the Government at that time had charge of the railroads and other means of transportation to Mobile; and the use of such means of transportation was necessary in order to facilitate the arrival of said cotton at Mobile, and upon its arrival there was claimed of him by the claimants.

Third. That in August, 1865, the said Treasury agent, having received orders from the Treasury Department to ship all cotton received by him, shipped the said 900 bales of cotton to Simeon Draper, United States cotton agent in New York, where it arrived and was sold by the United States, and the net proceeds thereof, amounting to the sum of $127,350, were paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Fourth. That during the late rebellion the claimants resided in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana.

In addition to the above facts your committee find, as a fact established by the evidence taken in said cause, that the claimants did not, nor did either of them, give any aid or comfort to the late rebellion.

The claimants instituted their suit in the Court of Claims on the 27th day of March, 1872, and the defense there interposed, aside from a contest in regard to the facts, was the statute of limitations. There were two pleas of the statute of limitations interposed by the United States to the claimants' right to recover, as follows:

First. That the claimants did not prefer their claim to the proceeds of said cotton within two years after the suppression of the rebellion. This plea was based upon the third section of the act of March 12, 1863 (12 Statutes at Large, page 820).

Second. That the claimants did not file their petition in the Court of Claims within six years after the claim accrued.

This plea was founded on the tenth section of the act of Congress for the reorganization of the Court of Claims, approved March 3, 1863 (12 Statutes at Large, page 765). The case was twice argued in the Court of Claims before four of the judges of said court, and at each of the said trials the court was equally divided in regard to the sufficiency of said pleas as a defense to said action.

In the Supreme Court the case was argued before seven judges, and the judgment of the Court of Claims, adverse to the claimants, was there affirmed, with Justices Field, Miller, and Bradley dissenting.

Your committee can not doubt that the conversion of the claimants' cotton to the use of the United States, under the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury, was an unlawful act, and that the retention by the United States of the proceeds resulting from the sale of the claimants' cotton is also illegal, unjustifiable, unwarranted, and without right.

* * * * * * *

Your committee agree with the said committee in the conclusions reached by it in said report, that the lawful title of the claimant to the cotton in question has not been divested by any proceedings under the authority of the Government; and that the net proceeds of such cotton having gone into the Treasury of the United States through the illegal acts of its agents, it ought not to shield itself from the payment of the same to the claimants by the statute of limitations.

The committee, therefore, report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator from Oregon propose to make of Senate bill 41 of the same title?

Mr. DOLPH. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY F. POTTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 244) for the relief of Mary F. Potts.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment in line 22, after the word "extended" to insert:

Provided, however, That no extension of said patents, or either of them, allowed by the Commissioner, shall operate to give the patentee any rights not secured to her by said patents as originally granted.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Patents be, and he is hereby, authorized to hear the application of Mary F. Potts for the extension of the letters patent granted to her May 24, 1870, for improved sad-iron, numbered 103501, as reissued January 6, 1880, and also for the extension of the letters patent granted to her April 4, 1871, for improvement in sad-irons, numbered 113448, as reissued October 15, 1872, and as subsequently reissued October 7, 1879; and said Commissioner shall immediately make a certificate upon said reissued patents renewing and extending the same to the said Mary F. Potts, her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, for the term of seven years from the dates of their expiration, which certificate shall be recorded in the Patent Office; and thereupon the said patents shall have the same force and effect in law as if originally granted for the full term for which the same may be extended: Provided, however, That no extension of said patents, or either of them, allowed by the Commissioner, shall operate to give the patentee any rights not secured to her by said patents as originally granted: And provided further, That it shall be established to the satisfaction of said Commissioner that said Mary F. Potts has, without neglect or fault on her part, failed to obtain from the use or sale of her invention or discovery a proper remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon their introduction into use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT TAX SALES.

The bill (S. 634) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] in charge of that and the next bill being absent, I think it had better remain on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

DISTRICT LIQUOR SALES.

The bill (S. 1380) relating to the sale of distilled and fermented liquors in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the same order be made in relation to that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will remain on the Calendar, holding its place.

LOUISE HOME PROPERTY.

The bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CULLOM. I see that this bill is reported by the Senator occupying the chair [Mr. HARRIS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was just sending for a brother Senator to take the chair.

Mr. CULLOM. I arose for the purpose of giving the Chair time to do that.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad the Senator from Illinois did. I did not mean to cut off the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Iowa, Mr. President, to allow the report in these two cases, Orders of Business 233 and 234, to be read. They involve exactly the same principle, and if the bill in its present shape as reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia shall not be satisfactory to the Senator from Iowa or to the Senate, I hope we shall be able to put the bills in such shape as will be satisfactory, for I think it is important that in some form they should be passed. I hope therefore the objection will be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCMILLAN in the chair). Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. ALLISON. Long enough to hear the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS February 19, 1886:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes, has considered the same, and reports:

That, on the 21st day of November, 1869, W. W. Corcoran conveyed by deed to James M. Carlisle and others, trustees, lots numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, in square No. 196, in the city of Washington, D. C.; the purpose being—

"To establish and maintain in the city of Washington * * * an institution for the support and maintenance of a limited number of gentlewomen, who have been reduced by misfortune, so as, in the opinion of the trustees and directresses, to be proper persons to receive such assistance."

That the grounds thus conveyed make about 53,000 square feet, fronting 381 feet on Massachusetts avenue, which, with the buildings and improvements placed upon them, are estimated at at least $200,000.

In addition to the buildings and grounds, Mr. Corcoran endowed the home with a fund of $325,000, well invested in stocks and bonds, for its permanent support.

The home was opened for occupation on the 17th day of April, 1871.

"Sixty-four ladies have enjoyed the benefits of the home, and the family now consists of forty-two, in the full enjoyment of all the comforts and home pleasures that can be obtained."

The trustees of the home were incorporated by act approved March 3, 1875; the second section of which act provides as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the buildings and grounds connected therewith, and all property held by said trustees for the purposes of said trust, on the square numbered 196, shall be free from all taxes and assessment by the municipal authorities, or by the United States, so long as the same shall be held and used for the purposes of the said trust."

And the act approved February 24, 1879, provides as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be authorized and required to release the property held by the trustees of the Louise Home under the deed of trust from William W. Corcoran to the said trustees dated November 21, 1869, from all taxes levied upon it since the date said institution was opened for reception of inmates, and now remaining unpaid."

This act releases all taxes upon the property conveyed by the deed of November, 1869, but the endowment fund was not described in said deed.

In a letter from Mr. Corcoran to the committee, amongst other things he says:

"In addition to the grounds and buildings of the home proper, the trustees held six houses on which they had loaned a considerable portion of the funds of the institution, and which they were compelled to buy in under the several deeds of trust. Three of these have been sold at a loss of $13,000, which loss will probably be increased by the sale of the three that remain, netting a small interest while so held, and will be sold as."

Notwithstanding the act of February 24, 1879, it appears that the commissioners of the District are demanding the payment of certain tax-lien certificates issued on special improvement assessments in 1872 and 1873 against square 196 (the home proper), aggregating $4,207.62, when the facts, as stated to the committee by Mr. Corcoran, are that—

"The grounds and property known as the Louise Home comprise an aggregate frontage of 700 linear feet on Massachusetts avenue, Fifteenth street, Sixteenth street, and N street.

"In September, 1870, the trustees of Louise Home commenced the street improvement of this property, taking the established grades of the several streets on which the property fronted, and furnished all the materials and labor necessary to complete the same at their own cost, expecting that a just and proper allowance, as was the custom, would be made for such materials and labor expended in this work as would be properly chargeable to the corporate authorities in the improvement of the several streets.

"After the thorough completion of all the work of grading and paving sidewalks, grading and paving gutters and laying curbstones, the erection of a substantial brick-wall fence, and the planting and boxing of trees on the whole front, the regular and established grades of the several streets on which this property abutted was materially changed by the board of public works. The work of grading and paving had to be done anew, involving the cutting down of the sidewalk and street on the Fifteenth street and Massachusetts avenue front and heavy filling of the Sixteenth street front.

"In addition to the first work done by the trustees on the streets, the garden and grounds of the home within the inclosure were made to conform to the established grade, properly graded and filled, shrubbery planted, and the grounds laid out and beautified at great expense.

"The arbitrary change of grade made by the board of public works after the completion of this work not only caused the necessity of doing the work all over on the streets, but also necessitated an entire change of the grade of grounds, involving regrading, replanting of shrubbery, heavy filling in several places, and deep cutting in others.

"In addition to the materials and labor already furnished by the trustees at their own cost, the change of grade after the completion of the work involved still further large outlays for the purchase of extra material and for labor in underpinning the brick-fence wall, the setting of extra stone steps, lowering gas and water and sewer connections, the underpinning and raising of the house on the western portion of the grounds fronting on Sixteenth street, and the erection of iron posts and chains.

"The cutting down of Massachusetts avenue, and the consequent increase in the number of steps at the main entrance of the home building, has wrought great and lasting damage to the property, of which no allowance or award of damages has ever been made.

"Other parties owning improved property on Massachusetts avenue, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, in square No. 212, have had fair and liberal allowance for damages sustained by the change of grade, and not only received large credits and drawbacks on their special assessments (some of them having the whole charge remitted), but were allowed sums by the board of audit for damages to property, and in several instances large sums were expended in repairing the houses, underpinning and removing them, the cost of which was charged to the general fund of the District, and no charge made against the property. In the case of these other parties, the connections of gas, water, and sewer were made by the board of public works, and paid out of the general fund, and no charge made against the parties.

"In the case of the Louise Home these connections of gas, water, and sewer were all made by the trustees at their own expense and no allowance made for it.

"In one case a house was entirely removed from Massachusetts avenue to N street at a cost of $5,300.40 to the District government.

"In another case a house was underpinned at a cost to the District of $1,735.68, and the owner received in addition an award of $2,000 from the board of audit.

"The frame house owned by the Louise Home on Sixteenth street had to be underpinned and repaired at a considerable cost, and for this an allowance of only $400 was made by the board of audit, which is the only award made to the trustees for all the damage to the property and for the cost of materials and labor expended on the streets.

"The following is a synopsis of the expenditures of money made by the trustees of the Louise Home in the improvements as above enumerated:

Grading and paving footway, brick-wall fence, grading gardens and grounds, filling Sixteenth street lot, workmen at garden, materials, &c., the sum of	$8,105 75
Fence and painting	657 75
Raising house on Sixteenth street and repairs to same	2,075 85
Iron posts and chains	862 50
Surveying	20 00
Setting five extra stone steps	353 66
Total	12,075 51

"Notwithstanding the large outlay by the Louise Home at its own cost, the commissioners of the District of Columbia demand the payment of the following assessments for special improvements, to wit:

Square 196 of lot 10, Sixteenth street, November 15, 1872	$231 14
Square 196 of lot 11, Sixteenth street, November 15, 1872	771 53
Square 196 of lot 11, Massachusetts avenue, November 6, 1873	998 39
Square 196 of lot 12, Massachusetts avenue, November 6, 1773	405 31
Square 196 of lot 13, Massachusetts avenue, November 6, 1873	353 50
Square 196 of lot 14, Massachusetts avenue, November 6, 1873	353 50
Square 196 of lot 15, Massachusetts avenue, November 6, 1873	405 31
Square 196 of lot 16, Massachusetts avenue, November 6, 1873	527 26
Square 196 of lot 4, M street, December 11, 1876	161 41
Total	4,207 62

with interest at 10 per cent. from the date of the assessments, making an aggregate of over $10,000."

From which it appears that these so-called improvements not only cost Mr. Corcoran over $12,000 to repair damages, but there is still claimed of the home, or held against it for the work which inflicted this injury, these assessments, which, with the penalties and interest, will aggregate about $10,000.

The committee is of opinion that the property held by a public charity, such as this, should be exempt from taxation, the endowment fund as well as the grounds and buildings of the home proper.

While the committee does not think it good policy to allow corporations of this character to invest in real estate, except so far as necessary for their own immediate purposes, yet inasmuch as the trustees of this charity were compelled to purchase certain houses to save the endowment fund from serious loss, the committee recommends that such of said houses and lots as are still held by said trustees shall be exempt from taxation while so held, provided they shall not be so held for more than five years from the passage of this bill.

Your committee reports the bill back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a noble and most disinterested charity, and I hope that no objection will be made to the passage of the bill. I am sure it will meet with the approval of every Senator present. We have exempted other property within the District with far less merit than this.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask in line 4 that the name "Louisa" be changed to "Louise," inserting "e" instead of "a." It is a misprint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. Did not the Senator from Iowa object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. He withdrew the objection.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all property held as endowment fund by the trustees of the Louise Home, in the city of Washington, D. C., for the purpose of revenue to support said institution, shall be, and the same is hereby, declared exempt from all taxation and assessments by the municipal authorities or by the United States so long as the same shall be so held; and all taxes and assessments made or imposed upon any of the property of said trustees subsequent to the 21st day of November, 1869, whether real, personal, or mixed, be, and the same are hereby, released: Provided, That real estate heretofore purchased by said trustees in the management of the endowment fund shall be exempt from taxation only while so held, and not to exceed five years from the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORCORAN GALLERY OF ART.

The bill (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all property held as endowment fund by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, in the city of Washington, D. C., for the purpose of revenue to support said institution, shall be, and the same is hereby, declared exempt from all taxation and assessments by the municipal authorities or by the United States so long as the same shall be so held; and all taxes and assessments made or imposed upon any of the property of said trustees subsequent to the 10th day of May, 1869, whether real, personal, or mixed, be, and the same are hereby, released: Provided, That real estate heretofore purchased by said trustees in the management of the endowment fund shall be exempt from taxation only while so held, and not to exceed five years from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES.

The bill (S. 984) to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages and deeds of trust in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHERMAN subsequently moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the motion was entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had directed him to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 1204) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen, and to increase their pensions.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ELLEN CORCORAN.

Mr. SAWYER. There was an error in a bill passed by the Senate the other day, and I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the Select Committee on Indian traderships Mr. PLATT, Mr. CULLOM, Mr. JONES of Nevada, Mr. COKE, and Mr. WILSON of Maryland.

INSURANCE COMPANIES IN DAKOTA.

Mr. HARRISON. I was requested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who is necessarily absent this week, to ask the Senate to excuse him from service upon the conference committee appointed on the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes, and to authorize and empower the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to pass such general laws, and to ask that some one be substituted in his place. I suggest that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] be substituted in the place of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from Connecticut will be relieved from service, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] will take his place.

HEIRS OF PETER DELLA TERRE.

The bill (S. 492) for the relief of Frank Della Terre and Susan F. Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre, deceased, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Being objected to, the bill goes over. Does the Senator propose that it go over to the Calendar under Rule IX, or to have it remain under Rule VIII?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let it remain without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will hold its place on the Calendar.

ACCOUNTS WITH RAILWAY COMPANIES.

The bill (S. 511) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. Is there a report in connection with that bill?

Mr. BROWN. There is a report.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the bill had better go over under the other Calendar. It seems to be a very important measure, remitting some dues to the Government. I do not know the extent of it.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator from Indiana to withdraw the objection and permit me to make a short statement. I think he will not object then to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw his objection?

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the objection for that purpose, of course.

Mr. BROWN. This is a bill similar to three different acts which have been passed already making a return of a portion of the money that was agreed to be paid by Southern railroad companies at the end of the war for rolling-stock. The rolling-stock of the different railroads in the South was in a great measure destroyed during the war. The gauge there was a 5-foot gauge, while the Northern gauge was 4 feet 8½ inches. There was a large quantity of rolling-stock on hand when the war terminated, and the Southern roads needed the rolling-stock very much, as they had not enough rolling-stock to do the ordinary business of transportation. The Northern people desired commerce and communication opened as rapidly as possible, and the Government proposed to sell its rolling-stock, which had been gotten up for war purposes and was really manufactured in a great hurry, a great deal of it very inferior, to the Southern railroads and take bonds or obligations for it.

A commission was appointed to value the rolling-stock, and, as the report shows, there were a great many instances where the valuation by the commission, in the then inflated condition of the currency, was more than it cost the Government to construct the rolling-stock when it was new, although it had been used, some of it a good while.

Although the valuation was largely over the real value of the rolling-stock, the companies were compelled to take the rolling-stock at any price that might be charged. In the Quartermaster's Department at the time the trade was made it was stated to them that very probably Congress would relieve them entirely; if not, that the amount would be likely to be reduced.

After the bonds had been given, however, and it was discovered that there was a very great excess in the valuation of the property, an act was passed relieving a number of roads in Tennessee that had given bonds, which act was signed by the President on the 3d of March, 1871. Under that act a 25 per cent. reduction was made. Then in 1875 another act was passed relieving another portion of the roads, and 25 per cent. reduction was made there on the valuation. Then there was a later act, passed in 1877, relieving the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia, which had already paid every cent of the amount, and refunding to the road 25 per cent. of the amount, so as to do the same equity to them as had been done to the others.

There has been more than six-sevenths of the whole amount adjusted. Now, it is only asked to settle with the rest of the companies upon the same basis of equity that the settlement was made with the first companies, and to allow them the same reduction. In the case of the Mobile and Ohio road they had not paid up the full amount, but they had paid more than 75 per cent. The amendment is intended to cover their case also, that the excess may be refunded if they have paid more than 75 per cent., so as to reduce it to 75 per cent. of the valuation.

That is substantially the case, and we only ask for the other companies the same equity that has been done to five-sixths of the companies, that the same reduction be made as was made in those cases.

I hope in that view of it that the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his objection. It is only a simple act of justice to those companies who gave an obligation for a great deal more, as everybody admits, than the rolling-stock was worth; but they were, under pressure, obliged to take it at any price they could get it for at the time; and as five-sixths have been relieved I think the others should be.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the honor of serving upon the Committee on Railroads, and I think I remember something about the consideration of this bill. The report as it appears here was never before that committee, and in its present language could never have been adopted by the committee.

Mr. BROWN. The report was adopted by the committee at this session of Congress, not at a former session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know. The bill was before the committee, I remember that very well, but the report itself was drawn up after the committee authorized the reporting of the bill. The language of the report never in the world passed a committee on which there were a majority of Republicans. It begins thus:

That during the late unfortunate war, when the armies of the United States invaded the territory of Southern States, &c.

Language that has been a little out of fashion since we found out which side whipped.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to interpose in a case of this kind without reason, but it does seem to me the whole sum and substance of the statement of the Senator from Georgia is that these roads, having contracted with the Government to buy certain rolling-stock at a certain appraised figure, afterward found by a deterioration in that sort of property the price they contracted to pay was somewhat too high. I think under the circumstances the Senator had better let the bill go over until we can have a little wider margin of discussion of it than under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BROWN. There have been four or five different reports of committees in favor of the measure from time to time, and never one against it. Every committee that the bill has been before has recognized the justice of the claim. If the bill goes over to the General Calendar, as the Senator very well knows, there is not any probability of reaching it at this session.

Mr. HARRISON. I will consent then for the present that it be passed over and retain its place on the Calendar until I can look into it a little.

Mr. BROWN. We did that once before, at a former sitting, a few days ago.

Mr. HARRISON. Not at my instance.

Mr. BROWN. It was a week or ten days ago, the last time the Calendar was called, when the bill went over to hold its place. We had better dispose of it in some way now. I think the Senator ought to withdraw the objection he has made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. I consent that the bill may retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I move that it be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objecting to the present consideration of the bill, the Senator from Georgia moves that the bill be considered notwithstanding the objection. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays. We have been pretty liberal on this side in voting to pay all just Northern claims. The justice of this claim has been recognized by three acts of Congress in similar cases and by half a dozen reports of committees, and I think our Northern friends ought to meet us in the same spirit in which we have met them in reference to similar matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must notify the Senator from Kentucky that the question is not debatable unless it be by unanimous consent.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that while I wanted to consider this case as well as any other on the Calendar, there are so many of this class that we should perhaps destroy the two days that we are going to devote to the Calendar, in which we might pass a great many bills. Would it not be better to let the bill retain its place on the Calendar and get through with the unobjected cases and then come back to it?

Mr. BROWN. It is not likely that there will be any discussion over it.

Mr. HARRISON. If time is to be consumed in this way in getting the bill up I withdraw the objection, with the consent of the Senate, and let it come on for debate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 511) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Railroads with an amendment, in section 1, line 9, after the word "same," to insert:

And in case any company has paid more than 75 per cent. of the amount due under the original obligation, but has not paid the whole, then the equities shall be adjusted on the same basis as other cases, allowing said company the same per cent. of reduction which is allowed to other companies having like equitable claim to a reduction.

So as to read:

That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, jointly, to adjust and finally settle the accounts of the United States with such railway companies as received property from the United States in the years 1865 and 1866 and have made full payment for the same; and in case any company has paid more than 75 per cent. of the amount due under the original obligation, but has not paid the whole, &c.

Mr. BROWN. I simply want to say that the object of the amendment is to cover the case of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, which has paid more than 75 per cent. of the amount of the bond as originally given, but has not paid the whole of it. There was an act passed which authorized the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General to adjust the claims of that company, as well as others, and allow such reduction as they thought proper. They reported that they ought to have a reduction of 25 per cent., but as the act did not make provision for any appropriation to pay back the amount which they paid over the 75 per cent. nothing could be done, and the case came back to Congress.

This amendment simply proposes in a case of that character, if the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General should be satisfied that there ought to be a reduction of 25 per cent. made in behalf of the company, as in the case of other companies, and a number of them, the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General may adjust the matter, and the Secretary of War shall draw his warrant for the balance that may be due the company over the 75 per cent. that has been made as a payment upon the amount. If, for instance, 90 per cent. has been paid, the difference between 75 per cent. and 90 per cent. would be refunded. That is the object of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to emphasize what I said before. As the Senator from Georgia has had an opportunity and has made no sort of explanation, I desire to say that I consider the language of the report a gross discourtesy to the committee, not warranted by anything that was ever said or done in the committee, obviously to any man of judgment not reflecting the opinion of the committee, language that he must have known the committee never would have used in the world. While I suppose the committee sanctioned the bill—indeed I think my recollection is to that effect, that it authorized the Senator from Georgia to make a favorable report upon it—the Senator must have known that he never could have received a vote for a report which characterized the defense of the National Union as an invasion of the Southern States. He knows the committee would have disapproved it and would have directed the alteration of the report. He has had an opportunity to apologize here, and has not made any apology.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suggest to strike out the language.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know whether a report is amendable or not.

Mr. BROWN. My recollection is that the report was not written and read before the committee, yet I went over the grounds, the basis of the report, and stated at the time what the report would be, and it was approved by the committee.

As to the language the Senator refers to, I do not understand that the committee is bound by that. Probably it was an inadvertence on my part to use it under the circumstances. It was so common, however, during the war to say that the invading army had reached a certain point that the language was used in that sense, and not with any other meaning. If it is at all offensive, I am willing for my part, so far as I can, to withdraw that part of it, and simply to say that when the Union Army had recovered possession of the State, or any language that is agreeable to the Senator. I certainly had no motive to use any expression that would be offensive to any one in writing out the report, and I desire to state that here at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. This report goes into the records of the Senate as the report of the Committee on Railroads of the Senate. I do not think it is proper that it should stand as the report of the committee. The expression used is not simply the one referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, but in the following sentence it is said:

It frequently became the policy of the commander-in-chief of the invading army—to do so and so. I move, if it is in order, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Railroads with instructions to strike out these expressions from the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Railroads. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOAR. With instructions, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the bill be recommitted with the instructions indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Indiana to indicate the words he wishes to have stricken out.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BROWN. I ask to be permitted to withdraw the report, and I disclaim intending anything offensive in the language therein used. I ask the leave of the Senate to withdraw the report.

Mr. HARRISON. I make no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent for leave to withdraw the report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted, and the report is withdrawn. The bill is in the Senate, the amendment having been concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL CADETS.

Mr. BUTLER. While I was temporarily out of the Chamber the bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," was passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar. I ask that that bill be now taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks that the bill indicated by him be taken up for consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the amendment proposed by me as a substitute be read.

Mr. HALE. This is a very important bill, and when taken up will consume at least the day in its discussion. Therefore I must object to its being considered under the eighth rule.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine objects to the consideration of the bill, and the Senator from South Carolina moves to proceed to its consideration notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to take any time. I hope that Senators interested in the Calendar will understand that if this bill is taken up, which is a very important matter, involving some millions of dollars to the Treasury, it will occupy at least the whole day and perhaps to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Maine explain in a word the provisions of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must state that the question is not debatable. The bill being objected to, the Senator from South Carolina moves to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from South Carolina asked permission to go back to the bill, but I was not aware that leave was granted. I thought when we passed it over in his absence without losing its place on the Calendar we would proceed regularly under the arrangement for two days with cases unobjected to, and then if the bill had not lost its place on the Calendar it would come up afterward.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been seeking an opportunity to have the bill considered by the Senate now for a week or ten days, and I have given way again and again. It is a matter, as the Senator from Maine says, of some consequence, but I think, with all deference to his objection, it will not require over an hour's discussion certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. BUTLER. I was simply proceeding to say that I do not think it will require over an hour's discussion to dispose of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I propose to occupy more time than that myself, perhaps double the time.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is mistaken in saying that it involves millions of dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must remind Senators that the question is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. It is a very important bill, and will take all of the time to-day and perhaps to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the bill be proceeded with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the bill be read for information.

Mr. BECK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is whether the Senate has ever given consent to go back to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood, and announced the bill as being before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. If the request was made for unanimous consent, I did not hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request was made, and the Chair announced it, and understood the Senate as assenting. The bill will be read at length for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take a division first.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us take a division.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays; we may as well have them now.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the negative). I cast my vote not thinking at the moment that I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], but only upon political questions. Unless this is to be considered a political question I shall vote.

Several SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. TELLER. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Maxey,	Teller,
Brown,	Eustis,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vance,
Butler,	Evarts,	Payne,	Van Wyck,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes."

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the amendment I offered, intended to be proposed by me, be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That that part of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1882, limiting the number of graduates of the Naval Academy to be retained in the service each year shall not apply to those cadets who had entered the Naval Academy prior to the passage of said act; and those cadets who have been honorably discharged under the provisions of the aforesaid act may, upon making application to the Secretary of the Navy within sixty days after the passage of this act, be restored to the service and take their places on the Naval Register in the same manner as if said act had not been passed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to make any change in the assignments made under the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1882, of graduates of the Naval Academy to the line and to the staff and Marine Corps: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to those cadets who failed to pass the physical examination at the time of graduation.

SEC. 2. That officers restored under the provisions of this act shall not be entitled to receive pay for the period intervening between the date of their discharge under the act of August 5, 1882, and their restoration as herein provided for, but in all other respects they shall be considered as having been continuously in the naval service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. HALE. There are careful reports covering this subject. It is a very important subject and quite likely one that Senators have not thoroughly investigated, because it pertains to a particular field of inquiry, and it is very probable that Senators outside of the membership of the Naval Committee have not thoroughly probed it to the bottom. Therefore I ask for the reading of the reports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the reports.

The Secretary read the views submitted by Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, February 15, 1886, as follows:

This bill, by its provisions, will largely nullify the legislation contained in the act of August 5, 1882, which, after discussion, was adopted as the first step in a wise policy intended to remedy a definite and admitted evil.

This evil consisted in introducing from the Naval Academy into the naval service a number of officers greatly disproportionate to the wants of the service.

Two things had resulted from this evil which were intolerable to the country and to the service itself: First, the naval list had been indefinitely swollen and the expenses thereby to the country enormously increased; secondly, as there was no limit to the lowest grade, while all the grades above were limited, it created an immense reservoir of young officers who were pouring in at the foot of the list, which list remained choked for years, with no sufficient outlet.

This condition delayed promotion and forced the younger officers of the Navy to remain in the lowest grades until middle life overtook them. Without the incentive which reasonable promotion offers, ambition and enterprise were dying out, and the morale of the service had become seriously impaired.

In the line of the Navy the number of graduates entering the unlimited grade of midshipmen was from 40 to 50 a year; it had once been as high as 70; while the number promoted by ordinary vacancies was less than 20. The head of each grade was thus kept back by the lower man in the grade above, and it was seen that unless the evil was removed naval graduates would still be midshipmen at thirty-three or even thirty-five years of age, remaining ten to twelve years in that grade.

Already, in July, 1882, the number of midshipmen had reached 91, with enough more of those whose promotion had been temporarily delayed, to make 111 in all. Every grade above was full. The next class coming up for final graduation in 1883 numbered 70, so that the list of midshipmen in August, 1883, making a fair allowance for casualties, would have been at least 175.

The next four classes numbered 37, 38, 32, and 40 members, respectively, in all 147, which, making every allowance for casualties, would bring the number of the grade of midshipmen, within five years from the passage of the act, up to 248.

This would have been suffocation. It would have removed nearly all inducement to the naval cadets to graduate and enter the service, as the best part of their middle life would be passed in the lowest grade in the service.

The overcrowded condition referred to was not confined to line officers. The Engineer Corps also was receiving large additions from the academy, the graduates numbering 25 a year, probably three times the number necessary to supply the ordinary waste of the corps.

The act of 1882 reduced the three grades of chief engineer, passed assistant engineer, and assistant engineer to a total of 170—61 less than the figures shown by the July Register of that year. Very little of this reduction has yet been accomplished.

The remedy was simple and obvious, and was put in force by the act of 1882. It consisted in making the number of admissions to the Navy dependent on the number of vacancies at the foot of the list, with the reservation that the ten best graduates of the year should always be taken. In fact it has been found that the needs of the service require from fifteen to twenty each year, and, under the present law, as many are taken.

The act of 1882 reduced the number of officers to be allowed in the grades above midshipmen. This made immediate action below doubly necessary. Under the act the upper grades were not only full but they had a surplus of 115, which could only be worked off with the lapse of time, causing still further delays in the advancement of junior officers.

In the line the maximum in these grades, fixed by the act of 1882, has only just been reached by the reductions under that law, and under its wise provisions a cadet in the Naval Academy who, by good conduct and a studious course, added to natural abilities, succeeds in graduating into the lower rank of the active Navy, now that of ensign, may have a reasonable expectation of such a promotion into the upper grades as will justify his remaining in the service.

This bill proposes to change all this, and to unload into the lower grade of the Navy 145 young officers, more than one-half of whom have already been separated from the Academy and from the naval service, and have lost the benefit of continuous study, or of the training which the service affords.

Under the claim of equity to the young men who have left the service under the provisions of the act of August, 1882, it inflicts upon all the classes that have entered since an additional service of six years in the lower grade.

It punishes every bright cadet who has entered the academy in the last three years, or will enter for the next three years, and takes away from him the stimulus needed to keep him up to fair proficiency in the course of study.

It is difficult to exaggerate the evil effect resulting to the naval service from the passage of the pending bill. It would restore the deplorable condition in which the naval list was found in 1882. It proposes to realize all the prospective evils which the act was designed to avert, and which it actually did avert.

Into this overcrowded lower list these one hundred and forty-five young men will be thrown, a large number of whom, having been out of the service for about three years, have become engaged in other occupations and estranged from naval discipline. Indeed, the effect would be to restore those of the least merit, for the brightest and most enterprising will be found to have already secured employment in other vocations. To restore them now would be a gross injustice to those who, although entering the Academy afterward, have shown a zeal and attention to duty which have secured for them the prize of a naval commission, and who by restoration of inferior men could be kept back for years from deserved promotion. Sloth and inefficiency are the sure results of such a course.

As a matter of public policy the proposed measure has nothing in its favor and everything to condemn it. It can only be discussed in its bearings on the claims of private individuals. It is claimed that the act of 1882 has done an injustice to those young men who were excluded under its operation from the Navy.

This claim proceeds upon the assumption that the Government, by appointing them pupils at the Naval Academy, had thereby contracted an obligation to commission them as officers in its service. A careful consideration of the conditions under which their connection with the Navy was formed and maintained shows that, so far from the Government's resting under any obligation to them, it has laid them under heavy obligations to itself.

They were received into the Academy as beneficiaries. They were not pensioners, receiving a reward for previous service, but novices, apprentices, pupils, whom the Government was willing to educate solely for reasons of public policy. The fact that they received a gratuitous education for no merits or services of their own does not give them any claims upon the Government, which has already granted to them benefits incalculably in excess of those which it is able to give to the sons of citizens generally. They had no claim at the outset, and they could derive none from being merely the recipients of favor. Besides, they not only received their education, but, during the years of pupilage, while rendering no service, they were granted a liberal allowance in the shape of pay to the amount of $600 a year.

There are few young men in the country that would not eagerly avail themselves of such advantages for their intrinsic worth, and deem themselves highly benefited by receiving them, without any question of ulterior prospects. In addition to this, each cadet discharged received from the Government the sum of $950. Moreover, no Secretary of the Navy can find any use for this increased number of officers. At the time of the passage of the act of 1882 there were 1,817 naval officers on the active list. Their annual pay amounted to, and they were receiving, $3,825,400, while the Government only had thirty-one naval vessels in commission, being fifty-nine officers for each ship, or one officer to every five men.

The number of effective ships has not been increased since that date, and the desired and hoped-for addition of new ships which may be made to the Navy during the next five years is not likely to more than take the place of wooden ships which must be dropped from the service. Even with the reductions made under the act of 1882, should no change be made in the policy then established, the United States Navy yet remains top-heavy, and this bill proposes to aggravate that evil, and, at the expense of the Government, to do away with a large part of the saving which resulted from that act.

The act of 1882 did nothing more than the French and German Governments have done, which, after the Franco-Prussian war, adopted the policy of educating a large number of young men, and, at the end of their course, discharging them, so that in case of emergency they might be drawn upon in increasing the official personnel of the navy.

Should Congress be disregardful of these considerations and pass the present bill, we recommend certain amendments which will become necessary in order to prevent this undue increase of officers of the naval establishment. If this bill is forced through, then something must be done to prevent further graduations from the Naval Academy—for instance, shutting up that institution for several years. A provision should also be made adapting the upper grades of the service to the condition of the lower grade established by this bill.

The committee will present amendments covering these points, and, as a part of this report, the committee appends to this the accompanying communication and papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine desire to have the views of the minority read?

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the other report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The views of the minority will be read.

The Secretary read the views submitted by Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, February 15, 1886, as follows:

The undersigned, members of Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 371) to prevent the retroactive operation of that portion of the naval appropriation act of August 5, 1882, limiting the number of graduates of the United States Naval Academy to be retained in the service each year (printed on page 285 of volume 22 of the United States Statutes at Large), having carefully considered the same, beg leave to submit the following as their views:

That upon examination we find that a number of the graduates of the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md., who have successfully completed the four years' course at the Academy and the two years' service at sea, have been honorably discharged from the service under the provisions of said act.

We are of the opinion that said law is retroactive in its operation, and worked great injustice to the cadets who have been already discharged, and will work great injustice to all those who had entered the Academy prior to August 5, 1882, for the following reasons, to wit:

That all the cadets, at the time of their entering said academy, were required to sign articles agreeing to serve the Government for eight years. This was an express contract and it has been broken by the Government, for many of them have been discharged at the end of six years, without cause, and without fault on the part of those so discharged. There was also an implied contract on the part of the Government to render their position a permanent one, in consideration of their devoting their lives and labors to their profession, and giving up all ideas and opportunities of making a livelihood by any other means. These young gentlemen also faithfully performed their part of this implied contract, and were rewarded for so doing by being discharged from the service. If the Government can break its contracts, it is difficult to perceive how its citizens can be expected to give it that support and confidence so essential and desirable for it to have.

The idea that a cadet who graduated at Annapolis was secured a position for life, or during good behavior, was universally accepted and is sustained by the fact that it was so held by the most prominent and distinguished men connected with the highest branches of the public service.

The law under which these young gentlemen entered the service entitled them to promotion on the completion of the six years' course, according to section 1521, United States Revised Statutes, which reads as follows: "When cadet midshipmen shall have successfully passed the graduating examination at the Academy they shall receive appointments as midshipmen, and shall take rank according to the order of their merit at graduation." We find that all these young gentlemen complied with the provisions of said section, but instead of receiving "appointments as midshipmen" they were discharged from the service.

We further submit that in 1878 a similar act, in relation to the cadets of the Military Academy at West Point, was passed by the House, but was amended in the Senate June 8, 1878, so as not to affect those cadets who had entered the Military Academy prior to the passage of said act, which amendment was concurred in by the House. In view of this precedent we see no reason why the act of August 5, 1882, should not be similarly modified, as herein recommended.

In this connection we also submit that in the Forty-seventh Congress the bill herein proposed was introduced in the Senate and passed that body unanimously, and we believe that it only failed to pass the House from lack of time. At the last session of Congress it was again reported favorably, and almost unanimously, by the House Naval Committee, but again failed to be acted on in the press of legislation. These facts are alone sufficient to demonstrate the merits of the bill herein proposed.

We further submit that the annual Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy in June, 1883, made the following recommendation in their official report to the Secretary of the Navy, to wit:

"We recommend that the act of August 5, 1882, be amended, as a similar act in relation to cadets at West Point has been, so as not to include those cadets who had entered the service before the passage of said act.

The last Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, in June, 1886 renewed the above recommendation in the following terms:

"The attention of the board having been called to the fact that the Board of Visitors in June, 1883, recommended that the act of August 5, 1882, be amended, as a similar act in relation to cadets at West Point has been, so as not to include the cadets who had entered the service before the passage of said act: Resolved, That we concur in this recommendation, and respectfully renew the same for the consideration of Congress.

We further submit that this recommendation, as made by two separate Boards of Visitors to the Naval Academy, composed of members of both branches of Congress and eminent representatives of the Army, the Navy, the judiciary, and the people, and appointed for the very purpose of investigating and reporting to the Secretary of the Navy the needs of the service and the Naval Academy, should be of sufficient weight and importance to secure the passage of this bill at the earliest opportunity.

We further submit that, by three separate, recent, and unanimous decisions of the Court of Claims, through a mere technicality in the law, cadet-midshipmen are to be discharged, while cadet-engineers who entered at the same time are to be retained. Cadet-engineers are graduated after four years, while, through the provisions or a like clause, cadet-midshipmen are graduated only after a six-years' course. Thus they entered the academy together, pursued their studies for the same length of time, and finally received their diplomas of graduation together; then, through a difference of wording of two clauses intended to convey the same idea, cadet-midshipmen are discharged while cadet-engineers are retained. Late Secretary of the Navy Chandler says: "Equitably, if the cadet-engineers have any claim, the cadet-midshipmen have the same."

We further submit that it has been said, in opposition to this measure, and to distinguish it from the act relating to the cadets at West Point, that the course of studies at Annapolis better fits one for civil life than that at West Point. The reverse of this, however, is the case, as a comparison of the curriculum at the Military Academy with that of the Naval Academy will show. The last two years of the course at the Naval Academy are given entirely to technical studies, and the additional two years of the course at sea are given solely to the practical application of the technical studies, thus further unfitting the graduates for civil life. On the other hand, the graduate of the Military Academy is at least an accomplished civil engineer, and, as such, can always find a lucrative employment. At the end of their six years' course these young men were examined in the following subjects: Practical navigation, compass deviation, theory and practice of gunnery, French, Spanish, seamanship, and naval tactics, and practical steam-engineering. And we do not think that this examination is, in subjects, likely to be of much assistance in civil life.

We further find that all of the classes of 1881 and 1882 were in actual service when the act of August 5, 1882, was passed. Not only had they completed the four years' course at the Naval Academy and received their diplomas of graduation, but they were then serving at sea. Even if desirous of resigning after the passage of this act, in order to engage in some business or profession, their absence from the United States made it almost impossible to secure a position, and, even if they could have done so, the cost of returning to the United States would have been so great that they were forced to remain in the service until the completion of the two years at sea. The law was not operative when they entered the Academy, and five years later was made to affect them, and is thus retroactive and in effect an ex post facto law.

In conclusion, we admit the power of Congress to pass the act of August 5, 1882, but maintain that, as a matter of right, equity, and justice, there should have been incorporated therewith a proviso that said act should not affect any one who was in the service at that time.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill amended as herein proposed.

We submit herewith, as a part of this statement, the opinions of the United States Supreme Court in the cases of The United States, appellant, vs. De Witt C. Redgrave, and The United States, appellant, vs. Lyman B. Perkins.

M. C. BUTLER.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this bill comes before the Senate with a great underlying influence which makes itself felt in a thousand ways. Here are one hundred and forty-five young men who have been supported by the Government for six years, have received $600 a year besides, who are not wanted in an overburdened Navy, whose intrusion into the Navy against all its needs will create a suffocation at the lower end of the ranks. Yet these young men are scattered all over the United States with relatives and friends and powerful intercessors, and early and late their solicitations and entreaties for the Government to take them back and give them more than it has given, although it does not need them, have never ceased. There is no member of the Senate who has not been importuned by these young gentlemen and their friends who are so desirous of coming into the service, and knowing the good nature of Senators, and having been importuned and solicited myself, I realize the disadvantage that any Senator has who stands here and opposes the bill in the interest of the public service.

Many Senators do not recall until it is brought to their mind the legislation which gave rise to this bill. In 1882 Congress was confronted with this condition: There were in the American Navy a little more than thirty ships that could be used to any advantage floated on the waters of the globe. They were rapidly decaying, and no steps had then been taken to substitute new and better and modern constructed ships. It was a poor, small, dwindling navy, and had been growing less and less from year to year, because the old style of naval construction comprehended wooden ships that with the best of care will only last for a little while. As the years went by, after the war had ceased, the establishment so far as its ships were concerned kept running down smaller and smaller.

But while that was true, the establishment so far as officers were concerned kept growing larger and larger; and in 1882, at the time of the passage of the act which took the naval establishment in charge and tried to reform abuses in it, we were confronted with the fact that there were in the Navy thirty-one naval ships in commission and one thousand eight hundred and seventeen officers upon the active-list to man that small Navy. How many officers do Senators suppose were then found for every vessel we had in the service? Fifty-nine officers for every vessel, and one officer to every five men.

There was not a sincere friend of the American Navy at that time who did not realize that the establishment was top-heavy; that it needed more ships and less officers, and that reform was needed.

So the Congress then in session and in life proceeded to do two things: first, to provide for building up the naval establishment so far as ships went. So it passed the act of 1882 providing and making plans and giving directions for the building of new ships. When that was done, under the act of August, 1882, Congress proceeded to deal with the other evil, and that was the top-heavy condition as to officers. There was a superfluity of rear-admirals, captains, commodores, commanders, lieutenant-commanders, lieutenants, and ensigns, but, above all, the evil which was found then that was making it impossible to correct this trouble in the Navy of being over officered, the great trouble, was that there was pouring in at the bottom of the Navy, from the graduating classes at Annapolis, such a number of men that they could not be taken care of. There was no room for them; there was no duty for them; there was nothing for them to do.

Already in the July previous to the passage of the act the number of midshipmen had reached ninety-one, with enough more of those whose promotion had been temporarily delayed to make it one hundred and eleven. Every grade above was full. The next class coming up for final graduation numbered seventy. So the list of midshipmen in August, 1883, making a fair allowance for casualties, would have been one hundred and seventy-five naval officers in the lowest rank. The next four years would have carried it up, if Congress had not intervened, so that in the lowest grade, that of midshipmen, there would have been two hundred and forty-eight officers.

What would have been the result? The result would have been no kindness to these young men. With that grade so full and promotions only occurring as they did by vacancies above, through death or retirement or resignations, which of course were rare, these young men would have remained in that grade for fifteen or twenty years with no service to perform.

The question considered then by Congress was how should this trouble be met? What was a fair remedy? How should we deal with the question of the Navy being overstocked, as it was admitted by everybody that it was, with officers? There was an indulgence felt, and a kindly feeling exhibited by Congress for the officers of the Navy who had spent years in its service, who had performed arduous service in the war, many of them having distinguished themselves by gallant exploits. It was not felt that they ought to be taken rudely and dismissed from the Navy. A commodore who had spent thirty years in the service and was too old to turn to other vocations, it was not considered fitting to turn out. So the plan was adopted of beginning at the lower end, and Congress passed the legislation which is found in the act of August 5, 1882.

What was a fair way of dealing with this great current that was pouring from Annapolis into the Navy and suffocating the lower ranks and preventing promotion, which is the only thing which ought to justify a young man in seeking the Navy? What was the fair way to do? There were several projects. One was to shut up the Annapolis Academy for five or six years, until this overplus and surfeit had been removed. That was deliberated upon; and considering what the Government had established there, considering how much money had been expended by the Government, considering that here was a most complete school, that its course is thorough and efficient, that its instructors were able and distinguished, and that everything was going on properly so far as the course was concerned in educating these young men, it was concluded that it would be a rude measure to shut up the academy.

Then what was the next thing which should be done? That was the scheme which Congress fell upon and provided for, and that was that as the classes graduated, not including the graduates of that year but for the years to come, the real needs of the service should be considered. How much room will there be in the lower rank, midshipmen or ensigns, whichever you call it, by vacancies occurring through promotions above for these great classes that come out? Congress declared that the numbers needed, that the promotions made vacant from year to year in the lower class, never to be reduced below ten, should be taken—where from?—from the brightest and best spirits in the different classes.

There is always an effort and a struggle to get into the Navy. Every Senator who has served in the other House knows that when he has had an appointment to make, or a vacancy at the school at Annapolis or West Point to fill, there are dozens of bright young men who are eager to go into the service for the education that it gives, and for the opportunity, if they choose, of remaining in the naval or military service. There is nothing to hinder resignation. It has been going on continually. When the war broke out in 1861 some of the ablest and brightest of the graduates of our military institution at West Point, having received the benefit of the Government's education, had left the service and had gone into private life. Nobody complained. There is no obligation that prevents it. When the graduate from Annapolis or West Point has received the benefactions of the Government, has gotten an education that tens of thousands of bright youths in this country would lie awake nights striving to find methods and ways of obtaining—after he has obtained that education there is nothing to prevent his resigning and going into private life. It has been done repeatedly, and will always be done, and no disgrace attaches to that. There is no obligation to remain, and therefore there is no obligation on the part of the Government to keep up a useless establishment.

Congress said these young men are crowding into the service. They desire the education. It is said in this condition of the Navy, crowded as it is, suffocated as it is, top-heavy as it is, fifty-nine officers to every vessel, one officer for every five men, not reckoning the retired-list, Congress will take each year the ten brightest of the youths who have passed through the course and who have come out and graduated at the end of their six years. It has been found that the regular promotions and vacancies absorb about seventeen or eighteen a year; but the best of the class are to be taken, at least ten.

What shall you do then with the others? What was the condition of this throng of youths who are now clamoring and knocking at the doors of Congress demanding to be let into the Navy that is still overstocked and overcharged? Each one of them had been taken into the Government school, had been carefully trained, had been educated in many different directions; and it is a good education. The youth who goes there and gets the knowledge of mathematics, of engineering, of literature, of constitutional law, of French and German there imparted, if he has got anything in him that entitles him to enter with any advantage in the race that young men in this country make with their fellows, he has an education that equips him for any field of endeavor that lies open before the young man of the United States of America. Congress realizing that, said that after we have taken out the brightest and the best—I mean those who rank the highest; it does not always follow that they are the best in the struggle of life, but it is the only test you can make—after we have taken these young men who stand the highest in their class and are certified and are needed in this Navy of ours, the other boys whom we have carefully trained and reared and given their education and given $600 a year, we will give an honorable certificate of discharge to and the sum in money of $950 each.

I ask Senators to consider the hardship upon these young men, each one of whom had sought to enter into this establishment of the Government, each one of whom had been benefited by an education that ninety-nine out of a hundred bright American boys are never able to compass. Each one of these young men had been trained in mathematics, in engineering, in Spanish, in French, in the beauties that dwell in English literature, and in the other parts of the course that are a foundation for use in every-day life. In addition to this they had received $600 per year, and when it was found that the Government did not need their services they were given a certificate of honorable discharge of their graduation and proficiency and $950 in money.

The whole basis of the vociferous clamor that is set up here now to take these youths back into a navy that does not need them is the hardship that there was in the legislation of Congress. I am not ashamed of the part I had in that legislation. I am not ashamed of having realized, as all other Senators who served with me then, that we were confronted with a navy that was dying of dry-rot at the top, and that Congress had the nerve and the sense and the wisdom to seize this question right by the throat and deal with it not only in a wise way but in a humane and a generous way. I deny that there is anything in the claim that there was a hardship to these cadets who had been so educated by the Government. I deny that there is anything in the claim that the Government was bound in obligation, having invited these young men there, to keep them in the Navy when it had no need for their services.

There is neither sense nor law in that proposition. Does anybody claim because we have got an army to-day of thirty-odd regiments that if the needs of the country were only found to require twenty we could not reduce the Army and turn out men who are already in it? But that was not done by the act. It was no such act as that. It only went to the bottom and provided for those who had not entered the service as officers, but were being instructed at Government expense, and paid them a liberal bonus besides. There was no obligation to keep these men any longer, and every cadet clamoring as he does to enter service, earnest and beseeching as he is at the door of his member of Congress, and asking to have the chance to compete for a nomination to Annapolis or West Point, goes in subject to two conditions, that either he can go out after his graduation, if he chooses, and no man shall say him nay, or if the Government does not need him in the service it may at any time so declare, and he is simply left as a citizen, with the benefit of the education that he gets.

I deny the proposition which is heard early and late as the foundation of this bill that the Government had invited these young men in there and was bound to keep them. I have shown what would have happened if that rule had been carried out. You would have had in three years as midshipmen two hundred and seventy-odd young men at the bottom, in the lower rank, and they would have staid there until they were forty years old before any of them would have got out of it. The natural promotions that would have taken place by vacancies or by deaths and retirements in the upper ranks would have kept these young men there. No naval establishment in any civilized enlightened country on the globe ever conducted its affairs in such a way as that. It was for this reason that Congress interfered and passed the act of 1882, and every young man had notice.

Now, what took place after that? Just what ought to have taken place. In every class a new stimulus was infused into the minds of the cadets. It was not simply that by touch-and-go he might be able to get through and go into the Navy and be commissioned and be taken care of for the remainder of his life, but he had upon him the stimulus that applies in other institutions where the topmost rank is a desideratum which he may be striving for constantly. Every cadet knew after the passage of that act that if he lagged in his studies, if he failed in deportment, if he was indolent, or vicious, or slothful, he would be consigned to the obscurity of the bottom of the class and would never enter the service; but the studious boy, the earnest boy, the sober boy, the ambitious boy, whose mind was bent upon service in the Navy and upon ornamenting and illustrating its annals as he might hope to do afterward, had upon him the incitement and the spur that if he studied and behaved well he would be one of the ten or fifteen or twenty who were to be selected.

From that time the boys who have so studied, who have so attained these uppermost ranks, and who have graduated since high in the class, have been taken into service, have received their commissions as midshipmen or ensigns, and have started on their field of promotion.

I call the attention of Senators to one thing that happens from this bill, and it is a thing that Senators ought not to forget. If a class of bright boys in 1884 graduated and fifteen were received into the Navy because they had studied best and made best proficiency and took highest rank and received their commissions as ensigns, every one of those fifteen bright boys, if the bill passes, is graded down and razeed and put below boys who will be put back into the Navy and be placed above them. Does anybody want to see that done? Has any Senator here a young friend who under the law has gone on and obtained his rank and got his position and been appointed afterward into the Navy, who wants to see his promotion delayed by taking men who have been out of the service for two years, and who have been looking about for other business, and who have finally come here to the doors of Congress as suppliants, put into the Navy over and above those?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Right there, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. Yes, and I know what the Senator is going to say.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I doubt it. Allow me to ask him, if under the amendment proposed, the meaning and effect of this legislation, if it passes——

Mr. HALE. In line 13?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. In lines 11, 12, and 13, which read:

> Be restored to the service and take their places on the Naval Register in the same manner as if said act had not been passed.

Premising that the graduates are those who passed their four years ending in 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886——

Mr. HALE. Not four years but six years.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. They pass through four years at the academy. Under the law, as I remember it, they are then compelled to undergo two years of service at sea.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is an old student and authority in naval matters. I know he has not fallen into the error which is common to men who have not given special study to this branch of the service by supposing that in law there is any difference between the last two years of a cadet's term and the first four. It is a term of six years. In the last two years the service of the cadet is at sea, or rather his duty and his studies; but he never completes his course until the end of the six years. There is no course of four years.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I was going to ask the Senator a practical question.

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. After having passed four years at the academy the cadet is then, under the act of 1882, discharged from the service, I understand.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no!

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Not until the six years?

Mr. HALE. Not until the six years. I will read the law if the Senator would like to have me do so.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Tennessee that at the expiration of four years each cadet does receive a certificate, not a diploma of graduation, but a certificate that he has completed his academic course. At the end of six years he receives his diploma of graduation, the last two years having been spent at sea.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. As a matter of fact, then, since the passage of the act of 1882 the graduates passed and got their certificate or diploma of four years, and we have each class of 1883, 1884, 1885, and 1886 who went into the service of the Navy upon the sea. Is that true as a matter of fact?

Mr. HALE. No; they do not go into the service.

Mr. BUTLER. They go to sea.

Mr. HALE. They go into a course of instruction; but they do not go into the service until after six years. They get no commission; they do not become officers of the Navy. I ought to know something about it, because I drew the provision when a member of the other House, if I may be allowed to allude to it, and had charge of the bill. It was found then that there was an overplus of the lower rank, too many graduates, and we increased the service to six years instead of four years, so that no member of Congress could get from his district a new cadet oftener than once in six years, and we provided that part of the course should be upon the sea. But the whole course is entire and complete as a six years' course. In the act of 1882 we provided that every cadet at the end of six years who was not needed in the Navy for its service or because there were vacancies should receive his certificate and his $950. Then we also provided that any cadet who chose, not that the law sent him out, but that any cadet who had served for four years, a special clause—

That any cadet whose position in his class entitles him to be retained in the service may, upon his own application, be honorably discharged at the end of four years' course at the Naval Academy, with a proper certificate of graduation.

But that was the act of the cadet.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. There is a class who did avail themselves of that legislation.

Mr. HALE. A very small class.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Whatever number it is, if they should be exempted under this proposed legislation—in other words the four years' man who got his diploma and then went out of the service should not stand in the same position with the six years' man.

Mr. HALE. I do not think he ought.

Mr. BUTLER. He does not.

Mr. HALE. So far as the Senator from Tennessee goes he is correct, but he does not go far enough.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Now, will my friend from Maine indulge me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to say at the proper moment, and I take that to be now, that familiar as I was with the legislation of 1882, and agreeing with the Senator in almost everything he has said in regard to the top-heaviness of the Navy and the absolute necessity and duty upon the part of Congress to relieve that top-heaviness, concurring in that motive and object as I did in 1882, yet the result of the legislation which was had was to place these young men out of the service, who, whatever may have been the nature of their contract or agreement with the Government, felt, if not from any other consideration, from pride, that having devoted their services to the Government of the United States it was a mortification ensuing from the legislation that put them out of the service; and this reproach commenced with them then lasts with them now. I believed it was then unjust, I believe it is now unjust; and no matter how top-heavy the Navy may be, there is a consideration, and that consideration is of justice to these young men, which demands legislation like this.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator might have waited until I got through with my speech before he made a speech on the other side. Still, if as a matter of taste he preferred to come in now, I do not object to it. I am very glad of one thing. I am very glad the Senator is not so anxious for economy and for reform in the Navy as he has been in the years past. He says he does not care how top-heavy the Navy is, he does not care how little these young men are needed, he does not care how overcrowded the service may be, he does not care what were the considerations that applied at the time, in which he says we agreed—he cares for nothing of that kind, but he does think that these young men ought to be taken back into the Navy.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend indulges in his usual shrewdness in placing an argument of that kind in my mouth.

Mr. HALE. I am stating not the language, for that I am incapable of reaching, but I am certainly stating the conclusion the Senator from Tennessee arrived at. I understood him to announce his proposition, and his position at last was that these young men ought to be taken back notwithstanding these other considerations.

Mr. WHITTHORNE rose.

Mr. HALE. There will be ample opportunity when I get through, unless the Senator desires to say something specially now.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. No; I was simply going to say that the Senator will find me always the advocate of reform, but always at the same time the advocate of justice.

Mr. HALE. When interrupted by the Senator from Tennessee I was talking about what is a manifest injustice in the mind of every Senator here if he realizes it. Let me again state the proposition. Under the legislation of 1882, in the year 1883 there came around a graduating class which the Secretary of the Navy said numbered seventy. Under the old law, that is if it had not been touched, they would all have been put in. Under the act of 1882, which it is sought now to undermine and destroy, instead of seventy graduates being put in the Navy the fifteen or sixteen highest were taken into the Navy. Did the Government incur any obligation to these young men? Is the Government under any obligation to protect the fifteen or sixteen young men who went into the service in 1883 at the head of their class? Is the Government under any obligation to the young men that when they have been so selected under the law they shall be allowed to go on and receive due promotion as vacancies occur? But if you pass this bill you will now take the remainder of that class who went out under that legislation, who have been divorced from the Navy, who have been outside of its uses, its sympathies, and its purposes, and dump them in back over the heads of men who graduated before. You disturb the arrangement, because it is provided in the bill that it shall be precisely as though they had continued and remained in the Naval Academy and in the service.

Mr. PLUMB. As to pay and all?

Mr. HALE. There is a provision that cuts off back pay; but as to rank and status and everything else they are put back as if they had not been out. The Secretary of the Navy in a letter he has written here declares how these young men will go back. Let us see how it will work. When Senators talk about the obligations of the Government to these young men, I beg them to bear in mind the obligation the Government is under to the graduates of the academy for the six years beginning with 1883 who go to the top of their class and are put in and start out on the race of promotion which invites young men into the Navy. I invite Senators to the consideration of the obligation that the Government is under to the bright men of these classes and not the men who are dropped because they are not at the head. Does it follow that a young man who can not get the foremost position in his class, who is turned out under the law, shall come in afterward and be put above the bright men of the next class who graduate? That is the operation of the bill.

Here is the disposition that will be made of these one hundred and forty-five men who, if the bill passes, will be dumped on the Navy that does not need them:

Of the former, thirty-nine would come between Ensigns Gilbert Wilkes and Spencer S. Wood.

Is there any reason why Spencer S. Wood, who has performed his duties well, who has followed the course of his class well, who has got up in the upper fifteen and been put into the service and is making his way for the next rank above him, should now be detained six or eight years in his promotion by these men being put back over him? The Secretary of the Navy makes a statement here in a letter which I wish to read.

Mr. CAMERON. What Secretary?

Mr. HALE. Mr. Harmony, acting Secretary of the Navy. I have just read the assignment these young men will receive if they are taken back into the Navy.

Thirty-nine would come between Ensigns Gilbert Wilkes and Spencer S. Wood, eight between Ensigns John M. Poyer and S. Dana Greene.

I do not know of any reason why this young officer of the Navy, Mr. S. Dana Greene, of a family long distinguished in naval pursuits, naval exploits, and naval warfare, who has devoted his life to the Navy and who has been able to keep at the head of his class, should be delayed in his promotion six long years by men who have gone out under law coming back and being put over him. I think if the Government has any obligation it is to the men who determine to stick to the service and who go on and show themselves the first of their fellows.

Twenty-one after Ensign Harry A. Field.

And then he goes on to say—and I want Senators to bear this in mind—

At the rate of promotion since June, 1883, should these officers be restored to the service, it would retard the advancement of the officers affected about six years.

Pass the bill, and an ensign who has graduated since 1882, or will graduate up to 1887, inclusive, will have six years of service in the lowest grade in the Navy added to his time, and he will be forty years old before he will be able to emerge from that lower rank into the rank of a junior lieutenant. It is restoring the very condition that was sought to be removed and cured by the act of 1882; and can any Senator who is pushing and urging this bill without regard to the needs and wants of the naval service tell me what can be done with these boys? What can the present Secretary of the Navy or any Secretary of the Navy do with these youths that come back here after having been dismissed under law, passed off from naval service and naval surroundings and the naval atmosphere? What is he going to do with the one hundred and forty-five young men, for that is what the Navy Department says will be brought into the service?

When the committee was investigating the subject it directed an inquiry to be made of the Secretary of the Navy. I send to the desk and desire to have read his reply, dated Washington, February 3, 1886.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 3, 1886.

SIR: In answer to the inquiry contained in your communication of January 22, inquiring whether the needs of the service at the present time are such that there is any call that a large number of young officers should be suddenly brought into the service, as contemplated by Senate bill No. 371, I would reply that Congress has already fixed the requirements of the service as to the number of officers by statute, in which I acquiesce. At the present time I see no need for a greater number. If this large number is to be added to the list, I think it should be accompanied by a change in the law, making permanent increase in the number of officers in the different grades; otherwise the excess above the statutory limit will be so large in the grades of ensign and assistant engineer at the present time as to make promotion from the lowest grades so slow that the service would hardly offer temptations to ambitious men.

It can be readily seen that a present graduate entering the service would remain, under the present law (with this addition of sixty-eight to the list before him), a very long time in the grade of ensign before the promotions would have brought the number down to the legal limit, and cleared off those above him, so as to enable him to get promotion.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy,

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator proceeds, I wish to ask him whether that point which he has just made, and which is confirmed by this letter, would be well taken if the Navy were enlarged and reformed, as he himself thinks it should be?

Mr. HALE. I was coming to that, and I may as well answer it now, because it will be said that as top-heavy as the Navy is and overofficered, if we build it up then there will be need for these officers. That is not a new subject to me. I have had something to do with the attempted increase of the Navy and with the efforts which have been made to that end. There are already four new ships either launched or in process of completion and ready to be launched to be added to the Navy; but in the term of any Senator here all the additions that are made to the United States Navy will not more than take the place of ships that go out by rot and destruction. In six years from now, even if we go on at a much hastier pace than Congress is going in constructing new ships, we shall have no more need for officers, young officers or old officers, than we had when this act was passed in 1882.

We had then thirty-one ships, requiring officers to command them, and it will be long years before we get thirty-one new ships needing officers to man them. And so the additions will only take the place of the ships that go out, and we shall not need any more officers six years from now, and probably ten years from now, than we needed in 1882. But with a list of eighteen hundred and odd commissioned officers on the active-list of the Navy to man sixty sail of steamships, there will not be a man of us serving in this Chamber, I venture to say, when the American Navy will reach the point of needing that number of officers.

That is a complete answer to the allegations that the additions to the Navy will require these young men. They will not. The additions to the Navy, even as I want them and as other Senators want them who have urged that course and voted for it in the years past, never will reach the number of officers that are in the Navy to-day. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for having suggested this point, because it was one of the things on my memorandum that I was to touch upon.

The Secretary of the Navy has pictured the evils, and certainly he is impartial; he has got no traditions to bind him; he has had no association with legislation that commits him to one side or the other; he is an arbiter; he is presumed to know what the service needs; he comes into the Department from outside without any prejudices; and when he is called upon with an inquiry as to the needs of the service and what he would do with these young men, that is his answer, and he was dealing only with about half the number because he only reckoned upon those who had already gone out in the three past years. He did not reckon the other classes that make up the six years' time from 1882 that are comprehended in this bill, because this bill applies to all of the classes, to every man who entered the Annapolis Academy before the act of 1882, and therefore runs six years ahead, and the Secretary was only dealing with two-thirds of those when he wrote this letter. He struck the whole here when he said:

Otherwise the excess—

He says you have to enlarge the list of officers, you must give us some more commodores, some more rear-admirals, some more captains. Why, Senators, we have got rear-admirals, commodores, captains, lieutenants, ensigns, enough to man a fleet four times as large as there is to-day in the American Navy. The Secretary says:

If this large number is to be added to the list, I think it should be accompanied by a change in the law, making permanent increase in the number of officers in the different grades; otherwise the excess above the statutory limit will be so large in the grades of ensign and assistant engineer—at the present time as to make promotion from the lowest grade so slow that the service would hardly offer temptations to ambitious men.

Corresponding to it—

That is the whole theory of this bill. It is sinking every good of the service in the future; it is dwarfing and dwindling and killing ambition for the sake of putting these young men back and over-suffocating an already too large lower grade, and destroying the spirit that ought to animate cadets and ensigns and every lower grade in the Navy. It is wanton and wicked and cruel beyond comparison to the young men who are in the service. That is the underlying fault of the bill; that is the wrong principle on which it is graded; and the Secretary found it when he first began to investigate it. It kills ambition. Who wants a Navy without ambition? Who wants a Navy with the young men who are not first, but who are last in their classes, coming in and delaying the promotion of the men who are first?

Mr. BUTLER. I am very glad I did not interrupt the burst of eloquence the Senator was delivering, but I should like now to ask him what the Secretary of the Navy is doing with the thirty-four engineers who were restored by the Supreme Court in that suffocated condition of the Navy?

Mr. HALE. That is one of the memoranda I have here, and I thank the Senator for having referred to it.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to have that explained.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary of the Navy is to-day embarrassed by the decision of the Supreme Court with reference to engineers. It does not touch this question; it has nothing to do with it whatever. It was decided on a side issue, that is, that the cadet-engineers were not like the cadet-midshipmen, but were graduates when the act of 1882 passed, had already gone out at a four years' course, and could not be reached by the law. The Supreme Court has decided that those engineers are back, but the Secretary says he knows no more what to do with them than he would if so many wild men of the woods came here. He has no place to put them, and moreover he says as a matter of law—and it is a grave question whether he is not correct; I think he is—that Congress having fixed the numbers of the grade of assistant engineers, and he having filled those places by regular appointments under commission of the President confirmed by the Senate, and every number of the grade being full, these men are gone notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court. And if there is anything in the decision which was rendered years ago, which has been the law of both the military establishments since, that where a vacancy is filled it puts the other man out, then there is no place for these assistant engineers; every place in the grade has been filled; it is to-day with full ranks, and there is no room.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator will remember that the Supreme Court has decided that there were no vacancies, and consequently there was nothing to be filled. That was the suggestion I wished to make.

Mr. HALE. I did not put it in that form. There are no vacancies, and the court has so decided. So this situation in the Engineer Corps is an illustration of the evils of this bill. You may pass an act here, you may put these men on the Secretary, but if any man can tell what he will do, he has got a brighter vision and clearer ken than I have. These assistant engineers are by no means in the service as commissioned officers by the decision of the court. The court simply say that the act of 1882, which declared that it should not apply to any officers then in the Navy, did not apply to these men because they were graduates and had already passed their course, but it does not put them in commission——

Mr. BUTLER. They draw the pay all the same.

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. BUTLER. I know.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine what embarrassment it is to the Secretary of the Navy if they are neither in the service nor drawing their pay?

Mr. HALE. It is the same embarrassment to the Secretary of the Navy that it has been to the Senator from Massachusetts when his door has been besieged early and late by these young men who want to get back into the Navy. I am saying nothing against them, nothing against their character, nothing against them in any way, except that there has been no end to the importunities of them and their friends; and that is embarrassing; it has embarrassed me, but it did not embarrass me enough to lead me to go, out of sympathy, for a bill that will put the American Navy back for years in its efficiency.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator answer another question? If the Navy has so many more officers in it than it can find employment for, why would it not be a good plan to suspend the supply for a while?

Mr. HALE. Shut up the academy at Annapolis?

Mr. DAWES. Suspend the supply at Annapolis. Why do we continue to educate the same number every year, and come here and say that we have got a great many more than we know what to do with every year? Is it not the part of wisdow to suspend their operation until the equilibrium between supply and demand is restored?

Mr. HALE. I have an answer to that. That was considered by the members of the committee who have joined me in this report, and we determined that if this bill was pushed through and urged through by sympathy and appeals, it was the duty of Congress to close the school at Annapolis, and we report an amendment that from and after the close of the academic year 18—, the Naval Academy shall be closed for six years. That is one of the contingencies, one of the emergencies that this bill puts us in.

Mr. DAWES. Then it is proposed to say that if you pass this bill you suspend Annapolis. If there is any propriety in suspending Annapolis to lessen the supply of officers, is it not just as proper whether this bill passes or not?

Mr. HALE. Our act of 1882 is the thing that takes care of that question if it is not interfered with, and that is that no men are received into the Navy who are not wanted by promotion to fill vacancies. We have settled all that if they will only let the act alone.

Mr. DAWES. It takes care of it in this way: It educates seventy or eighty each year and takes ten of them into the Navy and turns the rest out upon the world with an education furnished at the expense of the United States. That is the method by which the act proposes to shorten the supply hereafter. The more sensible way, it seems to me, is to suspend it until the time may come when the demand for officers in the Navy will require the educating of more men.

Mr. HALE. Now, will the Senator vote under any condition to close the school at Annapolis for six years?

Mr. DAWES. Most certainly I will do so rather than educate nine-tenths of all that graduate there at the expense of the Government without the slighest idea of ever utilizing that education in the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. Or I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts we may limit the number of admissions.

Mr. HALE. That has been done more than once.

Mr. DAWES. That is the same thing precisely.

Mr. HALE. Keep up your academy.

Now, does the Senator from Massachusetts know that these schemes are not as new as they appear to be? Does the Senator know that great nations passing through the experience of war and with the knowledge that comes of the need of an establishment, instead of closing their schools, do as France and Germany have done since their great war, keep up their establishments, provide a liberal education, and only receive into the service such young officers as are at the head of their class and are needed to fill the ranks. I have very great doubt whether that is not the wiser way. I do not look upon the money as lost that is spent in the education of these young men. They are found in every State; they have been imbued with the knowledge, with the atmosphere, with everything that is gained at the academy. They have the studies, the spirit, the patriotism, the interest in the flag, and they go out equipped for every-day life; and it is not lost. But above all, it does not lie in the mouths of the young men who have had this given to them (which the Senator from Massachusetts would rather take away and close up the school than to give) to come here and seek to be obtruded into a crowded Navy on the ground that they have been treated harshly and outraged and imposed upon by false obligations. If there is any complaint it is the complaint that the Senator from Massachusetts indicates here, that we have done too much and spent too much money for them.

Now, how much money will this cost? I have endeavored to proceed in the investigation of this matter with care, because I felt from the beginning the earnestness of the effort that was being made to push this bill to a passage in the Senate. I knew it was no light task to enter into the opposition to it, and I endeavored in every step to get my facts and to get them from responsible and impartial sources. Now what will this cost? I have the estimate of the Navy Department. Taking the basis that with only a portion of those who have already gone out coming into the service, as the Secretary says sixty-eight, it would increase the time of service six years, then the intrusion of this force into these lower ranks would add six years' service to begin with to that number more than we are paying for now. The Secretary has estimated that. It is easy enough to estimate it.

Cost of maintaining sixty-eight ensigns for six years, $489,600.
Cost of maintaining thirty-four assistant engineers for six years, $346,800.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator surely does not put that last in as one of the estimates of cost, $346,800 for the engineers. That whole question has been eliminated from this bill.

Mr. HALE. Only for the two classes. The decision of the court only applied to two classes who have gone through four years, but it does not apply to the classes running ahead.

Mr. BUTLER. No; for the very reason that that designation has been abolished in the Naval Academy. There is no such thing as cadet engineer. Therefore, that $346,800 is not a proper estimate.

Mr. HALE. Then, in addition to that, the Secretary reckons the cost of the ensigns to be received from the classes of 1886 and 1887, $306,000, making in all as the actual expense in the next six years $1,142,400. And then he goes on:

If the pay of these one hundred and forty-five officers which the bill proposes to now introduce into the Navy should be carried out, through all the grades of the service until their withdrawal, retirement, or death, maintaining the average of service in the Navy, it would involve an expenditure to the Government of more than $6,000,000.

One of the things sought by the legislation of 1882 was not only to make the naval service more efficient, but to make it less expensive; and the legislation incorporated into the statute by the act of 1882 in the volume before me in the long years to come saves to the Government millions of dollars.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Maine if there was any statute in existence at the time these young men entered the Naval Academy which would lead them to suppose or believe that they were not to receive their commissions if they graduated?

Mr. HALE. I have said already that there is nothing whatever in the law that obliges the Government to keep these young officers in the service a day beyond its needs. There was no statute that needed to be repealed when the act of 1882 was adopted. The law was clear and plain, and left it entirely in the discretion of the Government, as it does in any military establishment.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that there was a tacit understanding, and had been from the foundation of the Military Academy and the Naval Academy, that those who graduated should receive appointments; and did not that understanding exist up to the passage of the act of 1882, which cut off a certain portion from appointments?

Mr. HALE. The history of the military establishments shows that young officers at any time have left the service voluntarily, taking the advantage and benefit of all they had gained from the Government. So the Government heretofore has interfered with the naval establishment; it has done what it would in its own sweet will; it has closed the academy, has changed from one field to another; limited grades; it has reduced and cut down, as it has a right to do. The Senator, from his knowledge of the law and the principles that guide the other military establishment of the Government, knows that the Congress to-day, without violating any statute or any obligation, could reduce the number of brigadiers-general and retire one-half of them from active service if it chose to do so, if it found there was no need of them.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Texas will permit me, I can perhaps give this statement:

In 1878 a similar act, in relation to the cadets of the Military Academy at West Point, was passed by the House, but was amended in the Senate June 8, 1878, so as not to affect those cadets who had entered the Military Academy prior to the passage of said act, which amendment was concurred in by the House.

Mr. MAXEY. The exact point I wanted to make.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know why that was done?

Mr. BUTLER. To prevent being retroactive.

Mr. HALE. But does the Senator know why Congress declared that it should so apply only to those who had not entered? For the reason that the condition of the Army never in any degree was parallel to that of the Navy. Up to the present year the graduating classes at West Point have not been enough to fill the Army vacancies, and the President has been going off every year making appointments from civil life to second lieutenancies in the Army. So there was no need of any provision that should cut off graduates of West Point from commissions, but in the Navy it was entirely different.

Mr. BUTLER. It has not infrequently happened, as I remember, that there were a number of cadets of West Point as additional second-lieutenants attached to companies awaiting assignment under their regular promotion. This very Congress has passed an act relieving the present graduating class at West Point of the operation of the act of 1878.

Mr. HALE. Because the class is extraordinarily large. Nobody knows why it is so. Does the Senator deny that up to the present year the graduates from West Point have been less than the vacancies in the Army, and that the deficit has been made up by appointments from civil life?

Mr. BUTLER. It would not have been so if the present class had been taken up by assignments in the Army, because this class is about seventy.

Mr. HALE. It is a very large class.

Mr. BUTLER. Therefore there would not have been places for them all.

Mr. HALE. The present class is so large that it creates a condition entirely different from anything that we have witnessed before; but I repeat that heretofore the classes have been too small, the vacancies have been too many. In the Navy just the reverse is true. The vacancies have been but few, the classes have been inordinately large; and we had to consider the condition as we found it.

Mr. MAXEY. The point I endeavored to present to the Senator from Maine I do not think I have accurately submitted. The Committee on Military Affairs, in view of what they regarded as the equity of the case, reported to the Senate a bill the object of which was not to apply the provision of law that would cut off those who had entered the academy prior to the passage of that law. That act was in full force and effect when this act of 1882 passed and when these young men entered the academy. Would they not reasonably, in view of that general policy which is known to all the world, have a right to conclude that the Congress of the United States did not intend, in justice and equity and fair dealing, to make the act retroactive—in other words, to apply it to those who had entered prior to the passage of the act?

Mr. HALE. I do not admit that this act is retroactive. It does not apply to a single officer in the Navy. These young men at the academy are not officers; they are not pensioners; they are young men who have gone there at their own insistence, been accepted by the Government, not as officers, but in order to be educated; and there is no retroactive effect upon them. On the contrary, it provides that they may go on after 1882 and complete their studies, receive their $600 a year, get their certificate of graduation, and then get their $950, and there is no retroaction in it. It carefully in terms declares that it shall not interfere with a single officer of the Navy. Can I tell whether a young boy fifteen years old entering the academy thinks that the Government is going to keep him all his life? Quite likely he does think that; but he would go in just as quickly and there would be just as many applications for this great boon that the Government confers on these youths if he understood the law as lawyers understand it and as Senators ought to understand it. There would be no difficulty in getting applications for admission.

Mr. ALLISON. Evidently this bill can not be finished to-night, and if the Senator from Maine will yield for a motion to go into executive session I will make that motion.

Mr. HALE. There are some considerations touching this very matter of expense and other things that I desire to present before I close, but I find it rather difficult for me to go on now; and I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

OHIO SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred sundry memorials from the State of Ohio in regard to the recent election of a Senator in that State, be authorized to employ a stenographer, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That after the disposition of Senate bill No. 371, the rest of to-morrow and next day be devoted to the Calendar under the five-minutes' limitation for debate and subject to objection, which objection shall operate only to pass over the case, retaining its place on the Calendar; and that no motion shall be made to proceed to the consideration of any bill where objection is made to the consideration of the same.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 8, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 18, 1886.

Horatio S. Tryon, to be postmaster at Weedsport, Cayuga County, New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 7, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. S. W. HADDAWAY, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BARKSDALE, for to-day, on account of indisposition.

To Mr. WILKINS, indefinitely.

To Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, until the 20th of this month, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLEY. A question concerning the business, and in my judgment the character, of the House, which I will state as briefly as I can.

On the 15th day of January the House adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills granting pensions reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities only, be considered.

On last Friday the House met under that order, and I find in the RECORD of yesterday a twenty-five-column speech on Edwin M. Stanton, by the Representative from the eighth district of Alabama, made when avowedly no pension business was before the committee and no bill for removing disabilities; and I desire to bring to the attention of the House the fact that sessions granted in order to promote meritorious business are being perverted to the basest of ends, the slander of the illustrious dead who died from devoted service to their country.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that the gentleman from Alabama is not in his seat.

Mr. PAYSON. He ought to be.

Mr. BEACH. And I would state further that the speech he delivered was not delivered upon any Friday evening session as I understand it. [Cries of "It was!"]

Mr. THOMPSON. It was delivered on Friday evening.

Mr. KELLEY. It purports to have been delivered by unanimous consent at two of these meetings, namely, on May 28 and June 4.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, how does this come before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that he rose to a question of privilege, but the Chair thinks that up to the present time the gentleman has not presented a question of that character.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman ought not, it seems to me, to avail himself of an opportunity to make such a statement in the absence of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. KELLEY. I propose at the proper time to move that these remarks which were not within the scope of the order authorizing those meetings, and which reflected not on the absent merely but on the dead——

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not stating a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes if any rule or order of the House has been abused by a member, and a motion is made to correct the abuse or to censure the member, that would involve a question of privilege in the first instance which the Chair must entertain. But it is not within the province of the Chair to pass upon the question as to whether or not the rules and orders of the House have actually been abused. That is for the House to determine, and to take such action as it may deem proper. Up to the present moment the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made no motion which presents a question for the consideration of the House. The gentleman, the Chair understood, was proceeding to state he was about to make a motion.

Mr. REAGAN. I propose to insist on the objection till the gentleman makes a motion.

Mr. KELLEY. I shall then make the motion that these remarks——

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman proposes to make a motion personal in its character, I suggest to him it would be eminently proper for him to wait till the gentleman from Alabama who made the speech shall be in the House, instead of proceeding to arraign him in his absence. If the gentleman from Alabama were not to be present any more during the session it might be proper for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to proceed now. But I think it would be only fair to that gentleman, who has certainly something to say in his own behalf, to postpone this matter until he is present.

Mr. KELLEY. Can I have the assurance that I will have the floor when the gentleman from Alabama is present?

Mr. BEACH. It is a privileged matter.

Mr. HERBERT. I can give the gentleman no assurance of that kind. If this is a question of privilege now it will be then, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will certainly lose none of his rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make his motion and let it stand, if he desires, to be called up at some other time.

Mr. KELLEY. That will be agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion, the Chair understands, is to expunge these remarks from the RECORD.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir; I propose to move that they be expunged from the permanent RECORD, and to prohibit the printing of further copies by the Public Printer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to have the RECORD corrected. In the RECORD of yesterday morning a portion of an interlocutory discussion between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] and myself is taken from the context where it occurred and is inserted at a subsequent part of his speech where no conversation or discussion took place between him and me.

Mr. HERBERT. I will submit also to the gentleman from Iowa that he postpone his explanation till the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is present. I know nothing about it myself, but I put it to the gentleman's sense of fairness that that would be the proper course.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Alabama state whether his colleague is in the city?

Mr. HERBERT. I understand he is.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I understand if a correction of the RECORD is to be made it must be done within three days.

A MEMBER. Four days.

Mr. HERBERT. I know nothing of the gentleman having left the city. He has been here all winter, and I presume is here now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will not ask, then, to make the correction at this time, but I will make it within the period falling within the rule if the gentleman should not be in his seat before that period expires.

Mr. KELLEY. That the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] may have notice of my purpose, I announce that I will ask the Speaker to recognize me to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal upon my statement that I have a privileged motion or a question of privilege for discussion.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CRISP. On Saturday last, during a debate in this House upon a proposition pending before it, I was betrayed into a warmth of expression which I regret. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], whose long service to his country and whose years entitle him to the respect of the public, was and is in full possession of mine. The expression used by that gentleman or that I understood him to use excited a feeling that prompted that warmth of expression which I now say I regret. I have had no communication with that gentleman on this subject, and I make this statement to the House here and now because I feel—I really feel—that I regret those expressions, and I know of no more manly thing to do than to give public expression to what my feeling is in that regard. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that the gentleman from Georgia in interpreting my original remarks as having any reference to himself labored under an entire misapprehension. I presume that arose from the different standpoints from which we were discussing the same subject. I was discussing it from one standpoint and he from another. I accept very cheerfully and sincerely the expressions which have fallen from his lips, and I wish to recall any words which I may have uttered in the heat of debate which may have been regarded as unkind to him or unjust to the House. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions for printing and reference without debate, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments are also in order for reference to appropriate committees.

HOME-RULE IN IRELAND.

Mr. MAHONEY introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives earnestly sympathizes with Right Hon. William E. Gladstone and his associates in their efforts to secure a free parliament for the people of Ireland, and congratulate the people of that hitherto unhappy country upon the prospect of an early and successful termination of their long and patriotic struggle for the right of local self-government.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House is directed to communicate a copy of this resolution to Mr. Gladstone.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object.

Mr. MAHONEY. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Labor.

The question was taken on referring the resolution to the Committee on Labor; and there were—ayes 31, noes 77.

Mr. MAHONEY. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from New York, Mr. MAHONEY, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. BELMONT, to act as tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move to refer this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with instructions to report it back to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order under this call, because this is simply a call of the States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. MAHONEY, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. BELMONT.

The House again divided.

During the count,

Mr. HISCOCK said: I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Did I understand the Chair to say that after the decision of this motion it would be in order to move a reference of the resolution with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair upon reflection decided that it would not be in order, because this resolution is introduced under the call of States and Territories, and the rule provides that resolutions introduced under this call shall be simply referred to the appropriate committees.

The count having been completed, the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 133.

So the motion of Mr. MAHONEY was not agreed to.

The resolution was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PENSION DEPARTMENT.

Mr. NEGLEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

The Union armies were disbanded twenty-one years ago, nevertheless there are now pending tens of thousands of meritorious pension claims which have been under examination the greater portion of this time. A considerable number of these cases are accompanied by sufficient proofs to secure a favorable award from a competent jury in any court in Christendom. They will, in all probability, remain undetermined until the claimant appears before the supreme tribunal of justice, where there are no special pension detectives and boards of review.

Every applicant for a pension, and every witness to the hopeless despair of the disabled soldier, who, after years of fruitless effort to comply with the arbitrary and technical requirements of an "examiner," and who dies in poverty, is persuaded that the entire system is defective, and that the rules and regulations of the Department are uncertain as to the interpretation of the letter and intent of the pension laws.

The presentation of thirty-nine hundred and forty-eight pension bills during the present Congress, with a favorable action on seven hundred and thirty of these cases, is the most impressive and suggestive commentary upon the administration of the laws in the Pension Department: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a special committee, consisting of five members of this House, be appointed and directed to make inquiry into the administration of the affairs of the Pension Department; more particularly as to the method and practice of conducting the investigation of claims, the admission of evidence, and the propriety of continuing the excessive expenditure of money to carry on the present system, and report at as early a day as practicable the result of said inquiry, with such recommendation as shall arise therefrom.

That the committee be granted the right to send for persons and papers, to sit in session during the sessions of the House or after its adjournment; employ a stenographer, and to incur all reasonable and necessary expenditures which may be deemed requisite for the purpose of such investigation; such expenditures to be paid out of the contingent funds of the House.

SUSAN MAJOR.

Mr. OSBORNE introduced a bill (H. R. 9287) granting a pension to Susan Major, mother of James A. TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have read the resolutions I send to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FOURTEENTH WARD UNION REPUBLICAN CLUB——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what the paper is he sends to the desk.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is a resolution of instruction directing the Representatives from Pennsylvania, and myself especially, how to vote upon tariff bills, that association believing that a high protective tariff is to the best interests of the workingmen of the country, and that the Morrison tariff bill is a bad bill to their interests.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not need instructions. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I may not need instructions, but I desire the House to know the feeling of the people of Philadelphia on the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The paper is not in order under this call.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills, the object being to secure prompt action on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill before the expiration of the current fiscal year.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman will allow me to call up bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not yield unless the gentleman is entitled to the floor on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. COBB. I think I will be.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will consent to let us have the regular order to-day. It is not very often we have a day. It seems we ought to have the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on my motion. We have barely time to get the bill through before the expiration of the present fiscal year.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 81.

Mr. HOLMAN. In order that the responsibility shall not rest on the Committee on Appropriations I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40.

The SPEAKER. More than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. Count the other side.

The other side were counted; and there were—noes 86.

So the yeas and nays were ordered, more than one-fifth of those present voting in favor thereof.

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to continue the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 150, not voting 100; as follows:

Mr. HEARD. I am announced as being paired with the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. HANBACK. That pair relates to political questions; but not considering this as a question of that character, I have voted.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause a communication from the Senate to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 5, 1886.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 1204) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Albert M. Owen, and to increase their pension.

The bill was ordered to be returned to the Senate.

REPEAL OF PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the House Calendar, and pass the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. After the bill is read.

Be it enacted, &c., That chapter 4 of title 32, excepting sections 2275, 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2288, and section 2299 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all other laws allowing pre-emption of the public lands of the United States, are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and who has failed, from any cause, except by sale or disposal of his right thereto, to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under the homestead laws, may make a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies,'" approved June 14, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. That section 2301 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2301. Nothing in this chapter shall be so construed as to prevent any person who has availed himself of the benefits of section 2289 from paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered at any time after the expiration of thirty calendar months from the date of such entry, and obtaining a patent therefor, the proofs of actual settlement and cultivation thereof to be filed at least six months prior and as preliminary to the application for the patent, and in the same manner and to the same effect as is provided and required in section 3 of this act as to final proofs and the issuance of patents."

SEC. 4. That an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877, is hereby repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 5. That hereafter no public lands of the United States, heretofore offered at public sale, including abandoned military or other reservations, and except isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale or be subject to private entry.

SEC. 6. That section 2288 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2288. Any person who has already settled on the public lands, either by pre-emption or by virtue of the homestead law, or any amendments thereto, and any person who shall hereafter settle on the public lands by virtue of the homestead law, or any amendments thereto, shall have the right to transfer, by warranty against his own acts, any portion of his pre-emption or homestead for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or for the right of way of railroads, canals, or ditches for irrigation or drainage across such pre-emption or homestead; and the transfer for such public purposes shall in no way vitiate the right to complete and perfect the title to their pre-emptions or homesteads."

Mr. PERKINS, Mr. HENLEY, and others demanded a second.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. PERKINS and Mr. COBB as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 48.

So (no further count being demanded) a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule fifteen minutes on each side are allowed for debate. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] in support of the motion and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to control the time in opposition.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, this bill is substantially the bill that passed the House during the last Congress. I regard it as by far the most important bill, with reference to our public-land system, that has been pending in any Congress during the last ten years. It provides virtually for the repeal of the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws. It amends the homestead law to the extent of requiring that the homesteader shall make his proof before he receives his patent, six months before the patent shall issue. As now he may do so at once and get his patent when the proof is filed.

Under our present laws with regard to pre-emption, timber-culture and desert-lands, in view of the passage of this bill, within the last two months the increase of filings under these laws has been enormous. I have a statement in my hand from the Commissioner of the General Land Office showing the increase of entries at the land office at Denver, Colo., which I incorporate in my remarks, which is a sample of what is being done at the other land offices in the West.

Comparative statement of pre-emption and timber-culture applications and cash entries in the Denver land office.

But I desire to call attention of members of the House to some items in this statement, before they vote, showing the increase in the filings of applications in contemplation of the passage of this bill, comparing the five months of 1885 with the same period of 1886. The figures are given as follows: In January, 1885, it was 120; in 1886, 118, or 2 less. In February, 1885, 157; February, 1886, 173. In March, when they ascertained the fact that the probability was the bill would pass, the entries in 1885 were 145, while in March, 1886, under the apprehension which I have alluded to, they increased to 379. In April, 1885, there were 116, while in April, 1886, they jumped to 552. From the 1st of May to the 19th of May, 1886, 410 were filed, while in May, 1885, but 141 were presented. I refer now to the filings under the pre-emption law. This shows therefore an enormous increase under that system.

Now let us look at the timber-culture act. In January, 1885, there were 57 filings; in 1886, the same month, 106. In February, 1885, 79, and in February, 1886, 135; in March, when they began to start, there were 95 in the year 1885, and there were 288 in the same month for 1886. In April, 1885, there were 77, and the same month of the next year they rose to 416. In May, 1885, there were 126, and from the 1st of May to the 19th of May, 1886, there were 301, which will carry it up near 700 in that month.

Mr. HOLMAN. At one land office?

Mr. COBB. At one land office. And with reference to nearly all of them, as I am informed, the increase is wonderful. The public lands are being taken up by speculators and not by homesteaders, the men who go on the public lands to make homes for themselves and their families.

The evidence before the Interior Department is that these men that file these entries are doing it for speculative purposes under all of these three laws; and we believe it is necessary in order to preserve the public domain for future actual settlers that these laws should be repealed and thereby stop these frauds.

I know it will be insisted that the desert-land law ought not to be repealed; that, if changed at all, it ought to be amended merely. It is admitted by all, I believe, that that law is unfortunate in its provisions, and gives to speculators and those who go upon our public lands to plunder them the right to do so at their will. But they say that the desert lands are such that unless they can be held in greater quantities than 160 acres, as provided for by the homestead laws, entries will not be made, because a man can not live on that quantity of desert land. That may be true, but your Committee on Public Lands believed that the best thing to do to preserve our public lands was to repeal these laws, and to take our chances of passing others which will hold the public lands for actual settlers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has occupied five minutes of his time.

Mr. COBB. I reserve the balance of my time after yielding five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. NEGLEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] before he yields the floor answer a question?

Mr. COBB. I can not in the time I have.

Mr. PAYSON. I reserve my time until the other side is heard.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentlemen from California [Mr. HENLEY].

Mr. HENLEY. I shall confine myself, Mr. Speaker, simply to a protest against the provisions of section 4 of this bill. I have some misgivings about the wisdom of a total repeal of the pre-emption law. From various sources, not from speculators, but from people in my State, I have had many protests against entire abrogation of that law. Amendments to prevent fraud are what is needed. I have no doubt that frauds have been practiced under the operation of that law, and I join in what the gentleman from Indiana has said in regard to them. But as to the repeal of the law out and out, its total obliteration, without reservation, I have some very serious doubts as to the wisdom of that policy.

I know this country has progressed in a most wonderful degree, challenging the admiration of the world, under the present land system; but I on the whole shall have to support this bill and am in favor of the pre-emption law.

The fourth section provides for the repeal of the desert-land law, which is in operation in California, Oregon, Wyoming, and other outlying regions in the western portion of this continent. The Committee on the Public Lands has now on the Calendar a bill providing for the amendment of the desert-land law, for the repeal of which this section provides; and I think the situation is somewhat anomalous. In my judgment the more logical and sensible way to do would be to amend this bill, striking out the section repealing the desert-land act, and then pass the bill now on the Calendar under a favorable report amending the latter act.

I simply rise for the purpose of placing upon record my protest against the repeal of the present desert-land law. I know it ought to be amended, but it ought not to be repealed without something being substituted in its place. I should like to have time to explain what are the provisions of the bill now on the Calendar, with a favorable report from the Public Lands Committee, amending the desert-land law. The question of irrigation of desert lands is one which now convulses the State of California from center to circumference, and in its presence every other question is dwarfed and belittled. It is of transcendent importance to our State to pass the law I have spoken of. I am opposed to the unconditional repeal of the law. As it is, its operation has been subject to frauds and abuses; but my effort before the Public Lands Committee was to have it amended, not repealed outright. As to the bill itself, I shall be constrained with some reluctance, owing to section 4, to support it; but I do so, for the reasons stated, under protest, and I give notice that at as early a day as possible I shall press to a vote my bill amending the desert-land act.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In the form in which this bill is brought up it can not be amended in any way.

Mr. HENLEY. I know that.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There are provisions of this bill which I can support and others which I can not. It is alleged frauds are committed under these land laws. That is true. I am not only opposed to those frauds, but I am in favor of so amending these laws as to prevent them. It would have been as easy for the committee to have proposed remedial legislation as to have proposed this absolute and peremptory repeal. What would be the effect of it? That no one can obtain land except by homesteading; and the day this bill becomes a law every acre of land held by railroads will be doubled in price. That is the first effect of the bill to which I call attention. The railroad companies alone would have public lands to put in the market. They would be the only merchants in the market, and you must buy from them or not at all.

The second objection I have is that from the very nature of things in the far West men can not homestead large areas of land. Where land can be used only for cattle purposes you can not homestead 160 acres, or rather you will not, for the reason that one can not support himself by raising cattle on 160 acres. So that this legislation simply puts a bar against all settlement of those lands by the people along about the Colorado line.

As I have said, I would be in favor of amending these several laws so as absolutely to prevent fraud; but I will not vote for this bill without a possibility of offering amendments, seeing its effects as I do. There are many reasons which could be given against it, and which in the limited time that I have I shall not enter upon now. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PERKINS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, if it is permissible under the rules, I would like to reserve my time until five minutes more of the time in support of the bill is consumed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can do so.

Mr. COBB. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I am aware that it is not unusual for gentlemen having bills in charge when presenting them for consideration here to emphasize their importance; but I hazard nothing in saying, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no bill presented to the House for its action at this session of greater moment than the one now being considered.

For several years past the necessity for reform in our public-land system has been painfully apparent to every one who has had occasion to examine existing conditions and notice the administration of the laws as they stand, and to study the effect of present action upon the future condition of the country.

It is a matter of common remark, in a general way all are cognizant of the fact, that the vast empire of our public domain is being rapidly diminished. An area of public lands which was a few years only ago regarded as practically inexhaustible, which could and would afford comfortable, cheap homes for the adventurous pioneer, on soil of great fertility, has been so reduced by prodigal donations and grants for different purposes—mainly educational and for transportation—and by lax administration of imperfect laws and fraudulent evasions of their provisions, which rendered possible the acquisition of great areas of lands by individuals in fraud of the spirit as well as the letter of these enactments; this area, I say, sir, has been so greatly reduced and diminished that it is a serious question to-day to the honest toiler in the more thickly settled portion of the Union, desiring to take advantage of the homestead law, where he shall find an available tract of fertile land suitable for agriculture.

This generation has lived to see this vast amount of land substantially disposed of, and should the existing laws be allowed to remain on the statute-book, I am confident that there are those now taking part in the action on the bill who will see every acre of arable land belonging to the nation disposed of, as well as that which by irrigation may be made productive.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if there is any sentiment prevailing among the people of this Union about which there is almost absolute unanimity, and which embraces every opportunity to give to itself expression, it is that a stop shall be put to these methods of disposition of the public lands, and that the residue now controlled by Congress shall be held for the benefit of Americans alone, who shall be actual settlers in homesteads only in small allotments not exceeding 160 acres, and which shall be given them without cost, except the usual small fees to the local land officers.

This same public sentiment also demands that the great areas of lands offered as bounties by the Government to railroad and wagon-road corporations, and which have been by the Interior Department withdrawn from the operation of the general land laws of the United States, so that settlement upon them was impossible by the citizen, although unearned—that these lands, to which the corporations interested were not entitled by the terms of the laws making the grants, or at least by an equivalent equity, should be restored to the public domain for the benefit of actual settlers only, as I have before stated.

To that end, sir, have the labors of the Committee on the Public Lands been directed, especially during this and the last Congress. These labors have resulted in the presentation to the House of the various forfeiture bills which have passed, those now on the Calendar, as well as the bill now being considered, the object of these bills being to repeal all such measures now on the statute-books as render possible the improper acquisition of great bodies of the public lands by individuals or corporations, and to reclaim and preserve all public lands for the purposes stated.

These laws, which the committee think should be repealed, are the pre-emption, the timber-culture, and the desert-land acts. These the committee earnestly insist should be wiped from the statutes, and in that way the door be shut against the continuance of the frauds to which somewhat in detail I shall presently call the attention of the House and, I hope, the country.

I know there are many gentlemen about me, possibly a large proportion of the House, who have a very vague idea of the details of our public-land system, and hence of the necessity of this action. The localities from which they come are not affected by the existing laws; nor have they had occasion to examine the matter in connection with the performance of these public duties.

I trust I may be pardoned if I take a few minutes in giving such an abstract of the legislation as will make the present situation intelligible.

In earlier days the practice of disposing of the public lands was this: When they should be surveyed they were, by proclamation of the President, offered for sale, at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, a minimum price of $1.25 per acre being demanded.

Practically, at such sales very little land was sold, and that remaining unsold was technically known as "offered land," and was thereafter subject to what was called "private entry;" that is, the right of purchase by any one at the local land office, in any quantity, at $1.25 per acre.

The policy was, as is apparent, to sell the public lands as rapidly as possible for the purpose of obtaining as much revenue as possible therefrom, and this policy of administering the affairs connected with the public domain continued for many years; and indeed large areas of "offered lands" still are held on the books at the Land Office, located especially in the South, and which are now being rapidly taken up by capitalists in large bodies.

Under this practice, and especially beginning about 1838 to 1840, a very large proportion of the "surveyed lands" thus "offered" were secured and held in large bodies for speculative purposes, and the settler was asked a largely increased price for them. This drove the settler beyond the limits of the "surveyed lands," and settlements were made upon not only "surveyed" but unsold lands, but on unsurveyed lands as well.

This led to the passage of the pre-emption (or prior right of purchase) law of 1841, which gave the actual occupant the first right to purchase, but this act restricted the operation and privilege to "surveyed" lands, and this right was extended by the act of 1853 to unsurveyed lands.

The pre-emption law was the first general law of the United States for the disposition of the public lands in the interest of actual settlers, and under it, to a great degree, has been the marvelous growth and development of the great West and Northwest. But it must be kept in mind that the pre-emption law was a settlement law, and no one was entitled to the benefit of its provisions except an actual occupant of the land itself, and upon payment of $1.25 per acre.

In 1862 the homestead law was passed, which, in substance, gave the land, not exceeding 160 acres, to the settler on five years' residence.

But this act contained the provision of a right on the part of the settler to "commute" his homestead—that is, the right to buy the land at $1.25 per acre—after a limited period, so that the homestead act, with its commutation feature, was essentially the pre-emption law. And we have had since that two systems of settlement laws for the disposal of the public lands with the only result, after keeping up the two systems, of permitting acquisition under each of a farm of 320 acres to each settler.

For many years, as the area was so vast, but little thought was given to ultimate results under the practice of "private entries" in unlimited quantities and of double entries by "homestead" and "pre-emption." With the diminished area of agricultural public lands there have been no general proclamation for sale of such lands by the President for many years, and by the withdrawal of much land from private entry by executive order opportunity for speculation in the purchase of lands direct from the Government has been correspondingly reduced; and owing to greater demand for lands in late years for obvious reasons, such as the rapid increase in population, increase in value in farm lands in older sections of the Union, the discontinuance of public sales, &c., the ingenuity of capitalists and speculators has been exercised to evade the plain spirit of the law and to acquire lands evading the "settlement" provisions.

As I shall presently show, this ingenuity has resulted in frauds of the most alarming character, and which lead me to say that this bill is of so much consequence.

Later on, yielding to a sentiment that a liberal policy as to the planting of forest trees would encourage that practice in the great prairie regions of the Northwest, the timber-culture act of 1873 was passed.

That act provided that "any person" might make an entry of 160 acres "for the cultivation of timber thereon," requiring at least 40 acres of timber, &c., final proof after ten and within thirteen years from entry.

Various amendments have been made, so that now in substance the law requires that only one quarter-section in a section shall be so entered, that 5 acres shall be "broken" the first year, and 5 the second, and the 10 acres set to trees within the first four years, and that final proof may be made after eight and within thirteen years from entry.

As I think I shall fully show, Mr. Speaker, whatever the hopes were which inspired this legislation, they have wholly failed, and the act has been used as a basis of frauds similar in character to those under the pre-emption law, beside the further fact that the law is a failure by reason of its inherent defects.

This all results in the conclusion that the law should be repealed. The only other law of general application in force is the desert-land law.

As is well known, there are vast areas of land in the western, northwestern, and southwestern portions of the Union which, owing to the lack of rainfall, are unproductive of crops except when irrigated by artificial contrivances. The purpose of this act was to secure the reclamation of these lands thus barren and unproductive, and as the process of irrigation was necessarily expensive, it was urged that inducements of larger areas of land must be held out to secure attempts. So by the act land not exceeding 640 acres in compact form may be purchased at $1.25 per acre, 25 cents when the "filing" is made and $1 when the final proofs are made, if ever, and with this proof of conducting water upon the land in sufficient quantity to reclaim the tract. The abuses of this act will be noticed later. These, sir, are the laws of general application as to disposition of the public lands, and for reasons to be stated we recommend the repeal of all except the homestead law by this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill in substance passed both Houses of Congress in the Forty-eighth Congress; it has been recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for four successive years, and two Secretaries of the Interior, the present one and his predecessor, have favored its passage.

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; unless I misstate something. I shall then be glad to be corrected.

Mr. McRAE. I think you do misstate when you say that this bill passed both Houses. I ask whether section 5 ever passed either House?

Mr. PAYSON. I say that this bill in substance passed both Houses, and the only reason it did not become a law was because in the Senate a bill of a private nature affirming some private entries in Michigan was attached to it on the motion of a Senator from that State, and that amendment defeated the bill. But the principle of this bill has been recommended for four years past by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and also by the last Secretary of the Interior and by the present one.

Mr. McRAE. I assert that no such provision as is contained in section 5 ever passed either the House or the Senate or has ever been recommended by the Commissioner.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, the necessity for the passage of this bill is found in the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. For the last three years all the frauds with which the public land system have been tainted, and which have grown to such an extent as to have become a stench in the nostrils of every man who has undertaken to examine the subject, have arisen out of the existence of these laws upon our statute-book.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does this bill in any way affect the right of a soldier in making a land entry to have credit for his length of service?

Mr. PAYSON. I thank the gentleman for asking that question. It does not affect the soldier directly or indirectly. The provision of law which gives the soldier the right to be credited with his length of service is found in the homestead law in section 2305 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

SEC. 2305. The time which the homestead settler has served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, or if discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, without reference to the length of time he may have served; but no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements.

That provision is part of the chapter of the statutes on "homesteads," with which the bill does not interfere, except to extend the commutation feature to thirty months, and which I will explain hereafter.

The bill proposes the repeal of the pre-emption law, the timber-culture act, and the desert-land act, but does not touch the homestead law except to extend the commutation provision from six months, as it is now, to thirty months. It does not touch the soldier question at all one way or the other. I am glad the gentleman asked the question, because I understood my colleague, the chairman of the committee, to say in answer to a question by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] that it did, but that is a mistake. If he so replied he doubtless misunderstood the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am now advised that he did not hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman state what proportion of the public domain is now remaining that can be taken up under the homestead law?

Mr. PAYSON. Probably not exceeding 20,000,000 of acres. Take the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the last four years, and you can hardly find a page that is not bristling with accounts of fraudulent and fictitious entries, sometimes amounting to 30,000, 40,000, or even as high as half a million acres in inclosures based on these fraudulent entries. I have papers in my desk covering cases where at least a half million acres have been taken under fictitious entries. I have a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, saying that in Estes Park, in Colorado, 6,000 acres were taken at one time in behalf of mythical claimants, but really for a man who is a nobleman in England, the Earl of Dunraven.

This is the paper:

LARAMIE CITY, WYO., April 18, 1881.

SIR: Referring to your letter "A," of February 24, I have the honor to inform you that I went to Denver, Colo., on the 3d instant, and after conferring with the United States district attorney at that place, I found it would be necessary to go to Estes Park in order to get the information required to make a full and complete investigation of the alleged fraudulent entries of lands referred to in your letter.

I accordingly left Denver on the 5th instant and reached Estes Park the same evening, having traveled 35 miles with livery team. On reaching the park I found A. Q. Macgregor and others who have lived in the park and been connected with its settlement from the commencement. After obtaining all the information that was within reach in the park, I went to Fort Collins (the county seat of Laramie County) for the purpose of making an examination of the county records with reference to the transfer of any of the lands embraced in the list alleged to have been fraudulently entered.

For convenience I have made a tabulated statement, and inclose it herewith, of all the lands that have passed into the hands of Theodore Whyte, who has been the general agent of the Estes Park Company. This statement is marked Exhibit A, and shows in whose name the lands were patented, the date of the entry, the register and receiver's number, the date of the deeds transferring the same to Theodore Whyte, and the date of recording in the county records of Larimer County.

From A. Q. Macgregor and others of Estes Park I learn that the first-named thirty persons in Exhibit A have never lived in Estes Park, never made any settlement on the land, and, in short, never have complied with or attempted to comply with the law for the settlement on the public lands; and, in fact, these thirty names are believed to be fictitious, having no existence in fact.

As to the other eight names on the exhibit some of them have been in the Park occasionally and others have lived there, and a portion of them have made showing of settlement, but none have complied with the law by living on and improving the land. They evidently started out to take the land and transfer it to Theodore Whyte or the Estes Park Company, by prior agreement to that effect with Whyte.

The witnesses to the foregoing facts, and by whom they can be proven, are A. Q. Macgregor, Henry Farran, Lyman A. White, W. L. Walsh, and Charles Thorne, of Estes Park; Lewis Rowe, of Fort Collins; David Miller, of Lougmout; J. M. Cavanaugh, of Central Gulch, Boulder County; Hugh McDermot, of Griffith, Saint Vrain's Cañon; Dexter Smith, of Evans's Ranch, Saint Vrain's Cañon, Griffith; J. Evans, of Saint Vrain's Cañon.

Several of the above-named parties were witnesses before the grand jury who indicted the thirty parties first named on the exhibit some years ago, and who then testified to all the material facts I have mentioned.

If further testimony is needed the names of other witnesses can be obtained by referring to the old indictment in the Denver court. By the examination of the records at Fort Collins I find that all the lands embraced in Exhibit A (except those marked "not transferred") were conveyed by warranty deed to Theodore Whyte by persons representing the names on Exhibit A. The acknowledgments were made before either Albert B. Jones, George M. Howe, or Inon Brooks, notaries public.

On the 1st day of March, 1876, there was recorded a power of attorney from Theodore Whyte to Windham Thomas, Earl of Dunraven, of London, England, authorizing said earl to sell or dispose of Whyte's one-third interest in all personal and real property in Estes Park. Said power of attorney is recorded in Book I, pages 138 and 139.

On the 14th day of September, 1876, there was recorded a deed (without warranty) from Theodore Whyte to Frederick G. Cornish for all the land embraced in Exhibit A, the consideration being $5.

On the 5th day of September, 1876, Frederick G. Cornish made a deed of trust for all the lands named in Exhibit A, the consideration being $5, the consideration of the trust to hold said lands in trust for the Estes Park Company, or to dispose of the same in whole or in part, or to be governed by the wishes of Windham Thomas, Earl of Dunraven. This deed was recorded September 14, 1876, in Book I, pages 228 and 229. On the 4th day of February, 1879, David H. Moffet, jr., and Theodore Whyte deeded by quitclaim to the Estes Park Company all the lands described in Whyte's deed to Cornish (without any other description of the land); consideration, $1. This deed is recorded in Book L page 36.

So far as the county records show, the title now rests in the Estes Park Company to all the lands described in Exhibit A.

This corporation (Estes Park Company) is organized under the laws of Great Britain and doing business in Colorado.

Theodore Whyte appears to be the authorized agent and general manager of the company. The company is known and commonly called the English Company.

Frederick G. Cornish, to whom Whyte deeded the land, is a personal friend of Whyte. (Both are Englishmen.)

David H. Moffit, to whom the deed of trust is made (in part) by Cornish, is president of the First National Bank, of Denver, and I am informed the Estes Park Company do all their banking business with Moffitt's bank.

From all the facts and information that I have been able to collect, I am forced to the conclusion that none of these lands have passed through the hands of innocent purchasers, nor is the Estes Park Company, in whom the title now seems to rest, innocent purchasers, Theodore Whyte, its agent and general manager, having been one of the principal actors in all the transactions connected with the entry and transfer of the same, and, as I am informed, one of the principals in bringing about or inducing the fraudulent entry of the lands.

Whether any of the stock of the Estes Park Company has been sold or disposed of to innocent purchasers or not I have not been able to find out, but it is believed by persons who have good opportunities of knowing that none of the stock has been sold. If none of the stock has been sold to innocent parties there would seem to be nothing in the way of setting aside the patents, and in this opinion the United States district attorney fully concurs.

In conclusion I will add that I am forced to believe from all the circumstances and the testimony of reliable and trustworthy citizens of Colorado that this has been a deliberate and systematic scheme to obtain possession of all the best lands in Estes Park by fraud and perjury.

The other cases mentioned in your letter of February 24 will be reported as soon as I can make them up.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. M. JONES, Special Agent.

Hon. J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

Appended is a list of the lands, aggregating nearly 7,000 acres, and the names of the assumed entrymen, mythical and personal, under which these frauds were perpetrated.

Here let me insert some of the official reports bearing on this question, premising them with the statement that these are only typical of the situation. They could be extended, Mr. Speaker, almost ad infinitum:

[From A. R. Greene, inspector, November 3, 1884.]

Generally speaking, I believe that fraudulent entries of the public lands include a large per cent. of the whole number, excepting possibly cash entries.

The idea prevails to an almost universal extent that, because the Government in its generosity has provided for the donation of the public domain to its citizens, a strict compliance with the conditions imposed is not essential. Men who would scorn to commit a dishonest act toward an individual, though he were a total stranger, eagerly listen to every scheme for evading the letter and spirit of the settlement laws, and in a majority of instances I believe avail themselves of them.

Our land officers partake of this feeling in many instance, and if they do not corruptly connive at fraudulent entries, modify their instructions and exceed their discretionary powers in examinations of final proof. This is especially the case with entries under the timber-culture law.

At the very best, this law was a doubtful experiment at the start. The greater portion of the lands upon which artificial groves could be grown without irrigation had passed from the Government before it was enacted. I have never seen any instances of its success except in the eastern portion of Nebraska and Southeastern Dakota. I do not say there are no other.

The prime cause of failure lies back of any fault of the entryman, although his remissness makes the failure more complete. Natural causes and neglect together have rendered success impossible.

It is not a question of encouraging a climate and soil favorable to forest growth to greater productiveness, but one of compulsion against the embarrassments of an uncongenial soil and blighting winds.

The experiment has approximated success about as nearly as an effort to make water flow uphill. I doubt if the trees standing on any timber-culture entry west of the one hundredth meridian would retard a zephyr.

The hopelessness of the attempt was apparent to every one who was familiar with the soil and climate of the region proposed to be reclaimed at the outset, but the opportunity for getting a quarter-section of land for a trifle induces men to go through the merest form of compliance with the law and make up the rest by perjury. I hesitate to make the statement that in a large proportion of cases no pretense of complying with the law has been made, but I believe such to be the case. I have traveled over hundreds of miles of land in Western Kansas, Nebraska, and Central Dakota, nearly one-fourth of which had been taken under the "timber-culture act," without seeing an artificial grove even in incipiency, and can scarcely recall an instance in any one day's travel where the ground had been more than scratched with the plow for the purpose of planting trees.

I have seen small patches of land (possibly 5 acres) where the prairie sod had been "listed" in furrows 6 or 8 feet apart each way, and occasionally a sickly cottonwood sprout, 2 or 3 feet in height, of the thickness of a man's thumb, standing thereon. In other cases the land had evidently been honestly plowed at some time, but through neglect had grown up again to grass and the trees (?) were holding up their tiny, cattle-browsed, fire-burnt branches in mute protest against the farcical absurdity of the "timber-culture act."

As to the proportion of land entered under the timber-culture act that is not improved as required by that act, I give it as my opinion that in Kansas, Nebraska, and Dakota the proportion is 90 per cent. to 10 per cent. of bona fide and possibly successful cultivation.

The methods by which fraudulent timber-culture entries are made consists, first, of a failure by careless entrymen to comply with the law. A large class of homesteaders take up adjoining quarter-sections under this act, and intend after the lands have passed to patent to appropriate the whole of a wheat field or stock farm. They "don't want to be bothered with brush," and argue that the act was made to be evaded.

They go to the officer before whom final proof is to be made, and their neighbors, who are similarly situated and entertain like opinions of the land laws, appear as their witnesses. Probably the tract required to be cultivated may have been plowed and planted with trees or cuttings. It may have been subsequently cultivated after a fashion and gaps in the rows replanted with trees. These facts are dwelt upon by the witnesses, who expect a like favor of the entryman in their own behalf in the future. The officer sometimes volunteers a few questions to further convince himself that the law has been respected, and for want of any evidence to the contrary the proof is accepted and the final certificate issues.

The above represents the better class of timber-culture entries that may justly be termed fraudulent.

A more vicious system of fraudulent entries has been successfully practiced by and in the interest of cattle-men and stock corporations. If the law had been enacted solely for their benefit it could scarcely have been more successful.

I have been told that entrymen engaged in this character of frauds seldom make a pretense of plowing or planting trees, or complying in any particular with the law. My own observation confirms this statement, and I believe it to be true. This is largely the case in Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Nebraska, and New Mexico, where immense stock ranches have been established and all the valuable grass land and water have been secured. This system also obtains to no inconsiderale extent in Kansas, I believe.

The method is simple, effective, and infamous.

I have had occasion to inquire into its details somewhat in the examination of land offices in connection with charges of collusion on the part of the officers.

A "cattle king" employs a number of men as herders; "cowboys" is the popular designation for them. The herd is located on a favorable portion of the public lands, where grass, water, and shelter are convenient, and each herder is expected and required to make a timber-culture entry of lands along the stream. These entries often very nearly, if not quite, occupy all the watered lands in a township and render the remainder undesirable for actual settlement for farming purposes.

Thus an entire township, and frequently a number of townships together, are dominated by an interest the most inimical possible to ordinary agricultural operations and a development of the country. If a bona fide settler has located in advance of the cattle-man he is either bought off or scared off. I found one case where the evidence showed conclusively that bona fide entrymen had been driven from the land they desired to acquire by a party of men brought from a distant part of the State, who did not know the description of the lands they filed on until it was furnished by the man in whose interests the lands were being taken, and who furnished the money for the entry fees.

A strong presumption of collusion of the land officers was raised in this case, the preponderance of evidence being that these fraudulent entrymen were given the preference over others who applied to make bona fide entries.

It is unnecessary to multiply cases. The methods are similar—methods in which brute force is the larger factor and a defiance of law and decency the brazen boast. The results are identical.

Our land officers are largely to blame for abuses of the land laws in general, and the homestead law is no exception.

It seems to me there should be some way to distinguish between a fire guard of a few furrows plowed around a quarter-section and a corn-field—some way to determine whether a description of a house "14 by 16" referred to inches or feet square; whether the floor was bored or board, and whether the "shingle roof" meant more than two shingles, one on each side.

This may sound ridiculous, and yet the statement has been made to me that these simple evasions have been very successfully employed in acquiring homestead entries in Dakota and elsewhere.

I have found one land office where the rules were so lax that a house 6 by 8 feet, built of unbattened boards, was accepted as a "comfortable residence" in latitude 46° north.

A settler once importuned me to advise the land officers to allow him to make final proof before the expiration of the full time because "his family was anxious to go back to Chicago, and would be liable to freeze to death in the shanty if they remained on the homestead." This man was a minister of the gospel and a highly respectable citizen, but his moral perceptibilities were fearfully blunted when he came to consider land laws.

My observation has convinced me that entries of timber lands are made very largely in the interest of mill-men and lumber companies, their employés being used to perpetrate the frauds, very much as the herders of the cattle companies are in the case of timber-culture entries.

I have seen a mill-owner appear at a land office in company with seven or eight of his employés and assist them in making homestead filings, giving them the money for the fees. The most rigid examination and impressive administration of the oath failed to betray them into any confession of collusion, however, and all that could be done was to put a special timber agent on the track of an investigation. This was done, with what results I never learned.

As regards the unlawful fencing of public lands, the evidence is of the most positive and convincing character. It is notorious that extensive inclosures of this kind have been made in Nebraska in the vicinity of North Platte, and south of there at inconsiderable intervals all the way to and into the Indian Territory, including large areas of the States of Nebraska, Colorado, and Kansas. There are doubtless other similar unlawful inclosures, but I speak of those with which I am familiar.

These inclosures occasionally included settlements, and the stock companies have in some instances bought the settlers' improvements and amicably induced them to leave. In other cases, bloody feuds have been originated, of which there could be but one result, and that against law and justice.

The effect of such domination upon immigration and settlements is the worst that can be imagined.

The best lands, and practically all the waters, are controlled by men who have no interest in the development of the country, evade taxation, and in many cases owe no allegiance to our laws and Government. They have abundant physical power always at hand to enforce their schemes of spoliation and set the local authorities and people at defiance.

Settlers avoid such localities as they would districts stricken with a plague, and the tide of immigration turns back to publish and magnify the evil.

[From Special Agent Webster Eaton, Duluth, Minn., October 28, 1884.]

The territory operated in by me is in the northern portion of the State of Minnesota and is embraced in the Duluth and Saint Cloud United States land districts. It is a timbered country, and but a very small portion of the land is adapted to agricultural purposes. Fully one-third of the surface of the land in the territory referred to is covered with swamps. A large portion of it is also covered with ledges of rocks. About one-tenth of the land is covered with pine forests.

In reference to the Duluth land district I will make a few figures for the purpose of more thoroughly convincing you that my calculations and estimates are about correct. There are in this district 412 townships (some of them fractional). Of this number 305 have been surveyed and the plats returned to the local office, and 107 are yet unsurveyed. Two hundred and seventeen of the surveyed townships have been offered at public sale and 88 are unoffered.

There have been 2,361 homestead entries made in this district. Of these 887 have been what is known as soldiers' additional homesteads, and more than 1,000 others have been commuted to cash after a pretended residence of six months. Only 273 have been proven up on as actual homesteads, and a very large proportion of this last number has been by old soldiers, who were compelled to have a residence on the land but a short time. Up to this date there have also been 3,280 declaratory statements filed, upon about two-thirds of which final proof has been made. Thus it will be seen that there have been over 4,300 final entries of this kind made, to say nothing about the cash entries and entries at public sale; and I know that there are less than 100 actual settlers living upon any of these lands in this land district who make a living by farming, or who are trying to make a living in that way, and although I have made diligent inquiry during my stay of over one year in this place I have yet to find one person who is making a farm or trying to make a farm upon a pre-emption claim. Therefore I think I am fully warranted in saying that less than one-thirtieth of the claims taken in the Duluth United States land district are taken for actual settlement.

The favorite method of obtaining title to the pine and mineral lands of this section has been to hire men for a stipulated amount to pre-empt or homestead the most valuable tracts, the same to be conveyed immediately by warranty deed upon making final proof. The county records of the different counties in the district will bear me witness that this must have been the case, even though we had no other testimony. Nineteen-twentieths of this land has been taken for the pine timber that is upon it, and most of the remainder for iron and other minerals.

Less than one-tenth of the land entered in this way is now in the hands of the original claimants, and most of it is considered worth less than 10 cents an acre for agricultural purposes, and after the timber is taken off the land is looked upon as worthless, and men are not plenty who will pay the taxes upon this land for it. Nearly all of the land taken in this manner has been taken for extensive lumber firms in different parts of the State.

Mr. Speaker, I call especial attention to this report. Over forty-three hundred entries were carefully examined, all presupposing settlement, occupancy, and cultivation, and yet less than one hundred actual settlers who are farmers and not one farmer on a pre-emption claim!

[From Thomas W. Jaycox, special agent, Aberdeen, Dak., October 25, 1884.]

In my opinion not more than 30 per cent. of the land in this district entered under the provisions of the pre-emption and homestead laws is occupied by actual settlers. The practice largely prevails of immediately abandoning the land when cash entry is made for the same. Fully 75 per cent. of the entries made under the provisions of the pre-emption laws are made for speculative purposes, and not for a home and for cultivation. The claimants mortgage their claims for as large a loan as they can procure upon the land, then make a homestead filing, move in town, return to the East, where they came from when they entered the land, or offer the same for sale, when it is purchased by non-resident speculators. The result in either case is the same—the land is left unoccupied.

I am of the opinion that 90 per cent. of the entries that are made under the provisions of the timber-culture act are made purely and simply for speculation. The entryman when he makes the entry intends to relinquish the land at the end of three years at the farthest, when the relinquishment will be worth from $200 to $500. I am of the opinion that very few timber-culture entries will be proved up under the provisions of the timber-culture act. They will be turned into pre-emptions or homesteads and pass out of the hands of the speculators as soon as it becomes troublesome to comply with the law.

[From Special Agent William Y. Drew, Wichita, Kansas, November 26, 1884.]

My work has been performed almost entirely upon the Osage and Kansas trust and diminished reserve lands, which lands are only subject to entry by pre-emption; therefore my experience and observation in regard to the obtaining of the public lands by homestead or timber-culture entry has been very limited.

There are two kinds of fraudulent entries of public lands that have come under my observation, the "intentional" and "unintentional." The "unintentional" are those where, through the willful or mistaken interpretation of the laws relative to what is required in settling on and proving up on the public lands given by notaries or real estate agents to the persons intending to avail themselves of the pre-emption law, the entryman does not comply with the law in residing on or making a home on the land. In some cases they have been led to believe that, by putting up a sod inclosure 3 or 4 feet high and throwing some loose boards over it for a roof, two or three days before going to make their proofs, and having from 2 to 10 acres plowed, all they would have to do would be to claim it as their home, even if they never ate or slept on it, and it would be a substantial fulfilling of the law's requirements. Others have the idea that by going on the land about once every month, sometimes eating and sleeping upon it at those times and sometimes not, that they have fully complied with the law. They will have probably a small shanty or sod house that would hardly shelter a pig, and a few acres of breaking.

These parties very often build and make other improvements on the land and occupy it after proving up. Others dispose of the land very soon after proving up, though probably they had no intention of doing so at the time of making their proof. There are a good many cases of this kind, and I have had my attention called to several and have reported on them. The "intentional" frauds are where parties have employed others to prove up on public lands, furnishing the money to make the payments and paying the entryman a small amount for his services.

In some cases stock-raisers have had their employés prove up on lands on which their stock was ranging, and as fast as one batch would get through another batch would be employed, and in that way quite a large amount of the public land would be gobbled up. In some cases that have come under my observation the parties who it is claimed proved up on the land were never known or heard of in the vicinity, but the improvements made on the land have been done by parties who afterward obtained the land, and presumably hired the entryman just at the time proof was to be made to make the required affidavits. In other cases I believe that the entryman was a myth, and that the proof papers and deeds of the land were made out in the notary's office, fictitious names attached for both principal and witnesses, and acknowledgments taken by the notary as though the parties had actually been present.

There are other cases where parties made a business of proving up lands under different names, apparently for the purpose of obtaining from $50 to $100 by mortgage more than the land cost them.

Some parties have fenced in large bodies of the public lands through which a water-course is flowing, and by themselves and their employés have proved up the land adjoining the water-course. They claim not to interfere with settlers going into the inclosures, but as their cattle are running at large inside the settler can not raise a crop without he goes to the trouble and expense of fencing in the tract he claims, and then there is always more or less trouble in other ways between the settlers and herders in regard to keeping gates closed and getting settlers' cattle mixed with the cattle belonging to the stockmen. It is reported that two men (father and son) were killed in Barber County by herders on account of leaving the gates open while going to land they were claiming inside the inclosure.

[From Register and Receiver, McCook, Neb., November 26, 1884.]

All or nearly all the lands bordering on streams have been taken under the homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture laws. Proofs are made, and we hear it reported that deeds are executed soon after to other parties, but to whom we have no means of knowing at this office—presumably to cattle companies.

As to the timber-culture act, Mr. Secretary Teller, in his last annual report, recommended the repeal of this law in the following forcible language:

In my last annual report I called attention to the abuses flowing from the operations of this act. Continued experience has demonstrated that these abuses are inherent in the law, and beyond the reach of administrative methods for their correction. Settlement on the land is not required. Even residence within the State or Territory in which the land is situated is not a condition to an entry. A mere entry of record holds the land for one year without the performance of any act of cultivation. The meager act of breaking 5 acres, which can be done at the close of the year as well as at the beginning, holds the land for the second year. Comparatively trivial acts hold it for a third year. (During these periods relinquishments of the entries are sold to homestead or other settlers at such price as the land may command.)

My information leads me to the conclusion that a majority of entries under the timber-culture act are made for speculative purposes and not for the cultivation of timber. Compliance with the law in these cases is a mere pretense and does not result in the production of timber. On the contrary, as one entry in a section exhausts the timber-culture right in that section, it follows that every fraudulent entry prevents a bona fide one on any portion of the section within which the fraudulent entry is made. My information is that no trees are to be seen over vast regions of country where timber-culture entries have been most numerous.

Again, under the operation of the pre-emption, homestead, and timber-culture laws any one person may enter 160 acres in each class of entry, making a total of 480 acres which may be taken by one person.

[From J. L. Prichard, special agent, Gunnison, Colo., November 29, 1884.]

The principal frauds are perpetrated on what I have designated as the hay or grazing lands, and are in proportion to bona fide entries as perhaps 1 to 10. A large portion of them are made by collusion between the cattlemen and their employés. The method is well understood by the Department, and I may say in this connection that these are the most difficult cases a special agent has to deal with.

[From A. F. Ely, special agent, Pueblo, Colo., October 25, 1884.]

In Western or Southwestern Kansas, in the territory embraced in the Larned and Garden City land districts, a large number of fraudulent entries have been made in the interest of parties seeking to control large bodies of land for stock ranges. The methods used were to hire a number of young men ostensibly to assist in taking care of stock, but really to pre-empt a tract of land for the party or parties desiring to obtain stock ranges, the agreement usually being that the employé, in addition to his other duties, should file on some tract of land to be designated by his employer, claim that as his home for six months, and then make final proof and convey the land to his employer, the employer to pay all the expenses incident to the same. Since the institution of investigations of this class of entries the fraudulent entryman, instead of conveying the land by deeds, in many cases gives his employer a mortgage on the land. Eight-tenths of the fraudulent entries are pre-emptions.

The largest proportion of fraudulent entries is on the Osage lands in Kansas. Up to December, 1883, I think three-fourths of all the entries made on these lands west of range 16 W. were fraudulent, and were made in the interest of stockmen. Not one-twentieth of the lands entered on the Osage strip were occupied by actual settlers up to December, 1883. Outside of this tract about one-tenth of the land entered by pre-emptors in the land districts before named is actually occupied by settlers. About one-half of the land homesteaded in the same territory is occupied by actual settlers.

As to the land entered in the Pueblo land district of Colorado, I have not sufficient knowledge or information to enable me to give any correct information. I can state that in the survey of the Arkansas Land and Cattle Company's inclosure we found no inhabitants inside of it except one or two near Granada and three or four near Holly Station, and this inclosure contains over 600,000 acres of land, and, as I am informed, all of the water privileges in it have been pre-empted.

[From W. H. Goucher, special agent, San Francisco, Cal., November 17, 1884.]

I would estimate that but 5 per cent. of the entries made under the timber-culture and desert-land laws are in good faith and with the intent of accomplishing the purposes contemplated in those acts. Ninety per cent. of all the entries under these laws made in this district were filed within the past two years. As the requirements of the laws during such period are preliminary to the object intended, especially as to the timber-culture act, no estimate can be made as to the proportion of such entries as are really improved by planting and cultivating trees. My estimate of 5 per cent. is based on the number of entries that are relinquished and the general tone of the settlers from conversations, &c.

As a rule, it is safe to assume that the entries made under the desert-land law in the Los Angeles district are for the purposes of speculation, for the reason, as I have before stated, that owing to prior appropriation of the water it would be almost impossible to procure the necessary water to reclaim such lands, even if the entryman was honest in his intentions. During the year 1877, shortly after the passage of this act, a large number of desert entries were made in this district of which not 2 per cent. have been reclaimed, as contemplated in the act.

[From Receiver, Boisé City, Idaho, October 14, 1884.]

I believe it would be for the best interests of settlers if the desert act were repealed. Large bodies of land are under this act segregated from the public domain for a term of years by stockmen and speculators, who can afford to pay the 25 cents an acre for the use of the land for three years and the hope of selling out to actual settlers. So far as this district is concerned the desert act has been a drawback rather than a help or advantage. I would advise that it be repealed at the earliest moment.

The Idaho and Oregon Land Improvement Company have acquired title and control of large bodies of land in several localities in this district and the Hailey district for speculative and town-site purposes contrary to law, as I understand it. I refer to the Hailey district only for the reason that it was formerly part of this district.

[From Special Agent T. H. Cavenaugh, Olympia, Wash., November 8, 1884.]

I am convinced, from examination and investigation, that 90 per cent. of the homestead and pre-emption entries made within the territory named herein are made solely for the timber growing thereon, and because such lands are ready sale. By making use of the pre-emption and homestead laws the entrymen save in purchase of tract the difference between $2.50 and $1.25 per acre, which swells the profits when sold.

These, sir, are from the records at the General Land Office, and were all made under the last administration and to Mr. Commissioner MacFarland. They are only a few of the vast number of reports made by the special agents in the field and are typical of the rest.

I state to you, sir, and to the House that I have examined scores of these reports and they are all of the same tenor; there have been no exceptions in the last few years.

I have said these reports to which I call special attention were made to the last administration, and I have selected them for that reason.

I know that many attacks have been made upon the present Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office by some of the newspapers for their zeal in the matter of land reform.

From an intimate personal acquaintance with both those officers, and frequent association and consultation with them upon matters connected with the public lands, I know and take this occasion to say that both those gentlemen are heartily in accord with the public sentiment of to-day on this question.

The reports which come to them day after day from the special agents now in the field are practically like those given by me here, but I do not cite them in detail, contenting myself with referring to the fact and citing earlier ones to demonstrate that these abuses have been of long standing and that it is no recent discovery.

The opinion of Mr. Commissioner McFarland is best shown by an interview with him in 1884, published in one of the leading papers in the West, which I call especial attention to:

"How is the system of special agents working?" asked a Tribune correspondent of Commissioner McFarland, of the General Land Office.

"Satisfactorily. The special agents have been in the field about six months, and reports from some of them are received every day. I have examined and acted upon about eight hundred illegal and fraudulent entries reported by them. These entries covered about 128,000 acres, of which the Government would have been deprived except for the new service."

"Have any of the persons who held such entries appealed from the finding of the special agents?"

"Yes; in eighty cases only out of the eight hundred examed under this system have objections been offered to the proposed cancellation of the entries. This fact is significant of the correctness of the agents' reports and of the wholly indefensible character of the impeached entries. The reports are in all cases based upon a personal examination by the agent of each tract of land, and the entry is held for cancellation except upon positive evidence. It is further found that in few, if any, of the eighty cases have the objections come from the persons in whose names the entries were made. They usually appear to be from persons who furnished the money for the entries or bought them afterward."

"What kinds of lands did these fraudulent entries cover?"

"Pine-timber lands in Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Missouri, made ostensibly for settlement under the pre-emption and commuted-homestead laws, but actually to obtain the valuable timber for the nominal price at which agricultural lands are sold to settlers. The principal operators are persons largely engaged in the timber business, the 'settler' being a convenient myth. Another class consists of timber lands in California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory. The reports of special agents, particularly in California and Washington Territory, disclose a combination of large capitalists, English as well as American, to obtain title to immense tracts of timber land by hiring men, women, and children to swear to false affidavits that they make the entries as required by law for their own use and benefit, and not for speculation. The prices regularly paid for a set of false entry papers range, according to the reports, from $50 to $100. The Government gets $2.50 an acre, the land perhaps being worth ten times its cost to the speculators. Agricultural lands in Dakota have also received marked attention.

"The persons concerned, directly or indirectly, embrace English peers, Eastern capitalists, adventurous spirits who emigrate to the booming Territory to grow up with the country, and enterprising land-agents and attorneys. Pre-emption, commuted-homestead, and timber-culture entries are the favorite instrumentalities of fraud in this region. No sooner is a township of land surveyed than it is plastered over with entries and filings, more or less bogus, but generally more, and the actual settler who goes to stay, the farmer who is to produce the subsistence of the nation, must buy off these pretended claims at high rates before he can obtain the privilege of making an honest entry of the land. The timber-culture laws have proved especially advantageous to the fraudulent control of public lands. The principal sphere of operations under these laws is at present Minnesota, Dakota, Kansas, and Nebraska.

"The failure of the timber-culture law to produce the results contemplated and its success in promoting fraudulent land entries are paralleled by the desert-land act, the frauds under which are committed mainly in the Pacific States and Territories. But the frauds do not stop there. The Government price for coal lands is from $10 to $20 an acre. Fraudulent entries of coal lands are made under the pre-emption and other agricultural laws. The reports of the special agents cover heavy transactions of this sort in Colorado and other States in which coal abounds, the fraudulent entries proving to be the property of mining companies.

"But by far the most extensive frauds are found in the grazing country, where the cattle-kings have fenced in the country by whole counties, and the investigations by agents show that the land within these inclosures is being covered by bogus entries made by employés of the stockmen, the former supplying the needed affidavits of settlement and the latter paying the land office fees and pocketing the title. Many entries of this class have been canceled or held for cancellation.

"The practice in such old Territories as New Mexico and Arizona is found to be that the cowboys are brought up in squads to the district land office to swear in mellifluous Spanish names to affidavits that they have resided on the land ten, twelve, or twenty years, when in fact they may have not been in the Territory as many months or days; but they swear all the same, and each serves as the regulation witness for the other. The cost of 160 acres to the stock company is by this process about $18, a trifle over 10 cents an acre. In the newer Territories, where long inhabitancy is not so easily proven, the operation is like that of Democrats repeating in New York city elections. A gang of 'pre-emptors' is fitted out, who make all the entries required by their employers by merely adopting a sufficient number of names and repeating the process of swearing as principals and witnesses alternately."

Knowing this condition of affairs, the Secretaries of the Interior under the last and this administration, as well as the Commissioners of the General Land Office for several years have recommended the repeal of these laws.

Mr. MacFarland, in his last annual report, speaking of this law, says:

In my last annual report I renewed the recommendation frequently made by my predecessors that the pre-emption law be repealed. Continued experience demonstrates the advisability and necessity of such repeal. The objection that much good has heretofore resulted from the pre-emption system, and that it should not be discontinued because abused, appears to us without good foundation under the changed conditions created by the homestead laws.

Our committee said to the last Congress, and I emphasize it now and here:

Whole townships of the public domain have been acquired under this law by capitalists who do not reside within hundreds of miles of the land, and never did. They have secured them through paid agents in their employ, who receive so much for their services when they make the proof necessary to entitle them to a patent from the Government, and assign their claims to their employers. This is done, of course, through perjury and subornation of perjury, for each one of these agents or claimants is required to make settlement on the pre-emption claim under the law, and he must make oath before the register or receiver of the land district in which the lands are situate, on which he claims to have settled for the purpose of pre-empting, and that he has never had the benefit of any right of pre-emption; that he has not settled upon and improved such land to sell the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use, and that he has not directly or indirectly made any agreement or contract in any way or manner with any person whatsoever by which the title which he might acquire from the Government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself. And yet it is well known that this oath is daily taken by parties who make it under contracts such as we have indicated above. They file with the register of the proper land district their declaration, make their proof, affidavit, and payment required by the law, and receive their title and transfer the same to the parties with whom they made the contract before they attempted to make the pre-emption.

The present Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his annual report, renews the recommendations of his predecessors for the repeal of the pre-emption system and the timber-culture law. Concerning the first he says:

The pre-emption system no longer secures settlements by pre-emptors. If it did, or could be amended to do so, it would be useless to any good purpose, because supplanted by the more effective homestead law, if a home is the real object designed to be secured. If a home is not the object, the sooner the facility for obtaining land without making a home upon it, which is offered by this system, is removed from the statutes the better for the settlement interests of the country and the future of its institutions.

And again he says:

The pre-emption system serves the speculative interest, the timber interest, the cattle interest, the coal-mining interest, and the water-controlling interest, all at the cost or to the exclusion of actual settlers, according as the purpose of its usefulness is speculation or monopoly.

I quote the following from his report, referring to the repeal of the timber-culture act:

The failure of the timber-culture law to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended (encouragement of the growth of timber on Western prairies), and some of the abuses that have resulted from its practical operation, are fully set forth in the accompanying reports.

The records of this office exhibit successions of entries, relinquishments, contests, and re-entries of the same tracts in farming districts, showing that speculation in the land and not cultivation of timber is the foundation of the mass of claims under this act. The requirements to be complied with during the first few years are necessarily slight. The ground is to be prepared and seeds planted. During this period (the infancy of the entry) its speculative object is achieved. This is a sale of the entryman's relinquishment. One claimant gives place to another for a consideration; the land remains uninhabited, unimproved, and uncultivated, except that a little breaking is done for a pretext, to be used as evidence of "good faith" to defeat a contest before this Department, until finally some seeker of a home upon the soil is found to pay the price demanded by the last holder of the "tree claim," when, upon a bona fide homestead being established, the citizen or immigrant who has bought his way to an honest entry of public land may commence the work of putting out trees for his own benefit. The act thus results in a double imposition—an imposition on the Government and an imposition on actual settlers.

* * * * * * *

The reports herewith submitted show the impracticability of the act and its inutility for other than evasive and fraudulent purposes. The proportion of totally fraudulent entries under this act is estimated at 90 per cent. I therefore most earnestly recommend its repeal.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen about me ask how the law can be so easily evaded by relinquishments by those making "filings" and I take pleasure in stating.

The pre-emption law provides that all assignments and transfers of the pre-emption right "prior to the issuing of the patent shall be null and void." The homestead laws require proof that the party has not sold the land. Now, as soon as a filing is made on a tract of public land the books show it, and while the "filing" stands of record no other filing can be made. The speculator then prepares a "relinquishment" of his right and it is ready to sell to the settler seeking land, to be filed with the local land officer. The land is thus "released" and a new filing made by the settler upon the land.

This species of traffic is most common now. The curious may see at the General Land Office hundreds—yes, sir, hundreds of advertisements and business cards of enterprising real estate agents through the West containing as the most prominently advertised branch of their business "Relinquishments for sale."

I was told by many gentlemen in Dakota last summer that in localities there you could travel for miles and not see a sign of habitation or improvement, and yet all the land held under "filings" presupposing settlement; and the only way in which a settler could get his foothold would be to purchase a "relinquishment" and then make his "filing," all held and controlled by speculators, to be paid by the bona fide settler when he should come. A system which makes this practice possible can not be too speedily repealed.

The general law, then, as it will stand if this bill shall pass, will permit lands to be taken only under the homestead law and free of cost to the settler, except fees.

Under the present homestead act, allowing a commutation or right to purchase at the end of six months, the frauds are the same in character, but possibly greater in degree than under the pre-emption law.

The Commissioner in his last report says:

The principle of commuted homesteads is the same as the pre-emption, and its uses are the same. The difference between the two is that commuted homesteads are the more universally fraudulent, this form of entry being more advantageous to corporations and large operators in coal, timber, and water entries than pre-emption, because the homestead entry is esteemed a segregation of the land, and is held to work its absolute reservation. No other entry can be made under existing rules while one is on record, and there is therefore a degree of security against adverse claims in operating under it that is not enjoyed under the pre-emption system. Commuted homestead entries, as a class, are made immediately after the expiration of six months from date of original entry, or just as soon as the law allows, and are just as invariably conveyed by deed or power of sale mortgage, usually executed on the day of entry. I think it has seldom or never been reported upon examination that an original settler has been found living on a six months' commuted homestead claim. The proportion of fraudulent entries of this kind can be more nearly estimated at the whole number of such entries than in any other manner. If public lands are to be kept for actual inhabitancy, the commutation feature of the homestead law should be abolished.

The bona fide settler on a "homestead" does not go there to buy it at the end of six months; he can have it as a gift by remaining upon it, as he intends to do; and we therefore extend the commutation feature to thirty months; that is, if the settler desires to buy his land he may do so after thirty months. This insures his residence upon the land for at least three crop years, and this we think a guarantee that he is there bona fide for a home, and will absolutely guard against speculative entries.

Mr. Speaker, I have given a great deal of time, as have others on our committee, to the examination of this phase of the land question.

I have had information from unofficial sources, but equally conclusive to me, of the extended operations of these frauds, one of which, carried on by several persons residing in Streator, a city near my own home, where many thousands of acres of land were secured recently in Nebraska in fraud of the law and by the most barefaced of perjury, either in the securing of the lands or the exposé in relation to it, showing a portable house used as a dwelling on one tract long enough to sleep and cook in, followed by an affidavit, and then moved to an adjoining quarter-section and made to do duty there as a permanent residence—for a day and a night—and then again repeated. These papers I will try and print if these remarks are not too extended, but they are on file in the Post-Office Department and subject to inspection by any one curious to see how close companions perjury and truth sometimes are.

Therefore, sir, I speak earnestly on this subject, and I say, confidently, you can not find, nor will any gentleman who opposes the bill undertake to cite an instance, a single instance, where a special agent of the Department, who has been sent out either by this or the last administration, has failed to condemn the operation of the pre-emption law and commutation feature of the homestead law as they stand to-day, as the instruments by which these frauds are perpetrated.

Mr. PERKINS. Have not the fraudulent entries of which the gentleman speaks been canceled?

Mr. PAYSON. They have not been canceled. And I am very glad to tell the gentleman why they have not.

First, these frauds can only be detected by personal inspection on the part of the special agent sent out to examine the actual condition.

The area of the country which the public land system covers embraces almost one-half the area of the Union; the Commissioner of the General Land Office has only twenty-three special agents to detail for this work, and hence it is a matter of physical impossibility, with the force at his command, to detect these frauds to any great extent.

But the official reports from which I quote here, the correctness of which I have never heard questioned, and I think will not be in this debate, show that over 90 per cent. of the entries made under these laws during the last few years are fraudulent.

This bill proposes simply to render impossible the perpetration of these frauds as against the General Government, and to reserve the land for actual settlers in quantities not exceeding 160 acres.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. When the gentleman speaks of 90 per cent. of the entries being fraudulent, I presume he means entries under the three classes of acts.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir; 90 per cent. of the entries under the timber-culture act, the desert-land act, and the pre-emption law.

But we hear it said, sir, that this legislation is in the interest of railroad companies having large grants of land to dispose of, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], with his accustomed energy, asserts that "the day this bill becomes a law every acre of land held by railroads will be doubled in price. The railroad companies alone would have public lands to put upon the market."

How easily this is answered. The gentleman from Kansas knows that the land grants are made in alternate sections; that wherever there is a railroad section of land—640 acres—immediately adjoining is a Government section of the same area.

This bill does not diminish the area, or change either the locality or quality of an acre of public land. The Government has precisely the same amount of land and precisely the same in character and location to dispose of after this bill has passed that it had before, only the manner of disposal is changed.

We propose that the first grantee from the Government shall be the occupant instead of the speculator, that is all; and as a gift to him from a generous Nation rather than as a sale to one who shall sell to him and make the usual profit in the transaction.

All the public land remains but to be held for settlers as a donation rather than for sale. How then is the price of railroad land to be increased?

Now the price of Government land in railroad limits, as the gentleman knows, is $2.50 per acre, and as I have said if this bill shall pass this land will be free to the settlers; and does the gentleman think, will he argue on a moment's reflection which he should take, but does not seem to have taken before debating this bill, that if the Government offers a farm of 160 acres as a gift to the citizen, instead of demanding $400 in cash for it, the citizen will be less apt to take it? Or that the railroad land adjoining which now retains its value of $2.50 per acre because the Government land is held at the same price will be worth $5 per acre to the settler as soon as the Government will donate its land?

No, sir; the opposite effect will be produced, and the lands of the railroad companies must and will be reduced in price if they are disposed of. To the objection that in the West where the land is of a desert character, 160 acres is too little for a farm, I only desire to say a single word. I have heard this stated during the past thirty years with reference to the arid lands of the West. Then the line was east of the center of Kansas and Nebraska—lands there were then called "desert," and regarded as valueless for the purposes of agriculture, as the Colorado desert is to-day. So far east as the district represented by the gentleman from Nebraska behind me [Mr. LAIRD], the land was regarded only a few years ago as of that character. I have seen it then, and in recent years, and canvassed the change in condition with that gentleman. Then a worthless desert wild; now, by the changes wrought by civilization, cultivation, tree-planting, sowing of grass, and covering the earth with verdure; possibly (many will say surely), by providential direction, an increased annual rainfall has, in less than the span of one generation, changed the order and condition of that country, until now, as the traveler passes over it, on the right hand and on the left are seen evidences of thrift and prosperity, happiness and contentment, the delight of the lover of his fellow and his country. I have seen the same thing in Kansas. Last summer I saw corn growing in Western Kansas on lands only a few years ago regarded as desert, rivaling in luxuriant growth that which I had just left in my own great State.

Mr. Speaker, the line of arid lands is slowly but surely working westwardly, and I hazard nothing in the prediction that gentlemen are now acting upon this bill who will live to see the whole region up to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains dotted with the happy homes of frugal, industrious, patriotic people, whose condition may be largely attributed to the statesmanship of to-day which reserved these broad acres for their use cheaply.

I confess, sir, that the prodigal, yes, reckless, disposition of the public lands fills me with alarm for the future of this Republic. The safety and security of the nation rest, as I believe, very largely in the distribution of the lands and permanent homes among the largest possible number of our citizens.

No nation ever was or ever will be permanently great where this principle has been disregarded. And without enlarging upon the idea, speaking for myself instead of the committee, I should be glad if the whole area of so-called "desert lands" could be held, except as taken in small parcels here and there in more advantageous localities, for actual homes, the great body remaining for similar utilization to meet the growing, increasing demands of an overflowing population, crowded out of our cities and more densely populated portions of the Union in the not distant future.

This has been the judgment of the officers of the Interior Department in recent years, and is to-day of most of those who have studied the situation in the light of past experience and present knowledge.

We recommend the suspension of the practice of selling any of the public lands at private entry, by section 5 of the bill.

The policy of disposing of public lands as a means of raising revenue has long since been rejected by enlightened views of public economy. The policy of applying public lands so as to increase the number of farms and homesteads, diffusing instead of aggregating land titles, and promoting general prosperity and the independence of agricultural labor, in place of creating baronial estates and reducing producers to dependence, has long been declared to be the policy of this Government, founded upon the good of the greatest number, inspired by patriotic impulses looking to the preservation of republican institutions, and enforced by the teachings of history and the lessons of revolutions. The public opinion of the country that the public domain shall be preserved for actual settlement has crystallized into an imperative demand that no more land shall be sold out of the reach of the people and into the hands of speculators or the grasp of monopoly.

The baleful shadow of monopoly is felt and feared in every portion of the Union; it is the overshadowing curse under which this people seem to rest.

Every comfort and all the conveniences of civilized life seem to be, to-day, paying tribute in one form or another to it, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the feeling of unrest and discontent, resulting in disorders and riots in different parts of the Union since we have been sitting in this Congress, grows out of the apprehension, rather, indeed, the appreciation, that the prosperity of the people, the accumulations of labor, from which all material prosperity arises, is passing, through either the operation of improper legislation or the absence of proper restrictive rules, into the hands of the few, to the discomfort if not actual danger of the rights of the masses.

The carving out and accumulation of imperial fortunes by a few men in schemes of railroad and telegraph enterprises, through franchises quasi public in their character, secured in the way of privilege by legislative enactment from representatives of the people, only to be used to oppress to the verge of endurance, is not calculated to inspire the greatest confidence in the Government on the part of the laboring citizen, and it is no wonder that remedial legislation is demanded. And to this question before us, the accumulation of vast estates in lands by the operation of defective laws, such as we see all over the West—thousands of acres in compact form in single holdings—means, Mr. Speaker, corresponding tenant holdings by the actual cultivator and corresponding poverty, dependence, and wretchedness.

To call a halt on this species of monopoly, to prevent further steps in the direction of land monopoly out of the public lands, and preserve the balance for occupation as I have stated has been my aim and the aim of the Committee on the Public Lands in this and the last Congress, and we have indulged the hope and have now the belief that the vote on this bill will be responsive to the public demand that the public lands of the Nation shall hereafter be held as a trust for the securing of free homes for free men.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. HENLEY. I object, unless the same leave be extended to others.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that any gentleman may extend or publish remarks on this question in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that all members desiring to do so may publish remarks on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will vote for this bill for the following reasons:

First. Because it is in the interest of the masses of the people, who want homes to live on.

Second. Because our public domain is rapidly becoming exhausted, and wise legislation should aim at holding what lands remain for the actual settler—for the poor man who wants a reasonable quantity of land for himself and his family.

Third. Because 90 per cent. of the entries made under the timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land laws have been found to be fraudulent, and these laws are thus made the media for defeating the citizen entitled to the benefits of said laws from procuring homes upon the public lands.

Fourth. Because under these laws the speculators, cattle companies (in many cases), foreign capitalists, and rings of swindlers with plenty of cash and no character are seizing upon public lands that should go to the man seeking in good faith a home.

Fifth. Because the passage of this bill will make the homestead laws more potential and effective for securing to each citizen a sufficient quantity of land for the purposes of a home.

I regret that the bill was brought up for consideration under a suspension of the rules, which cut off all amendments and limits debate to a few minutes when hours should be devoted thereto. But believing that this law will protect the man against the combination of men, the poor man against the rich man, the settler against the speculator, and save the public domain for its most sacred use, a home, I will vote for it, relying upon the greater deliberations of the Senate to correct any minor defects that may be found in the bill.

It should not be forgotten that all rights now vested and all the rights of the soldier under the homestead laws are sacredly protected, so that whoever has taken any lawful steps under any of the laws repealed by this bill will not be disturbed, but can go forward under the laws and secure any right to which he is now entitled.

Mr. COBB. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa for one minute.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I support this bill. The idea of giving to the homeless citizen a homestead is a humane one; but our public-land policy ought to be confined to that, and no one should be allowed to speculate in the common inheritance of all. This bill, as I understand, simply cuts out of our public-land system the idea of speculation; and that is right. The present law is the law of the speculator and not of the honest home-seeker. There are some exceptions to this rule, but in the main there can be no doubt about the correctness of my statement. The policy of this bill should have been adopted at the very cradle of the Republic, and not one-quarter section of the public lands should ever have been disposed of to corporations or speculators. It should have been sacredly held for homesteads. If this policy had obtained labor troubles would now be unknown and the scandalous legislation of the last few years would have been avoided.

Mr. COBB. I desire to reserve the residue of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is now recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I regret that we have not more time for the discussion of this bill. Justice can not be done to this subject in the limited time allowed for this debate. I do not desire to impute any wrong purpose to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands or to those who favor this contemplated legislation; but in my judgment it is erroneous and wrong. If this proposed legislation should become law it will in my view operate in the interest of the railroad companies and the great cattle organizations of this country. There is not a land-grant railroad company in the West that is not in favor of this measure, for this reason——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How do you show that?

Mr. PERKINS. I am about to show it. Those companies under their land grants have lands which they are in a position to sell to any man who desires to establish a home or who wishes to purchase for speculation or investment. If you repeal the pre-emption law, the timber-culture act, and the desert-land act, the only land in this entire nation remaining subject to settlement is the land owned by the railroad companies and that which may be open to settlement under the homestead law.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This bill does not propose to repeal the homestead law.

Mr. PERKINS. I say the only land which will remain will be that owned by the railroad companies and that open to settlement under the homestead law; and to acquire land under the homestead law requires five years' settlement upon the land, unless the settler has been in the military service of the country. There is in the western portion of my State, in Colorado, and in every Western State and Territory a great domain which can not be settled under the homestead law. No man would be willing to live five years on that arid land in order to acquire title to 160 acres. The effect of this legislation is to keep that great area open—a waste, to be occupied by the cattle companies, their servants, and employés.

And it enhances the value of the railroad lands for that reason, because they have lands they can sell.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the point is suggested in support of this legislation that frauds are perpetrated under the pre-emption and timber-culture laws, and that hence they should be repealed. Ah, Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of the General Land Office himself admits that under the homestead law more than 40 per cent. of the entries are fraudulent. And hence why not repeal that law.

Mr. PAYSON. And does he not put it upon the ground the commutation homestead law may be rendered inoperative at the end of six months?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir; he shows that under the commutation homestead law more frauds are perpetrated than under any other law, and yet this bill provides for keeping this commutation homestead law in existence but amends it somewhat; that is, the act under which the greatest frauds are perpetrated is to remain if this proposed legislation is enacted into law.

Mr. PAYSON. Of course the gentleman desires to be accurate?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly I do.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me ask a question, then.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Do you say the commutation homestead law is more advantageous than the pre-emption law when amended as provided in the pending bill?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I do not. But I do say that the commutation homestead law is still left upon the statute-book with an amendment if this bill passes. And if they can amend the statute under which the greatest frauds are being perpetrated, why is it they can not amend the pre-emption law? Why can not they amend the timber-culture law so as to prevent frauds which are now perpetrated under it?

If we can amend the commutation homestead law so as to prevent fraud, we can also amend these other statutes pertaining to our public domain so as to prevent frauds from being perpetrated under them. For, according to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, more and greater frauds are being perpetrated under the commutation homestead law than under any other statute. And he says further in his report, that the corporations and great companies take advantage of the commutation homestead law to secure for themselves enormous tracts of the public domain. Yet, I repeat, it is proposed by this bill that statute shall remain upon the statute-book, while all else is stricken down.

In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, the people of the West regard this legislation as wrong. There are no settlers here asking for the passage of any such measure. On the contrary, they are against it. No petition has been presented here from them asking for any such legislation. Men seeking homes upon the public domain are not asking for the passage of this bill. It is under the beneficent provisions of the pre-emption law that our Western States and Territories have had their wonderful growth and development. If frauds are practiced, let us amend and perfect our statutes so as to prevent them; but do not let us in our zeal strike down the legislation under which the waste places of the plains are being reclaimed and converted into happy and productive homes, and the great prairies of the West occupied and converted into the growing, teeming communities to be found in every State and Territory west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any member upon this floor wants to retard the growth or development of our country or desires to protect those who are fraudulently acquiring our public domain, and hence do not let us join the land-grant railroad companies and the great cattle syndicates in their prayers for the repeal of all legislation affecting our public domain except the homestead law. I would not, Mr. Speaker, deprive any man of the excellent provisions of the homestead law, but let us give to the pioneers who break the prairies and reclaim the arid plains the choice of these wholesome statutes, which, if properly amended and properly executed, will preserve every acre of our remaining public lands to the honest settler and pioneer, that homes may be made and industry find employment where now all is waste or unauthorized occupation.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It does not affect the settlers, because their rights are vested under this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a rainbow of hope to the idle workmen of the country, who, when crowded from the ranks of industry by labor-saving machinery and the exigencies of trade, instinctively turn to the country, where honest toil can at least produce the necessaries of life.

To prevent the further theft of the public domain by fraudulent pre-emptions, timber-culture, and desert claims, as this bill proposes to do, makes it, in my judgment, the best bill this Congress can pass for the benefit of labor.

Let no member be swerved from his duty by the alleged technical errors in the bill; pass it, and let the errors be rectified hereafter. It is an absolute repeal of those laws which have permitted the theft of millions of acres, and unless repealed, within a few years the remaining public land will be in the hands of syndicates and alien lords.

Save the land for the actual settler and redeem your pledges to the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, the pressure of population will settle the public lands without the additional incentive of these acts which it is proposed to repeal. The day is approaching, in my judgment, when people will rise up and call the man blessed who will raise his voice to save the public domain from still further diminution.

It has been stated in the public prints that the Commissioner of the General Land Office had made exaggerated statements. Now, sir, the statements of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to this matter were based upon reports of special inspectors returned to that office long before he came into the Interior Department as chief of the General Land Office. And before going further I desire to read from those inspectors' reports a brief extract:

> As to the proportion of land entered under the timber-culture act that is not improved as required by that act, I give it as my opinion that in Kansas, Nebraska, and Dakota the proportion is 90 per cent. to 10 per cent. of bona fide and possibly successful cultivation.

Let Congress repeal these laws, for while they are on the statute-book, however bad they may be, they are the supreme law of this land and beyond the legitimate control of any executive officer. Let us remove the evil, and so give no incentive to Department-made laws. Half the trouble with our revenue and other laws comes from false and absurd constructions and explanations and rulings of Executive Departments. The Congress of the United States is the sole law-making power in Federal matters. The time has come to stop the wholesale stealing of the land of the people. The hired minions of foreign noblemen are probably this very day grabbing tracts of the public domain under color of these laws. The land-grabber, alien or domestic, must go.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. I yield for one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allotted to me it is of course impossible to explain the provisions of this bill. But, in short, it repeals all the land laws of the United States except those which provide for taking the public domain under homestead provisions by actual settlement. In order to prevent frauds which have been perpetrated upon the Government whereby the public lands have been taken up in great bodies this bill has been recommended by the Land Office and by the Interior Department.

It has been shown during the last four years the public domain has been rapidly disappearing, and that soon there will be none left for actual settlement. Great corporations, many of them foreign in their origin and ownership, are represented as holding large tracts. My colleague [Mr. PAYSON] referred to the fact that the Earl of Dunraven had secured under the pre-emption laws about 6,000 acres in Estes Park, Colorado. The report of Commissioner Sparks, of the General Land Office, exhaustively treats of this subject, and urgently recommends the repeal of all land laws except the homestead law. Under the operation of that law actual settlers can secure homes; but those who make pre-emption locations as the employés of rich corporations will be deprived of their occupations. The greatest abuses, frauds, and land piracies have been perpetrated under the operation of the pre-emption, timber-culture, and desert-land acts. Their total repeal is demanded by every consideration of the public good. Let this bill pass, and the public lands will hereafter be held solely as homes for the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, as I was about saying at the outset of my remarks upon this bill, it is one of the most important, in my judgment and in the judgment of the majority of the Committee on the Public Lands, of any of the bills that have been pending before that committee or the House with reference to our public land system. There is no doubt of the fact that our public lands are being squandered daily by thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres.

They are being taken up by speculators under these various laws; that is to say, the three laws which we now propose to repeal by the passage of this act. Under the timber-culture law you can go now into the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and gentlemen from those States know the fact, for I have seen it with my own eyes and know what I speak of, and find thousands of acres of land which have been taken up under the timber-culture act upon which there is not one shrub, although they claim to have title to them.

So it is also with reference to the desert-land act. Under that act you will find thousands of acres taken up which are the very finest character of agricultural lands. The reports from the Land Office show that they are taken up by fraud and perjury, as everybody must know.

I have the proof before me showing that sixty-three men were taken up the Columbia River on a steamboat under the direction of guides who had first examined the quality of the lands, and these men were placed on a different 160-acre tract of the best timber-land, and they remained there overnight, and made the proof of entry by committing perjury and assigned their claims to a certain lumber company, for which they were paid a small sum cash by said company, and the company now claims the land.

Mr. PETERS. Have not those entries been suspended?

Mr. COBB. No, sir; not in all cases.

Mr. PETERS. Why have they not been?

Mr. SPRINGER. They will be if this bill passes.

Mr. COBB. That is one of the objects of passing this bill, to secure the suspension of just such fraudulent entries.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. On account of the importance of this bill I ask the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. PETERS and others also demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McKENNA. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKENNA. If this motion should be voted down, will the bill be referred back to the committee and retain its place on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will retain its place where it now is upon the Calendar.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COBB, there were—yeas 184, nays 42, not voting 97; as follows:

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I voted upon this bill, although I am paired with my colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I assume that if he were present he would vote the same way.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. ARNOT. I do not regard this as a question of that character, and do not know how he would vote; but I have voted for the bill.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HANBACK with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. HUDD with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. STEPHENSON, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. HAYNES.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. ELY.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I agreed to pair with Mr. CAMPBELL, my colleague from New York. Not knowing how he would vote, though I presume he would have voted for the bill, I have voted for it and I desire my vote to stand.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1391) to provide for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo., and pass the bill with the amendments suggested by the committee.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Springfield, in the State of Missouri, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue office, pension office, and for other Government uses. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $100,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least 50 feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purpose herein mentioned the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States; and the State of Missouri shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In lines 13 and 17, strike out the words "one hundred," where they occur in each place, and insert the word "seventy-five;" so that it will read "$75,000 is hereby appropriated," &c.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand a second.

Mr. MORRISON and Mr. WADE were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 150, noes not counted.

So (no further count being demanded) a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WADE, to control the time in support of, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MORRISON, in opposition to the motion.

Mr. WADE. I reserve my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MORRISON. Let us have the report read.

The report by (Mr. WADE) was read, as follows:

The cities of Springfield and North Springfield are located on the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad and the Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad, 240 miles from Saint Louis and 200 miles from Kansas City, 300 from Memphis, Tenn., 150 from Indian Territory, and over 150 from Fort Smith, Ark.; have a population of 20,000, and are increasing in population, wealth, and manufactures, and if the rate of increase for the last two years is maintained will in 1890 have a population of 40,000.

The country tributary to Springfield is unsurpassed in agricultural, mineral, stock-raising, and timber resources. The wholesale trade of Springfield extends over Southwest Missouri, Indian Territory, and Northwest Arkansas, and amounted in the year of 1885 to more than $5,000,000.

Springfield has five banks, two national and three private, with a capital stock of $500,000.

The amount expended in the erection of buildings and improvements in two cities in the year of 1885 was $1,800,000. The cities have several lines of street railroad, water-works, gas-works, and electric-light plant; have the very best school system, employing fifty teachers; have a college (Drury) employing seven professors and a number of teachers in the primary department, an academy (Lorretta) with a full corps of teachers. The educational facilities of these cities are unsurpassed.

There are in operation in these cities three foundries and machine-shops, which manufacture steam-engines, agricultural implements, water-works supplies, &c., six large flouring mills, four planing mills, one large cotton-mill, an extensive woolen-mill, tobacco factories, cigar manufactories, and many other manufacturing establishments, among which is an extensive wagon-factory employing several hundred men.

The shops of both the Saint Louis and San Francisco and the Kansas City and Springfield and Memphis Railroads are located there. The former shops employ fifteen hundred men; the latter shops are in process of erection, and when complete will be the most extensive in the State and will employ two thousand men. The Saint Louis and San Francisco Railroad extends from Saint Louis, Mo., to San Francisco, Cal., connecting at Fort Smith with the Southern system of railroads, and at Vinita, Ind. T., with the Texas system. The Kansas City, Springfield and Memphis Railroad extends from Kansas City, Mo., to Memphis, Tenn., connecting at latter place with roads leading to all Eastern and Southern seaboard cities. There are practically eight roads centering in Springfield.

The land office has been located here for many years, and contains many valuable records. These records are now kept in rooms in the third story of a building very much exposed to fire, and in the event of the building taking fire would be lost.

The mails that are received here necessitate a large force to receive and distribute same, and require a large and properly arranged building to accommodate both the mail in transit and the local mail. The number of employés in both offices is eight, and the rent of buildings that would properly accommodate the people of both cities would be $2,000.

This bill is to consolidate the two offices of Springfield and North Springfield, thus saving the Government $2,500 and giving better facilities for both towns.

The total expense of the two offices for the year 1885 was $6,757.50 and the net revenue to the Government upon expenses $14,000.70.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended as follows: Strike out in lines 16 and 17 "one hundred" and substitute "seventy-five," and that when so amended the bill shall be passed.

The SPEAKER. If no gentleman desires to address the House the question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WADE].

Mr. WADE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. As the House seems desirous of passing the bill, I shall not occupy any time in advocating it.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 121, noes 8.

Mr. COWLES. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. COWLES, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WADE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 164, noes 5.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS STATEN ISLAND SOUND.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, be taken from the House Calendar and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c, That it shall be lawful for the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, or either of said companies, to build and maintain a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, or Arthur Kill, from New Jersey to Richmond County, New York, for the passage of railroad trains, engines, and cars thereon, and to lay on and over said bridge railway tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroads that are or shall be constructed to the said sound at or opposite said point; and in case of any litigation concerning any alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said sound on account of said bridge, the cause may be tried before the circuit court of the United States of either of said States in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches; and that all railway companies desiring to use the said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage over the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof and of all the approaches thereto, for a reasonable compensation to be paid to the owners of said bridge, under and upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the sound at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than 200 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw; and said spans shall not be less than 32 feet above mean low-water mark, measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, except when trains are passing over the said bridge, for the passage of the boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the draw of said bridge when closed; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw after the passage of trains; and the said company or corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That the plan and location of said bridge, with a detailed map of the sound at the proposed site of the bridge and near thereto, exhibiting the depths and currents, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, and until he approve the plan and location of said bridge it shall not be built; but upon the approval of said plan by the Secretary of War the said companies, or either of them, may proceed to the erection of said bridge in conformity with said approved plan; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War. If the Secretary of War shall at any time deem any change or alteration necessary in the said bridge so that the same shall not obstruct navigation, or if he shall think the removal of the whole structure necessary, the alteration so required or the removal of the whole structure shall be made at the expense of the parties owning said bridge; and if said bridge shall not be finished within two years from the passage of this act, the rights and privileges hereby granted shall determine and cease.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MORRISON. I demand a second?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes on each side. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. TOWNSHEND, will control the time in favor of the proposition, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MORRISON, will control the time against it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to make a speech, but gentlemen have insisted something should be said.

Mr. MORRISON. I want to know all about this matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then as the object of the bill is generally well known I will consume but a few minutes in its explanation.

This bill makes it lawful for the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, corporations existing under the States of New York and New Jersey, respectively, to construct a railway bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, at or near Elizabeth, N. J., and the town of Northfield, upon Staten Island, New York. It provides that the bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the sound at an accessible and navigable point and with spans of not less than 200 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and that these spans shall not be less than 32 feet above low-water mark measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure. The bill further provides that the plan and location of the bridge shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and receive his approval before it can be constructed.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, was reported favorably by unanimous vote by the Senate committee. It has passed the Senate nearly unanimously, there being but five votes against it. It has been reported by the House Committee on Commerce unanimously, and is now here for final action. This is the identical bill which has passed the Senate without any amendment whatever. I will also say that it was before Congress during the last term, and was reported favorably by the House committee, but no action was then reached upon it. It is not probable any action can be had upon it during this session except by the motion I have made.

I am impelled in making this motion by a belief that it is in the interest of the general commerce of the country, and especially in the interest of the people of the Mississippi Valley and the Southern States. The present terminal facilities on the New Jersey shore fronting New York Bay do not exceed 2½ miles, which is now entirely occupied by a few railroads, private corporations, and business houses, who demand such enormous sums for any portion of these facilities as practically render it impossible for any competing railroad to afford the purchase of a sufficient entrance there.

If this bill be passed it will result in a bridge being thrown across the Arthur Kill or Staten Island Sound of about 600 yards in length, and thereby give access to some 10 miles of deep water on the north and east coast of Staten Island. The inadequacy of terminal facilities for receiving, storing, and shipping at New York enable those having a monopoly of the present facilities to impose a heavy tax on the commerce of the West and South. This bill will open the gateway of commerce at New York to competition, and will utilize the much-needed and excellent harbor on Staten Island for railway connection with foreign and domestic shipping in New York Bay.

If this bridge be constructed a new competitive line will be found in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, which controls 3,000 miles of railroad, extending to Cincinnati, Chicago, and Saint Louis, and connecting with the Southern and Western systems of railroads. Other railroad companies desiring to use the bridge will be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage over the same on just and equitable terms.

It is, therefore, a bill which will result in the reduction of terminal charges by wholesome competition. It is well known the cost of transportation of agricultural products comes off the producer, and when you can reduce that cost you increase the value of the product in the hands of producers. Imports for the South and West will also by this means find cheaper rates of transportation.

The harbor of New York is the common property of the nation. New York is the great market, depot, and shipping point both for the exports and imports of the whole country. "The harbor of New York is in the fullest sense the harbor of the whole country." "Here," as has been said, "all the nerves and arteries of the body-politic converge.

Here are the vital pulsations of commerce and national energy." Therefore the facilities at that point which will promote ample, free, rapid, and cheap transportation are of the greatest importance to all sections and classes in this country.

The construction of this bridge will extend the present limited wharf and harbor facilities of the city of New York by making them five times greater. The deep-water frontage on Staten Island will enable cars loaded with the grain of the West, the cotton of the South, and the other products of the country to discharge their freight immediately into the vessels which convey them to foreign countries, and the imports which are brought to the port of New York may be loaded from the vessels that bring them upon the trains which will distribute them through the country, thereby avoiding the payment of the present enormous and at times extortionate charges for lighterage, ferriage, and other terminal charges. It is unnecessary for me to dwell longer upon the immense value of the construction of a bridge across this narrow stream to the general commerce of the country.

The report of Major Gillespie, of the Engineer Corps, shows that the construction of the bridge in the manner proposed will not seriously interfere with the navigation of the Arthur Kill. In the construction of any bridge across a stream on which there is much commerce some interference will occur, but any such interference in this instance is utterly insignificant in comparison with the immense advantages that will result to the commerce of the whole country.

I have nothing more to say, except that I am convinced, as was the Senate committee and as was the House committee, that this bill is in the interest of the general commerce not only of the West and South, but of the entire country. I think, therefore, the bill ought to pass.

I ask that the report of the Senate committee may be read.

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, beg leave to report as follows:

This bill makes it lawful for the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, corporations existing under the States of New York and New Jersey respectively, to construct a railway bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, at or near Elizabeth, N. J., and the town of Northfield, upon Staten Island, New York.

It provides that the bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the sound at an accessible and navigable point and with spans of not less than 200 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and that these spans shall not be less than 32 feet above low-water mark measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure. The bill further provides that the plan and location of the bridge shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and receive his approval before it can be constructed.

The committee gave ample opportunity to all parties interested to present their arguments in favor of or against the bill, and, after carefully considering the same, now state their conclusions as follows:

(1) Staten Island Sound, or Arthur Kill, is a tidal water way separating New Jersey from Staten Island, New York. The bill does not locate the site of the bridge, but leaves the same to be determined by the Secretary of War. It was conceded, however, in the arguments before the committee that the point at which the railroad companies desired to construct the bridge, if the site chosen by them should be approved by the Secretary of War, was near the southern border of the town of Elizabeth, where the sound does not exceed 600 feet in width. Some of the opponents of the bill did not object to the construction of the bridge across the sound, but to the location as chosen by the railroad companies. The committee, however, are of opinion that the question of the location of the bridge should be left, as it is left by the bill, to the determination of the Secretary of War, who will doubtless be governed in his action by the report of engineer officers thoroughly familiar with the sound, and who are eminently qualified to determine what is properly a question of engineering.

In almost all the acts of Congress authorizing the construction of bridges over navigable streams we find that the Secretary of War has been invested with the power to locate the bridge and approve the plans thereof, and no sufficient reason has been presented to the committee warranting a departure from this uniform usage.

(2) Staten Island Sound is an important water way connecting Newark Bay and Kill von Kull with Raritan Bay, and along this sound there is carried an extensive commerce. The shores on either side in the main are low, flat salt meadows.

The chief commerce of the sound that is to be affected by the construction of this bridge is that coming from South Amboy, Perth Amboy, and the Raritan River. At South Amboy the Pennsylvania Railroad Company have constructed their extensive coal wharves, and at Perth Amboy are found the large piers of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company. The tonnage from South Amboy, as shown by the report of Major Gillespie, for the year ending June 30, 1884, was 2,308,961 tons, being chiefly coal (see page 754); from Perth Amboy, from the same report (page 754), the tonnage was 2,293,620 tons; this also was chiefly coal. From the Raritan River came, first, the tonnage passing through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, connecting the Delaware and Raritan Rivers, amounting, as shown by that report (page 756), to 1,272,386 tons; and also the tonnage coming from manufacturing and other establishments upon the river and tributaries, and which was carried in small sail-boats or small steamers, and shown in the same report as 409,939 tons.

What proportion of this entire tonnage passes through the Raritan Bay and takes what is known as the outer channel through the Narrows to New York, and what proportion of the same passes through the outer channel and past Sandy Hook and up the coast, the committee have no accurate means of determining; it was, however, conclusively shown to the committee, and indeed admitted by all parties, that the commerce from South Amboy, Perth Amboy, and the Delaware and Raritan Canal, and which passed up the sound to New York Harbor and to ports situated on or near Long Island Sound, was carried almost exclusively in canal-boats and barges. These boats and barges are placed in large tows, sometimes containing, as stated to the committee, 8,000 tons of coal, and drawn by tugs. The canal-boats or barges coming from the Delaware and Raritan Canal are brought down the Raritan River in large tows and pass through the draw-bridge of the Central Railroad of New Jersey at the mouth of the Raritan River. The draw of this bridge gives a clear water way of 200 feet.

The opponents of the bill claim that the construction of the bridge would offer serious obstruction to this canal-boat and barge traffic by contracting the width of the channel to two clear water ways of 200 feet each; the committee, however, are of the opinion that the difficulties anticipated by the opponents of the bill will not arise in actual practice. It must be remembered that these canal-boats and barges will readily pass under the bridge constructed 30 feet above low-water mark without the draw thereof being open, and it was shown to this committee that a large proportion of the tugs were provided with smoke-stacks of such a height that they could readily pass under the bridge without the opening of the draw. Moreover, it is a well-known fact that the smoke-stacks of these tugs can be so constructed that they can be lowered while passing under a bridge, and that this form of construction is quite common, if not almost universal, upon the Western rivers, where the boats are frequently required to lower their stacks while passing under bridges constructed without a draw.

The committee call attention to the fact that the bill does not fix the exact height at which the bridge is to be constructed above low-water mark, but prescribes that it shall be constructed not less than 30 feet above the same, leaving to the Secretary of War to determine whether, under all the circumstances, the bridge shall be constructed a few feet higher than the minimum prescribed by the bill. The committee call attention to the fact that very much of this commerce that will pass through this bridge has not only come through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, but has come in tows through the 200-foot draw at the mouth of the Raritan River. The committee are not aware that a draw of greater length than that prescribed by the bill has ever been required by Congressional enactment. The New York and Greenbush Railroad Company's bridge is constructed across the Hudson River, near Albany, with a draw of 170 feet, and above this draw are made up the large tows of canal-boats coming from the Erie Canal and destined to New York, and through it also pass all the large steamers plying between New York and Albany.

The lake commerce of the city of Chicago is accommodated upon the Chicago River, and at least 99 per cent. of the same passes through one draw-bridge and 90 per cent. passes through five draw-bridges. Over the Chicago River there are some thirty-three bridges with draws therein, and none of them, we believe, are of greater width than that provided by the bill. Under the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March, 1883, the construction of a bridge of the New York, Boston and Providence Railroad Company across the Thames River, at or near New London, Conn., was authorized; the location and plans thereof were to be approved by a board of Army and Navy officers designated by the Secretaries of War and Navy. After full discussion this board has approved a plan of a bridge with a draw of substantially the same length as that provided in the bill, and through this draw pass the sound steamers of the Norwich line, and large ocean craft, and the United States war vessels destined to the naval station which is situated some distance above the bridge. Across the Harlem River in New York bridges have recently been constructed and approved by the engineers of the Army with draws of considerably less width than the one proposed by this bill; and under these bridges and through these draws passes an immense commerce, as well as the large car floats and tows of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad to the High Bridge terminus of that line.

It is a fact well known that there is scarcely a navigable water way in New Jersey which has not been bridged under the authority of the Legislature of that State. The large commerce of the city of Newark, with a population of 150,000 inhabitants, and of its neighboring towns passes through the draws of the numerous bridges across the Newark Bay and the Passaic River, and none of these draws have a width greater than 80 feet, and the extent and value of the commerce and the number of vessels passing through the same is shown by the above-mentioned report of Major Gillespie (page 742). All of these bridges across the Newark Bay and the Passaic River are so low that the draws are required to be opened even for the smallest craft.

The committee are therefore persuaded that the commerce of Arthur Kill can readily pass through a 200-foot draw. It was shown to the committee that there was a limited commerce of small oyster-boats and craft of that kind, but of course these would have no difficulty in passing through this draw-bridge. Very few sea-going vessels pass through the Arthur Kill, and only when in tow, and it was not seriously claimed that vessels of this character would be affected by the construction of this bridge.

The committee refer to the fact that a bill similar to this received the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Commerce at the last session, and they also refer to and make a part of this report the report of the Secretary of War and the communications of the War Department in regard to the previous bill, which contained provisions substantially the same as the one now in question. They call special attention to the following language of Major Gillespie, of the Engineers:

"The proposed clear width of 200 feet on either side of the pivot will be ample to prevent interference with the security and convenience of navigation of Arthur Kill. It is a comprehensive enterprise, which, if successfully carried out, will add greatly to the commercial character of the island and the adjacent shores, and the bridges may be safely authorized to be built under the restrictions of the bill without any detriment to commerce, present or prospective."

In the report of Major Gillespie the Chief of Engineers concurred, and the same was approved by the Secretary of War.

(3) The two corporations which by the bill are authorized to construct this bridge are now controlled by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, which seeks for its traffic an independent outlet upon New York Harbor. This company is one of the large trunk lines, so called, controlling some 3,000 miles of railway, extending to Cincinnati, Louisville, and Saint Louis on the southwest, and Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Sandusky, and Chicago in the north and northwest.

This company desires to use the northern and eastern shore of Staten Island for its terminus; upon these shores there is ample depth of water for the accommodation of the largest sea-going vessels. These vessels can come direct to the piers constructed upon these Staten Island shores and unload their cargoes direct into warehouses, whence the same can be loaded directly into cars for shipment to their places of distribution. Terminal charges for lighterage from the vessel to the warehouse and again from the warehouse to the railroad will thus be saved. The average cost of lighterage in New York Harbor was stated to your committee at 60 cents a ton. The railroad company also propose to carry their passenger traffic in fast steamers directly from the northern point of the island to their depot near the Battery in New York city, and which is immediately connected with the station of the four elevated railroad lines in New York.

The construction of the bridge will therefore serve a very important public purpose and accommodate a very large amount of interstate and foreign traffic, and will give to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad an independent terminus at New York, and will bring into use for commercial purposes the deep-watered shore of Staten Island, which forms the southern portion of the New York Harbor.

(4) The committee are of opinion that the commerce which passes across such a stream as Staten Island Sound is to be accommodated as well as that which passes along it, and, in the language of the Supreme Court in the case of Escanaba Company vs. Chicago (107 U. S. Reports, page 680), "The object of wise legislation is to give facilities to both with the least obstruction to either." This we think is accomplished by the provisions of the bill. Commerce of the railroad can pass across the sound, commerce of the sound can pass through the draws which are ample for every purpose, and the large proportion of the sound traffic can pass under the bridge without even the necessity of opening the draw and without being obstructed in any substantial degree.

The committee therefore report Senate bill No. 121 with amendments, and recommend its passage as amended.

Since this report was prepared the attention of your committee has been called to resolutions passed by the Legislature of New Jersey, touching the authority of Congress in these premises, and in fact denying that authority. They therefore submit their views as to this question. They also annex communications from the Secretary of War.

The committee does not deem it necessary to enter into an extended discussion of the power of Congress to pass acts authorizing the construction of bridges over interstate water ways. This power has been exercised too frequently to be now the subject of serious denial. To cite a single instance among the statutes enacted by the Forty-seventh Congress, there are twenty-four acts in substantially the same terms as the present bill authorizing railroad companies to build bridges over navigable rivers within and between States; hardly a session of Congress passes without similar authority being conferred upon a railroad or bridge company to bridge some navigable stream.

In 1876 the State of South Carolina filed a bill in the Supreme Court of the United States against the State of Georgia and the Secretary of War to prevent the United States engineers from building a crib across one channel of the Savannah River in order to deepen the others. The court dismissed the bill, and in doing so used the following language:

"They (the States before the adoption of the Federal Constitution) had plenary authority to make improvements in the bed of a river, to divert the water from one channel to another, and to plant obstructions in it at their will, but the power to regulate commerce conferred by the Constitution is that which previously existed in the States. The power to regulate commerce confers the control for that purpose to the extent necessary of all the navigable rivers of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie; for this purpose they are the public property of the United States, subject to all the requisite legislation by Congress." (South Carolina vs. Georgia, 93 U. S., page 4.)

Again the court said:

"Every structure erected in the bed of a river, whether in the channel or not, would be an obstruction. It might be a light-house erected on a submerged sand-bank, or a jetty pushed out into the stream to narrow the water way, or a pier of a bridge standing where vessels now pass."

It is true that the States retain the power to authorize the construction of bridges across navigable streams as long as the subject is not regulated by Congress, but the moment that Congress, in pursuance of the power delegated to it by the Constitution, exercises its right to authorize the construction of bridges, State enactments contrary thereto become null and void. This is a doctrine settled by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon which Congress has uniformly acted. In the case of Gilliman vs. Philadelphia (3 Wallace, 713) the court, referring to the construction of bridges, uses the following language:

"The States have always exercised this power, and, from the nature and objects of the two systems of government, they must always continue to exercise it, subject, however, in all cases to the paramount authority of Congress whenever the power of the State shall be exerted within the sphere of the commercial power which belongs to the nation."

Again:

"Lastly, Congress may interpose, whenever it shall be deemed necessary; by general or special laws it may regulate all bridges over navigable waters, remove offending bridges, and punish those who shall thereafter erect them. Within the sphere of their authority both the legislative and judicial power of the United States are supreme. A different doctrine finds no warrant in the Constitution and is abnormal and revolutionary."

In a case concerning a license to construct a boom in the Mississippi, the court said, in 1878: "Moreover, the United States, having paramount control over the river, may grant such license if the State should refuse one." (98 U. S., page 409, Patterson vs. Boom Company.) In 1882 the same court said, in the case relating to the bridge over the Ohio River, authorized by both State and the United States, that the act of Congress was "the paramount license for the erection and maintenance of the bridge." (105 U. S., page 479, Bridge Company vs. United States.) The authority to construct the bridge across the Missouri River from Council Bluffs to Omaha is derived from the act of Congress of February 24, 1871, without any legislation of the State of Iowa authorizing its construction, and the construction of the bridge under this act has been declared legal by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The act of Congress of July 14, 1862 (11 Stat. L., 570), authorized a railroad company to construct the bridge over the Ohio River near Steubenville, and makes void all provisions of the acts of Ohio or Virginia in conflict therewith. This is a notable instance of where Congress authorized a railroad company to construct its bridge over the Ohio River, although the express legislation of Virginia provided that it should not construct that bridge until certain other bridges should be constructed elsewhere. The act of Congress strikes down this restriction of the State Legislature, and gives express authority to the railroad company to construct its bridge in spite of the same.

The committee do not deem it necessary to cite more instances of Congressional action in authorizing bridges, nor to refer at greater length to the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court and circuit courts of the United States, in which this power is recognized as unquestioned.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 27, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter, dated the 8th instant, from the Committee on Commerce, by its clerk, inclosing Senate bill No. 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "to authorize the construction of a bridge across Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road," and requesting that the committee be furnished with such suggestions as may be deemed proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I beg to invite your attention to the inclosed letter, dated the 21st instant, from the Chief of Engineers, who embodies a report in this matter by Major Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, concurring in his views, and recommending that the height in the clear between the bridge and the water be measured from the level of mean low water, and be made 32 feet, if practicable.

The recommendations of Major Gillespie and of the Chief of Engineers are concurred in.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. SAMUEL J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, U. S. Senate.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office for report of letter from the Senate Committee on Commerce, by its clerk, Mr. J. B. McMillan, dated the 8th instant, inclosing Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and establish the same as a post-road," and to state that it was referred to Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, who has returned it with a report, of which the following copy is respectfully submitted.

Major Gillespie's views are concurred in by this office, and in addition it is recommended that the height in the clear between the bridge structure and the water be measured from the level of mean low water, and be made 32 feet, if practicable.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, New York, January 16, 1886.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report in compliance with first indorsement, Office Chief of Engineers, United States Army, January 14, 1886, on letter from Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, January 8, 1886, referring to Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "To authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road."

This is essentially the same as Senate bill 1447, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, upon which reports were submitted from this office under dates of February 28 and April 15, 1884, to which references are respectfully made.

Arthur Kill is about 12 miles long, and is a retired and sheltered water connection, through Kill von Kull, between the Upper Bay of New York and the mouth of the Raritan River. At the proposed site of the bridge the width from bank to bank, between high-water lines, is 625 feet, approximately, and between the 12-foot curves 500 feet, approximately, the depth in the center of the channel being 18 to 19 feet M. L. W. In the northern half of the kill the navigable depth is 13 feet, low stage, and in the south half 15 to 18 feet, low stage; these are the minimum depths arising from small shoals, the maximum depth near Perth Amboy being in excess of 35 feet. By a slight improvement the navigable depth may readily be increased throughout to 20 feet, low stage.

Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, provides for the construction of a pivot draw-bridge, which shall have a width of span of not less than 200 feet in the clear on either side of the pivot pier, and a height of not less than 30 feet from lower chord to low-water level. These provisions, in my opinion, meet all the demands of the present or future commerce of the kill, and the restrictions contained in section 4 of the bill are ample to secure a location and construction for the pivot pier such as will cause least interference with the existing deep-water channel and at the same time will be least obstructive to the tidal currents.

The construction of the proposed bridge under the provisions of the bill will not injuriously affect any interests over which the Government has control.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Bvt. Lieut. Col., United States Army.

Brig. Gen. JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

The letter from the Senate Committee on Commerce is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON.
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. General.

Hon. W. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 7, 1884.

SIR: In returning herewith the copy of bill S. 1447, "A bill to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull, and to establish the same as post-roads," which was referred from the Senate Committee on Commerce for the views of this Department thereon, I have the honor to inclose herewith a report of the Chief of Engineers, dated the 4th instant, embodying a copy of a report upon the subject of said bill by Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, New York, dated the 28th ultimo.

The views presented by Major Gillespie, in which the Chief of Engineers expresses his concurrence, are also concurred in by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

OFFICE OF CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith (S. 1447) "A bill to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as post-roads," referred to the War Department for its views and suggestions from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate of the United States, and thence to this office, and to invite attention to the following copy of the report thereon of Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers.

It will be observed that Major Gillespie sees no objection to the construction of draw-bridges as provided for, but makes objection to spanning the highway in question by a bridge with unbroken spans having the elevation specified in the bill.

[Second indorsement.]

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, New York, February 28, 1884.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. That there may be no mistake as to the water way mentioned as "Staten Island Sound," I take occasion to say in the beginning that the navigable channel known by that name is limited exclusively to the narrow and tortuous water course usually called Arthur Kill, which separates Staten Island on the west side from the New Jersey shore, and extends from Elizabethport to Perth Amboy, N. J.

The name Kill von Kull is reserved solely for the connecting passage between Upper New York Bay and Newark Bay, separating Bergen Neck on the north from Staten Island on the south.

The bridges mentioned in Senate bill 1447, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, are proposed to be erected over Arthur Kill, one at or below Elizabethport, N. J., and the other at or above Perth Amboy, N. J.

Arthur Kill is the grand highway for all the local commerce of the several ports and streams on the west side of Staten Island, as well as for the interstate commerce passing south and west through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, which connects the Raritan River at New Brunswick, N. J., with the Delaware River at Trenton, N. J. This canal is one of the principal links of the chain of internal navigation of the Atlantic seaboard. It has a minimum depth of 8 feet throughout, and its annual tonnage is 2,000,000 tons, approximately; less of late years than formerly, owing to railroad competition, though its importance as a water way is not impaired.

The draws which are described in the bill are sufficiently wide to meet all the requirements of commerce along the route over which the bridges are to be built.

I do not approve the spanning of any important navigable highway adjacent to the sea, which is now or may hereafter be utilized by sea-going vessels, by a bridge with continuous spans, even if the bottom chords should be placed so high as 100 feet above high-water mark, except in the rare case of two large and populous cities, where the intercommunication between them over a bridge would be greatly interfered with by frequent and prolonged openings of the draw.

No such condition exists on Arthur Kill, and while the existing depth of water is not sufficient for sea-going vessels of the first class, yet the stream is capable of improvement, and will be improved whenever commerce demands it. For this reason the bridges should be provided with draws. The proposed clear width of 200 feet on either side of the pivot will be ample to prevent interference with the security and convenience of navigation of Arthur Kill.

On the approach to Newark, N. J., from Kill von Kull, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, which crosses Newark Bay, has a draw with a clear opening of 80 feet on either side of pivot; the New York and Newark Railroad, at the mouth of the Passaic River, has one of 65 feet, and the Pennsylvania Railroad, in the city of Newark, has one of 75 feet.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey, whose tracks cross Raritan River near its mouth, on the approach to the canal, after a lengthy controversy with the Delaware and Raritan Canal Company, adopted and built a draw opening of 200 feet, the same as proposed in this bill.

The main objects to be gained by the construction of these bridges are to give rapid transit around the island to points on the New Jersey shore, to increase the facilities for reaching New York, and to provide means for reaching coal wharves to be built, it is said, by the coal-carrying roads on deep water on the east side of the island.

It is a comprehensive enterprise, which, if successfully carried out, will add greatly to the commercial character of the island and the adjacent shores, and the bridges may be safely authorized to be built under the restrictions of the bill without any detriment to commerce, present or prospective.

The papers are herewith returned.

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Bvt. Lieut. Col., U. S. A.

I concur in these views.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office on the 11th instant of the letter of Hon. W. P. FRYE, of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, inclosing S. 1447, "to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull, and to establish the same as post-roads," and certain papers relating thereto, and to state that it was referred to Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, who has returned it with the report of which the following is a copy.

Major Gillespie's views appear to be just and proper, and are concurred in.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER'S OFFICE, New York, April 15, 1884.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The intent of the act, as I understand it, is to authorize at this time the construction of a railroad bridge over the navigable waters of Arthur Kill, the Secretary of War having the reserved right, in the interest of commerce, to dictate the character and arrangement of the bridge in all its parts.

The petition submitted with Mr. Bonnett's paper has been carefully considered. The east bank of Arthur Kill, on the northern side of Staten Island, extending south to Fresh Kills, is a wide marsh land, with but little variation in its elevation for a distance back from the shore line of over 2 miles. If the lower chord of the bridge proposed to be built near Elizabethport be placed at 135 feet above high water the approaches to the bridge would be over long and high trestle-work, which would have so steep a grade as to make the railroad probably unfitted for giving rapid transit to the towns on the island and on the west bank, or for convenient connection with existing railroads.

The 135-foot contour of the island along the proposed railroad line on the north shore does not extend westward of Factoryville. At the southwestern point of the island the ground is higher than on the north shore; on the ridge above Tottenville the 100-foot contour appears on a single rise, but this is an exception; all the rest of the ground in the vicinity is much lower.

The low character of the land adjacent to Arthur Kill therefore compels, with rapid transit in view, the construction of low bridges; and that they may not obstruct navigation, draws must be provided, the exact width and arrangement of which can be definitely stated only after a careful survey of the water course has been made, including the determination of the strength and directions of the current. A clear width of not less than 200 feet in the channel way, through the bridges provided for in the act, is, with my present knowledge, deemed sufficient for the requirement of the commerce of Arthur Kill, and the projected bridges may, it is thought, be built without interfering injuriously with the flow of the tide, or without increasing the dangers to navigation due to ice which forms in the kill or which is driven there by winds and currents.

The relation of the bridges to the tides, ice floes, and other matters involving the rights of commerce will engage the attention of the examining officers designated by the Secretary of War after the bridge company shall have presented drawings and specifications of the plans proposed.

The examination will include not only the bridges proper and the necessary width of draws, but their sites and the sites and arrangements of the piers with reference to the navigation of Arthur Kill in all its bearings.

The papers are herewith returned.

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Bvt. Lieut. Col., U. S. A.

The letter of Hon. Mr. FRYE is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 19, 1884.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing bill S. 1447, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, a bill "to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull, and to establish the same as post-roads," together with a petition from Mr. P. Bonnett and other shore-owners, and also returning for consideration in connection with the petition referred to a report, dated the 4th ultimo, from the Chief of Engineers, embodying a report on this bill from Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed report of April 17, 1884, from the Chief of Engineers, embodying a supplemental report, dated the 15th instant, from Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, whose views as expressed therein are concurred in by the Chief of Engineers.

The inclosures to your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN, Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman of subcommittee of Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

Mr. MORRISON. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CRISP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The bill contains all the restrictions necessary for the protection of the navigation of the Arthur Kill, is recommended by the War Department, and we think should be passed. We therefore report the bill back with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MORRISON. Here is a paper from an engineer which gives some light on this subject. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In regard to the proposed building of a railroad bridge across Arthur Kill, between Staten Island and New Jersey, this proposed railroad bridge is to be built over the existing channel, which passes Elizabethport, runs between Staten Island and New Jersey, and empties into Raritan Bay.

The bill introduced is for a bridge to extend from Elizabethport to Staten Island with a center pier 500 feet long, parallel with the channel, having a draw 200 feet wide.

To build such a bridge at this point, at least 300 feet of the water inclosed between these shores will be obstructed by the piling or the piers which will have to be driven or built to support the road-bed.

Arthur Kill is very narrow, only 600 feet wide; is one of the most important highways for commerce in the vicinity of New York Harbor.

The channel is used by all the vessels which transport the commerce originating at Elizabethport, and also by all vessels, steamers, boats, barges, and tows which go to and come from the many rivers tributary to Arthur Kill, or which pass from New York Harbor southward, through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, which, with the Raritan River, is the connecting link of interstate commerce between States south of New Jersey and those east. The annual tonnage of the canal alone, at one time, amounted to 5,500,000 tons; it is now diminished to 1,800,000 tons on account of shoals in the Raritan River, and the unfortunate delay at the mouth of this river compelling the tows to wait for certain stages of the tide before attempting to pass through the draw of the Long Branch Railroad Company's bridge; then they experience great difficulty in getting safely through.

In 1874 the General Government proposed to improve the channel by dredging a channel 400 feet wide, 13 feet deep, mean low water, extending from Shootec Island, leading past the wharves at Elizabethport, with deflecting dikes on both sides of the channel. The opposition to the dikes was so influential that April 26, 1875, a general order was issued constituting a board of United States engineer officers to examine and report a plan for a channel between Staten Island and New Jersey, which board reported November 30, 1875, and in this report is the following paragraph:

"It has been urged that the projected route by reason of the abrupt termination of direction at the eastern end of the dikes will inconvenience the towage companies, while the advantage of a wider, deeper, and shorter channel, only about a mile long, between dikes, more than compensates for the inconveniences of this change of direction to the larger class of vessels. It is quite probable that large tows would by preference take the present channel if suitably improved."

Any proposition to dike in the present channel would doubtless prove a failure, as the meeting of Arthur Kill and Kill von Kull currents would form a shoal somewhere between the dikes or at their entrance, and thus defeat the purpose of their construction. This board place their decision not to recommend the dike system of improvement already commenced solely on this ground, that whatever may have been the prospective requirements of commerce on this route three years ago, its present needs do not, in their opinion, call for a 14-foot channel at mean low water to be attained by the construction of dikes at lage cost. On the contrary, they believe that the existing channel can be sufficiently improved to accommodate present commercial interests by dredging to a depth of 10 to 11 feet at mean low water, by diminishing its curvature at the corner stakes light, and by giving it such width as to permit the passage of large tows and the largest class of sailing vessels in use on these waters without risk of colliding or grounding. We therefore recommend that this deepening and widening of the channel be effected in accordance with the plans which we now submit:

As the channel in its western and difficult portion was produced by the transit of large tows drawn by steamers and the larger class of propellers, it is presumed that when deepened the same causes will help to maintain that depth and diminish the expenditures that will be required from time to time for dredging.

It will be noticed that the board of engineers decided that shoals will form somewhere between the dikes or at their entrance. These dikes were to be built parallel with the channel, so that the water could flow past them. Now, if shoals form around such dikes, which comparatively do not obstruct the flow of water, is it not demonstrated that if piles are driven directly across or horizontal to the flow of water of the channel, or large piers built with narrow outlets, that they act as a dam, stopping the flow of water in a great measure, and in consequence shoals will more readily form, and in a short time the channel will dwindle down to a narrow, intricate one, caused by shoals forming around the piers of the railroad bridge, causing great inconvenience to the commercial interests of the many tributary rivers which rely on this kill as the means of a near, direct, and economical delivery of their merchandise, and on which the General Government has expended $848,000 improving.

The maintenance of deep water and open channel at this point is a matter of more than local importance, as it not only concerns the coasting trade of New Jersey, but also a considerable part of that of Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, being a great outlet for easy and economical delivery to the manufactories of the New England States. The number of vessels which pass through this channel amounts to 98,000 annually, carrying a total tonnage of 16,500,000 tons, with an estimated value of $61,592,000.

Any bridge across this kill would greatly obstruct the navigation of this channel, as the distance from Staten Island to New Jersey is only 600 feet, and at least 300 feet of that would be occupied by the piers to support the bridge.

A bridge can be built a little farther down Staten Island Sound which would have its center pier entirely out of water, resting on Buckwheat Island, a draw on the New Jersey side of the island and a span reaching from Buckwheat Island to Staten Island. Such a bridge should have an elevation of at least 70 feet from mean high water, and would not be an obstruction to the navigation of this highway.

For verification of commercial statistics I refer to the report of Col. G. L. Gillespie, United States Engineer Corps United States Army. (Appendix G, pages 741, 742.)

A. B. BURR, Chief Engineer.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This being a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, is an amendment to the bill in order?

The SPEAKER. Not unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment which will obviate the objection of the engineer in charge of the harbor at that point—an amendment drawn precisely in accordance with his suggestions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not accept any amendment, but I will state that accompanying the Senate report are the opinions of engineers showing that the bridge will be no serious obstruction to commerce.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This amendment is in accordance with the suggestions of the engineer in charge of the harbor.

Mr. FINDLAY. I object.

Mr. MORRISON. Has the paper that I sent to the desk been read in full?

The SPEAKER. The reading has been completed.

Mr. MORRISON. This bill seems to have merit in it. I make no further objection to its passage.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask to have the Senate report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think it is very necessary, in order that all the facts may be known.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Unless the objection to my amendment is withdrawn there will be objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I must ask that that report be read, because it embodies the objections that have been made and the answers to them.

The SPEAKER. It can be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I will trust to the generosity of the House hereafter to allow the report to be printed in the RECORD, and will not insist upon its reading at this time.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill; and there were—ayes 139, noes 3.

So (more than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen be permitted to print remarks upon this bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, in my humble judgment the measure now under consideration is one of very great importance to the business interests, and so to the general welfare of the entire country. It is a question of the completion of another trunk line connecting the great West and our chief commercial center, a trunk line owning and controlling 3,000 miles of railroad and seeking proper terminal facilities at the seaboard. Shall Congress authorize the building of a bridge across Staten Island Sound connecting the States of New York and New Jersey—a draw-bridge, at least 32 feet above low water mark and with a channel of 200 feet clear on each side of the pivot pier of the draw, the plans and location of which are to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, the bridge not to be built till such approval is given? After careful consideration in committee, favorable reports were made by the Committee on Commerce of both the Senate and House of Representatives, and the measure has recently passed the Senate by a large majority. The sentiment so far as expressed by the commercial bodies of New York is unanimous in favor of the bill. The New York Legislature adopted unanimously resolutions requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to use "all honorable means to procure the passage of the bill authorizing the construction of the Arthur Kill bridge as a public improvement leading to largely increasing terminal facilities, without cost to the State or General Government." The opposition thus far has come from the State of New Jersey. For reasons satisfactory to themselves, her Senators and Representatives have and will oppose the bill, and that too with the zeal and ability characteristic of the representatives of that State; but for one I have heard no arguments in opposition which should stand for a moment as against those that can be presented in favor of the measure. I trust the bill may be promptly passed, believing that the results will prove such legislation to have been in the line of desirable and legitimate commercial competition and tending to the best interests of all concerned.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, as Richmond County, or Staten Island, is part of the constituency I have the honor to represent, I will avail myself of the leave granted by the House to present the reasons for my support of the bill now before the House "to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road." The bill was introduced by myself at the outset of this session. It asks nothing of the United States but a right of way in the interests of interstate commerce over a navigable channel, and surrounds the granting of that right with every proper precaution against undue interference with navigation, which, I assume, is the only point this House will feel called upon to guard. No question of the right of Congress to pass the bill can be seriously raised and maintained, except, perhaps, for dilatory purposes, and then not in the public interest. The authority of Congress over all navigable streams within our own borders has been settled by a long line of decisions of the Supreme Court, and especially and absolutely so where the tide ebbs and flows, as in this case. The only question is one of expediency, and on that point I think the proofs are overwhelming.

The bill authorizes the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of New Jersey, to construct, for the passage of railroad trains, across that part of Staten Island Sound known as Arthur Kill, from New Jersey to Richmond County (Staten Island), New York, a pivotal draw-bridge, with a span of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central pier, and of a height not less than 32 feet from the lowest part of the structure to mean low-water mark. The use of the bridge is not restricted to the two railroads named. Any railroad, by paying a reasonable compensation to the owners, can traverse the bridge; and it is further provided that if the Secretary of War shall at any time deem a change of construction necessary to prevent obstruction to navigation, or if he shall even deem the removal of the whole structure necessary for this purpose, he shall have power to direct it to be done at the cost of the owners of the bridge. In this and every other respect ample precautions have been taken to protect the navigation of this most important water way.

It may, perhaps, be necessary to explain to gentlemen not familiar with the topography of New York Harbor that Arthur Kill is a narrow arm of the sea separating the west side of Staten Island from the New Jersey shore and connecting Raritan Bay with the Kill von Kull, the latter a channel which debouches into Upper New York Bay and divides Bergen Neck, New Jersey, on the north from Staten Island on the south. Arthur Kill has a length of 12 miles and a width varying from 3,600 feet at its widest to 600 feet at its narrowest point and a current ranging, according to the estimates of different engineers, from one and a quarter to two and a half miles an hour.

The bill as originally framed provided that the proposed bridge should be constructed at the narrowest point; but as it now comes before the House this question is left absolutely to the discretion of the Secretary of War, the bill enacting that a detailed map of the sound, showing the depths and currents at the proposed site of the bridge, shall be first submitted to him, and that without his approval of plan and location the bridge shall not be built.

This is not a new question before Congress or the country. A bill of similar purport (H. R. 4830) was introduced by myself in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress. It was very carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce who reported a substitute (H. R. 7165) embracing most of the main features of the original bill. Pending action by a co-ordinate branch, the engineers of the War Department were called upon to investigate the matter. Major Gillespie, the officer selected for this purpose, made a careful and able report, fully recognizing the importance of the water way proposed to be bridged, in respect to which he said:

> Arthur Kill is the grand highway for all the local commerce of the several ports and streams on the west side of Staten Island, as well as for the interstate commerce passing south and west through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, which connects the Raritan River at New Brunswick, N. J., with the Delaware River at Trenton, N. J. This canal is one of the principal links of the chain of internal navigation of the Atlantic seaboard.

He added:

> The draws which are described in the bill are sufficiently wide to meet all the requirements of the commerce along the route over which the bridges are to be built.

(There were two bridges proposed in the bill as originally introduced; in the present bill one only is provided for.) And in closing his report he said:

> The main objects to be gained by the construction of these bridges are to give rapid transit around the island to points on the New Jersey shore, to increase the facilities for reaching New York, and to provide means for reaching coal wharves to be built, it is said, by the coal-carrying roads on deep water on the east side of the island.
> It is a comprehensive enterprise, which, if successfully carried out, will add greatly to the commercial character of the island and the adjacent shores, and the bridges may be safely authorized to be built under the restrictions of the bill without any detriment to commerce, present or prospective.

This report was concurred in by Major-General Wright, Chief of Engineers, and Maj. Gen. John Newton, Chief of Engineers, and was approved by Secretary Lincoln. On the 8th of January last the matter was rereferred to the War Department. It was re-examined, and the bridge over the Arthur Kill was again recommended with only one suggested change, namely, that the height in the clear between the bridge structure and the water be measured from mean low water and be made 32 feet (instead of 30 feet). This recommendation was transmitted to Congress with the approval of Secretary Endicott, and the suggested change from 30 to 32 feet is embodied in the pending bill.

The value of the railroad transportation estimated to pass over the bridge is $200,000,000 per annum; the outside annual value of the commerce which will pass under the bridge is estimated by engineers opposed to the measure at some $68,000,000. The chief trade through the Arthur Kill consists of the towage of barges laden with coal, pottery, brick clays, fertilizers, ores, and the coarser kinds of chemicals—coal largely predominating. The Pennsylvania Railroad has a terminal depot for its heavy freights at South Amboy, and the Lehigh Valley Railroad has a similar terminal depot at Perth Amboy, both near the suggested site of the bridge, on the south side of it; and the Jersey Central Railroad has a terminal coal depot at Elizabeth, to the north of it—all three of these terminal depots being on the west shore of the Arthur Kill. In fact, to use the language of one of the prominent opponents of the bill, this channel, so long as it remains unbridged,

"is the end of rail commerce between the West and the East," and therefore he wishes it to remain so, because "here commences a great system for the distribution of that commerce" by boats to the New England ports and elsewhere.

The construction of this bridge will extend to the people of the West and South increased facilities for the marketing of their products, and will reduce by competition the cost of transportation of coal and other heavy freight to them as well as to the Eastern States. It will greatly diminish the terminal charges and add 10 or 12 miles of deep-water wharfage to the harbor facilities of the port of New York, and will bring about a wholesome competition in passenger rates.

The bill should pass.

The Senate report above referred to is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, beg leave to report as follows:

This bill makes it lawful for the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, corporations existing under the States of New York and New Jersey, respectively, to construct a railway bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, at or near Elizabeth, N. J., and the town of Northfield, upon Staten Island, New York. It provides that the bridge shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the Sound at an accessible and navigable point and with spans of not less than 200 feet in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and that these spans shall not be less than 32 feet above low-water mark measuring to the lowest member of the bridge superstructure. The bill further provides that the plan and location of the bridge shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and receive his approval before it can be constructed.

The committee gave ample opportunity to all parties interested to present their arguments in favor of or against the bill, and, after carefully considering the same, now state their conclusions as follows:

(1) Staten Island Sound, or Arthur Kill, is a tidal water way separating New Jersey from Staten Island, New York. The bill does not locate the site of the bridge, but leaves the same to be determined by the Secretary of War. It was conceded, however, in the arguments before the committee that the point at which the railroad companies desired to construct the bridge, if the site chosen by them should be approved by the Secretary of War, was near the southern border of the town of Elizabeth, and where the Sound does not exceed 600 feet in width. Some of the opponents of the bill did not object to the construction of the bridge across the sound, but to the location as chosen by the railroad companies. The committee, however, are of opinion that the question of the location of the bridge should be left, as it is left by the bill, to the determination of the Secretary of War, who will doubtless be governed in his action by the report of engineer officers thoroughly familiar with the sound, and who are eminently qualified to determine what is properly a question of engineering.

In almost all the acts of Congress authorizing the construction of bridges over navigable streams we find that the Secretary of War has been invested with the power to locate the bridge and approve the plan thereof, and no sufficient reason has been presented to the committee warranting a departure from this uniform usage.

(2) Staten Island Sound is an important water way connecting Newark Bay and Kill von Kull with Raritan Bay, and along this sound there is carried an extensive commerce. The shores on either side in the main are low, flat salt meadows.

The chief commerce of the sound that is to be affected by the construction of this bridge is that coming from South Amboy, Perth Amboy, and the Raritan River. At South Amboy the Pennsylvania Railroad Company have constructed their extensive coal wharves, and at Perth Amboy are found the large piers of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company. The tonnage from South Amboy, as shown by the report of Major Gillespie, for the year ending June 30, 1884, was 2,308,961 tons, being chiefly coal (see page 754); from Perth Amboy, from the same report (page 754), the tonnage was 2,293,620 tons; this also was chiefly coal. From the Raritan River came, first, the tonnage passing through the Delaware and Raritan Canal connecting the Delaware and Raritan Rivers, amounting, as shown by that report (page 756), to 1,272,386 tons; and also the tonnage coming from manufacturing and other establishments upon the river and tributaries, and which were carried in small sail-boats or small steamers, and shown in the same report as 409,939 tons.

What proportion of this entire tonnage passes through the Raritan Bay and takes what is known as the outer channel through the Narrows to New York, and what proportion of the same passes through the outer channel and past Sandy Hook and up the coast, the committee have no accurate means of determining; it was, however, conclusively shown to the committee, and indeed admitted by all parties, that the commerce from South Amboy, Perth Amboy, and the Delaware and Raritan Canal and which passed up the sound to New York Harbor and to ports situated on or near Long Island Sound, was carried almost exclusively in canal-boats and barges. These boats and barges are placed in large tows, sometimes containing, as stated to the committee, 8,000 tons of coal, and drawn by tugs. The canal-boats or barges coming from the Delaware and Raritan Canal are brought down the Raritan River in large tows and pass through the draw-bridge of the Central Railroad of New Jersey at the mouth of the Raritan River. The draw of this bridge gives a clear water way of 200 feet.

The opponents of the bill claim that the construction of the bridge would offer serious obstruction to this canal-boat and barge traffic by contracting the width of the channel to two clear water ways of 200 feet each. The committee, however, are of the opinion that the difficulties anticipated by the opponents of the bill will not arise in actual practice. It must be remembered that these canal-boats and barges will readily pass under the bridge constructed 30 feet above low-water mark without the draw thereof being open, and it was shown to this committee that a large proportion of the tugs were provided with smoke-stacks of such a height that they could readily pass under the bridge without the opening of the draw. Moreover, it is a well known fact that the smoke-stacks of these tugs can be so constructed that they can be lowered while passing under a bridge, and that this form of construction is quite common if not almost universal upon the Western rivers, where the boats are frequently required to lower their stacks while passing under bridges constructed without a draw.

The committee call attention to the fact that the bill does not fix the exact height at which the bridge is to be constructed above low-water mark, but prescribes that it shall be constructed not less than 30 feet above the same, leaving to the Secretary of War to determine whether, under all the circumstances, the bridge shall be constructed a few feet higher than the minimum prescribed by the bill. The committee call attention to the fact that very much of this commerce that will pass through this bridge has not only come through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, but has come in tows through the 200-foot draw at the mouth of the Raritan River. The committee are not aware that a draw of greater length than that prescribed by the bill has ever been required by Congressional enactment.

The New York and Greenbush Railroad Company's bridge is constructed across the Hudson River, near Albany, with a draw of 170 feet, and above this draw are made up the large tows of canal-boats coming from the Erie Canal and destined to New York, and through it also pass all the large steamers plying between New York and Albany.

The lake commerce of the city of Chicago is accommodated upon the Chicago River, and at least 99 per cent. of the same passes through one draw-bridge and 90 per cent. passes through five draw-bridges. Over the Chicago River there are some thirty-three bridges with draws therein, and none of them, we believe, are of greater width than that provided by the bill. Under the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March, 1883, the construction of a bridge of the New York, Boston, and Providence Railroad Company across the Thames River, at or near New London, Conn., was authorized; the location and plans thereof were to be approved by a board of Army and Navy officers designated by the Secretaries of War and Navy.

After full discussion this board has approved a plan of a bridge with a draw of substantially the same length as that provided in the bill, and through this draw pass the sound steamers of the Norwich line, and large ocean craft, and the United States war vessels destined to the naval station which is situated some distance above the bridge. Across the Harlem River in New York bridges have recently been constructed and approved by the engineers of the Army with draws of considerably less width than the one proposed by this bill; and under these bridges and through these draws passes an immense commerce as well as the large car floats and tows of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad to the High Bridge terminus of that line.

It is a fact well known that there is scarcely a navigable water way in New Jersey which has not been bridged under the authority of the Legislature of that State. The large commerce of the city of Newark, with a population of 150,000 inhabitants, and of its neighboring towns passes through the draws of the numerous bridges across the Newark Bay and the Passaic River, and none of these draws have a width greater than 80 feet, and the extent and value of the commerce and the number of vessels passing through the same is shown by the above-mentioned report of Major Gillespie page (742). All of these bridges across the Newark Bay and the Passaic River are so low that the draws are required to be opened even for the smallest craft.

The committee are therefore persuaded that the commerce of Arthur Kill can readily pass through a 200-feet draw. It was shown to the committee that there was a limited commerce of small oyster boats, and craft of that kind, but of course these would have no difficulty in passing through this draw-bridge. Very few sea-going vessels pass through the Arthur Kill and only when in tow, and it was not seriously claimed that vessels of this character would be affected by the construction of this bridge.

The committee refer to the fact that a bill similar to this received the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Commerce at the last session, and they also refer to and make a part of this report the report of the Secretary of War and the communications of the War Department in regard to the previous bill, which contained provisions substantially the same as the one now in question. They call special attention to the following language of Major Gillespie, of the engineers:

"The proposed clear width of 200 feet on either side of the pivot will be ample to prevent interference with the security and convenience of navigation of Arthur Kill. It is a comprehensive enterprise, which, if successfully carried out, will add greatly to the commercial character of the island and the adjacent shores, and the bridges may be safely authorized to be built under the restrictions of the bill without any detriment to commerce, present or prospective."

In the report of Major Gillespie the Chief of Engineers concurred, and the same was approved by the Secretary of War.

(3) The two corporations which by the bill are authorized to construct this bridge are now controlled by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, which seeks for its traffic an independent outlet upon New York Harbor. This company is one of the large trunk lines, so called, controlling some 3,000 miles of railway, extending to Cincinnati, Louisville, and Saint Louis on the southwest, and Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Sandusky, and Chicago in the north and northwest.

This company desires to use the northern and eastern shore of Staten Island for its terminus; upon these shores there is ample depth of water for the accommodation of the largest sea-going vessels. These vessels can come direct to the piers constructed upon these Staten Island shores and unload their cargoes direct into warehouses, whence the same can be loaded directly into cars for shipment to their places of distribution. Terminal charges for lighterage from the vessel to the warehouse and again from the warehouse to the railroad will thus be saved. The average cost of lighterage in the New York Harbor was stated to your committee as 60 cents a ton. The railroad company also propose to carry their passenger traffic in fast steamers directly from the northern point of the island to their depot near the Battery in New York city, and which is immediately connected with the station of the four elevated railroad lines in New York.

The construction of the bridge will therefore serve a very important public purpose and accommodate a very large amount of interstate and foreign traffic, and will give to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad an independent terminus at New York, and will bring into use for commercial purpose the deep-watered shore of Staten Island, which forms the southern portion of the New York Harbor.

(4) The committee are of opinion that the commerce which passes across such a stream as Staten Island Sound is to be accommodated as well as that which passes along it, and, in the language of the Supreme Court in the case of Escanaba Company vs. Chicago (107 U. S. Reports, page 680), "The object of wise legislation is to give facilities to both with the least obstruction to either." This we think is accomplished by the provision of the bill. Commerce of the railroad can pass across the sound, commerce of the sound can pass through the draws which are ample for every purpose, and the large proportion of the sound traffic can pass under the bridge without even the necessity of opening the draw and without being obstructed in any substantial degree.

The committee therefore report Senate bill No. 121 with amendments, and recommend its passage as amended.

Since this report was prepared the attention of your committee has been called to resolutions passed by the Legislature of New Jersey, touching the authority of Congress in these premises, and in fact denying that authority. They therefore submit their views as to this question. They also annex communications from the Secretary of War.

The committee does not deem it necessary to enter into an extended discussion of the power of Congress to pass acts authorizing the construction of bridges over interstate water ways. This power has been exercised too frequently to be now the subject of serious denial. To cite a single instance among the statutes enacted by the Forty-seventh Congress, there are twenty-four acts in substantially the same terms as the present bill authorizing railroad companies to build bridges over navigable rivers within and between States: hardly a session of Congress passes without similar authority being conferred upon a railroad or bridge company to bridge some navigable stream.

In 1876 the State of South Carolina filed a bill in the Supreme Court of the United States against the State of Georgia and the Secretary of War, to prevent the United States engineers from building a crib across one channel of the Savannah River in order to deepen the other; the court dismissed the bill, and in so doing used the following language:

"They (the States before the adoption of the Federal Constitution) had plenary authority to make improvements in the bed of a river, to divert the water from one channel to another, and to plant obstructions in it at their will, but the power to regulate commerce conferred by the Constitution is that which previously existed in the States. The power to regulate commerce confers the control, for that purpose, to the extent necessary, of all the navigable rivers of the United States which are accessible from a State other than those in which they lie; for this purpose they are the public property of the United States, subject to all the requisite legislation by Congress." (South Carolina vs. Georgia, 93 U. S., page 4.)

Again the court said:

"Every structure erected in the bed of a river, whether in the channel or not, would be an obstruction. It might be a light-house erected on a submerged sand-bank, or a jetty pushed out into a stream to narrow the water way, or a pier of a bridge standing where vessels now pass."

It is true that the States retain the power to authorize the construction of bridges across navigable streams as long as the subject is not regulated by Congress, but the moment that Congress, in pursuance of the power delegated to it by the Constitution, exercises its right to authorize the construction of bridges State enactments contrary thereto become null and void. This is a doctrine settled by numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and upon which Congress has uniformly acted. In the case of Gillman vs. Philadelphia (3 Wallace, 713) the court, referring to the construction of bridges, uses the following language:

"The States have always exercised this power, and, from the nature and objects of the two systems of government, they must always continue to exercise it, subject, however, in all cases to the paramount authority of Congress whenever the power of the State shall be exerted within the sphere of the commercial power which belongs to the nation."

Again:

"Lastly, Congress may interpose whenever it shall be deemed necessary; by general or special laws it may regulate all bridges over navigable waters, remove offending bridges, and punish those who shall thereafter erect them. Within the sphere of their authority both the legislative and judicial power of the United States are supreme. A different doctrine finds no warrant in the Constitution and is abnormal and revolutionary."

In a case concerning a license to construct a boom in the Mississippi, the court said, in 1878: "Moreover, the United States, having paramount control over the river, may grant such license if the State should refuse one." (98 U. S., p. 409, Patterson vs. Boom Co.) In 1882 the same court said, in the case relating to the bridge over the Ohio River, authorized by both State and the United States, that the act of Congress was "the paramount license for the erection and maintenance of the bridge." (105 U. S., p 479, Bridge Company vs. United States.) The authority to construct the bridge across the Missouri River from Council Bluffs to Omaha is derived from the act of Congress of February 24, 1871, without any legislation of the State of Iowa authorizing its construction, and the construction of the bridge under this act has been declared legal by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The act of Congress July 14, 1862 (11 Stat. L., 570), authorized a railroad company to construct the bridge over the Ohio River, near Steubenville, and makes void all provisions of the acts of Ohio or Virginia in conflict therewith. This is a notable instance of where Congress authorized a railroad company to construct its bridge over the Ohio River, although the express legislation of Virginia provided that it should not construct that bridge until certain other bridges should be constructed elsewhere. The act of Congress strikes down this restriction of the State Legislature, and gives express authority to the railroad company to construct its bridge in spite of the same.

The committee do not deem it necessary to cite more instances of Congressional action in authorizing bridges, nor to refer at greater length to the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court and circuit courts of the United States in which this power is recognized as unquestioned.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 27, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter dated the 8th instant from the Committee on Commerce, by its clerk, inclosing Senate bill No. 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "to authorize the construction of a bridge across Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road," and requesting that the committee be furnished with such suggestions as may be deemed proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

In reply I beg to invite your attention to the inclosed letter, dated the 21st instant, from the Chief of Engineers, who embodies a report in this matter by Major Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, concurring in his views and recommending that the height in the clear between the bridge and the water be measured from the level of mean low water and be made 32 feet, if practicable.

The recommendations of Major Gillespie and of the Chief of Engineers are concurred in.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. SAMUEL J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office for report of letter from the Senate Committee on Commerce, by its clerk, Mr. J. B. McMillan, dated the 8th instant, inclosing Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and establish the same as a post-road," and to state that it was referred to Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, who has returned it with a report, of which the following copy is respectfully submitted.

Major Gillespie's views are concurred in by this office, and in addition it is recommended that the height in the clear between the bridge structure and the water be measured from the level of mean low water, and be made 32 feet, if practicable.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
New York, January 16, 1886.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report in compliance with first indorsement, Office Chief of Engineers, United States Army, January 14, 1886, on letter from Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, January 8, 1886, referring to Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road."

This is essentially the same as Senate bill 1447, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, upon which reports were submitted from this office under dates of February 28 and April 15, 1884, to which references are respectfully made.

Arthur Kill is about 12 miles long, and is a retired and sheltered water connection, through Kill von Kull, between the Upper Bay of New York and the mouth of the Raritan River. At the proposed site of the bridge the width from bank to bank between high-water lines is 625 feet, approximately, and between the 12-foot curves 500 feet, approximately, the depth in the center of the channel being 18 to 19 feet M. L. W. In the northern half of the kill the navigable depth is 13 feet, low stage, and in the south half 15 to 18 feet, low stage; these are the minimum depths arising from small shoals, the maximum depth near Perth Amboy being in excess of 35 feet. By a slight improvement the navigable depth may readily be increased throughout to 20 feet, low stage.

Senate bill 121, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, provides for the construction of a pivot draw-bridge which shall have a width of span of not less than 200 feet in the clear on either side of the pivot pier, and a height of not less than 30 feet from lower chord to low-water level. These provisions, in my opinion, meet all the demands of the present or future commerce of the kill, and the restrictions contained in section 4 of the bill are ample to secure a location and construction for the pivot pier, such as will cause least interference with the existing deep-water channel, and at the same time will be least obstructive to the tidal currents.

The construction of the proposed bridge under the provisions of the bill will not injuriously affect any interests over which the Government has control.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Bvt. Lieut. Col., U. S. Army.

Brig. Gen. JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army, Washington, D. C.

The letter from the Senate Committee on Commerce is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. General.

Hon. W. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 7, 1884.

SIR: In returning herewith the copy of bill S. 1447, "A bill to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull, and to establish the same as post-roads," which was referred from the Senate Committee on Commerce for the views of this Department thereon, I have the honor to inclose herewith a report of the Chief of Engineers, dated the 4th instant, embodying a copy of a report upon the subject of said bill by Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, New York, dated the 28th ultimo.

The views presented by Major Gillespie, in which the Chief of Engineers expresses his concurrence, are also concurred in by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 4, 1884.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith (S. 1447) "A bill to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill and to establish the same as post-roads," referred to the War Department for its views and suggestions from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate of the United States, and thence to this office, and to invite attention to the following copy of the report thereon of Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers.

It will be observed that Major Gillespie sees no objection to the construction of draw-bridges as provided for, but makes objection to spanning the highway in question by a bridge with unbroken spans having the elevation specified in the bill.

[Second indorsement.]

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
New York, February 28, 1884.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. That there may be no mistake as to the water way mentioned as "Staten Island Sound," I take occasion to say in the beginning that the navigable channel known by that name is limited exclusively to the narrow and tortuous water course usually called Arthur Kill, which separates Staten Island on the west side from the New Jersey shore, and extends from Elizabethport to Perth Amboy, N. J.

The name Kill von Kull is reserved solely for the connecting passage between Upper New York Bay and Newark Bay, separating Bergen Neck on the north from Staten Island on the south.

The bridges mentioned in Senate bill 1447, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, are proposed to be erected over Arthur Kill, one at or below Elizabethport, N. J., and the other at or above Perth Amboy, N. J.

Arthur Kill is the grand highway for all the local commerce of the several ports and streams on the west side of Staten Island, as well as for the interstate commerce passing south and west through the Delaware and Raritan Canal, which connects the Raritan River at New Brunswick, N. J., with the Delaware River at Trenton, N. J. This canal is one of the principal links of the chain of internal navigation of the Atlantic seaboard. It has a minimum depth of 8 feet throughout, and its annual tonnage is 2,000,000 tons, approximately; less of late years than formerly, owing to railroad competition, though its importance as a water way is not impaired.

The draws which are described in the bill are sufficiently wide to meet all the requirements of commerce along the route over which the bridges are to be built.

I do not approve the spanning of any important navigable highway, adjacent to sea, which is now or may hereafter be utilized by sea-going vessels, by a bridge with continuous spans, even if the bottom chords should be placed so high as 100 feet above high-water mark, except in the rare case of two large and populous cities, where the intercommunication between them over a bridge would be greatly interfered with by frequent and prolonged openings of the draw.

No such condition exists on Arthur Kill, and while the existing depth of water is not sufficient for sea-going vessels of the first class, yet the stream is capable of improvement, and will be improved whenever commerce demands it. For this reason the bridges should be provided with draws. The proposed clear width of 200 feet on either side of the pivot will be ample to prevent interference with the security and convenience of navigation of Arthur Kill.

On the approach to Newark, N. J., from Kill von Kull, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, which crosses Newark Bay, has a draw with a clear opening of 80 feet on either side of pivot; the New York and Newark Railroad, at the mouth of the Passaic River, has one of 65 feet, and the Pennsylvania Railroad, in the city of Newark, has one of 75 feet.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey, whose tracks cross Raritan River near its mouth, on the approach to the canal, after a lengthy controversy with the Delaware and Raritan Canal Company, adopted and built a draw opening of 200 feet, the same as proposed in this bill.

The main objects to be gained by the construction of these bridges are to give rapid transit around the island to points on the New Jersey shore, to increase the facilities for reaching New York, and to provide means for reaching coal wharves to be built, it is said, by the coal-carrying roads on deep water on the east side of the island.

It is a comprehensive enterprise, which, if successfully carried out, will add greatly to the commercial character of the island and the adjacent shores, and the bridges may be safely authorized to be built under the restrictions of the bill without any detriment to commerce, present or prospective.

The papers are herewith returned.

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Bvt. Lieut. Col., U. S. A.

I concur in these views.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. WRIGHT,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 17, 1884.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reference to this office on the 11th instant of the letter of the Hon. W. P. FRYE, of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, inclosing S. 1447, "To authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull, and to establish the same as post-roads," and certain papers relating thereto, and to state that it was referred to Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, who has returned it with the report of which the following is a copy.

Major Gillespie's views appear to be just and proper, and are concurred in.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER'S OFFICE, New York, April 15, 1884.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The intent of the act, as I understand it, is to authorize at this time the construction of a railroad bridge over the navigable waters of Arthur Kill, the Secretary of War having the reserved right, in the interest of commerce, to dictate the character and arrangement of the bridge in all its parts.

The petition submitted with Mr. Bonnett's paper has been carefully considered. The east bank of Arthur Kill, on the northern side of Staten Island, extending south to Fresh Kills, is a wide marsh land, with but little variation in its elevation for a distance back from the shore line of over 2 miles. If the lower chord of the bridge proposed to be built near Elizabethport be placed at 135 feet above high water the approaches to the bridge would be over long and high trestle-work, which would have so steep a grade as to make the railroad probably unfitted for giving rapid transit to the towns on the island and on the west bank, or for convenient connection with existing railroads.

The 135-foot contour of the island along the proposed railroad line on the north shore does not extend westward of Factoryville. At the southwestern point of the island the ground is higher than on the north shore; on the ridge above Tottenville the 100-foot contour appears on a single rise, but this is an exception; all the rest of the ground in the vicinity is much lower.

The low character of the land adjacent to Arthur Kill therefore compels, with rapid transit in view, the construction of low bridges; and that they may not obstruct navigation, draws must be provided, the exact width and arrangement of which can be definitely stated only after a careful survey of the water course has been made, including the determination of the strength and directions of the current. A clear width of not less than 200 feet in the channel way, through the bridges provided for in the act, is, with my present knowledge, deemed sufficient for the requirement of the commerce of Arthur Kill, and the projected bridges may, it is thought, be built without interfering injuriously with the flow of the tide, or without increasing the dangers to navigation due to ice which forms in the kill or is driven there by winds and currents.

The relation of the bridges to the tides, ice-floes, and other matters involving the rights of commerce, will engage the attention of the examining officers designated by the Secretary of War, after the bridge company shall have presented drawings and specifications of the plans proposed.

The examination will include not only the bridges proper and the necessary width of draws, but their sites and the sites and arrangements of the piers with reference to the navigation of Arthur Kill in all its bearings.

The papers are herewith returned.

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Major of Engineers, Bvt. Lieut. Col., U. S. A.

The letter of Hon. Mr. FRYE is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, April 19, 1884.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing bill S. 1447, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, a bill "to authorize the construction of certain bridges across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull, and to establish the same as post-roads," together with a petition from Mr. P. Bonnett and other shore-owners, and also returning for consideration in connection with the petition referred to a report, dated the 4th ultimo, from the Chief of Engineers, embodying a report on this bill from Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed report of April 17, 1884, from the Chief of Engineers, embodying a supplemental report, dated the 15th instant, from Maj. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, whose views as expressed therein are concurred in by the Chief of Engineers.

The inclosures to your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman of subcommittee of Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDING, READING, PA.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House bill 1983 with the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Reading, Pa., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $180,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making contracts for the erection of said building.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand a second.

The question being on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker appointed Mr. MORRISON and Mr. ERMENTROUT to act as tellers.

Before the count was completed,

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that a quorum has not yet voted, but in consideration of an agreement to have a vote by yeas and nays on the passage of this bill the point will not be made.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 128 and the noes 8, so there is a second. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. ERMENTROUT addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MORRISON. I ask for the reading of the report of the committee.

The report of the committee (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred House bill 1983, beg leave to report:

That Reading is one of the most flourishing business emporiums in the Union. The census of 1880 shows it to be the fifth largest city in Pennsylvania and the forty-first in the United States. Owing to its remarkable prosperity since then, it is, at present, the fourth largest city in Pennsylvania. The official record shows that since June 1, 1880, 2,833 permits have been issued for buildings of various kinds, mainly for dwelling-houses to accommodate its rapidly increasing population, and also to considerable extent for manufactories.

The population in 1870 was 33,930, and in 1880 was 43,278. The increase in population has been unusual, for an Eastern city, since 1880, and the population is now set down at about 55,000.

The valuation of property for taxation for city purposes in 1883 was $23,460,806; in 1885, $28,638,837. Total receipts by the city government for the year ending December 31, 1883, were $372,140.50; in 1885, were $405,863.96.

Reading is situate on the river Schuylkill, 54 miles east of Harrisburg, 56 miles north of Philadelphia, 36 miles south of Pottsville, in the heart of the richest agricultural section of the State, abounding also in rich deposits of iron ore and limestone.

The large anthracite-coal fields of Pennsylvania are immediately at her doors, being within reach by both water and rail. Besides having canal navigation (Schuylkill Canal Company) it is the radiating center of six important railroad lines, under the general control of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, connecting the anthracite-coal regions with New York, Philadelphia, and the West, and the lumber regions.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, under the name of the Pennsylvania and Schuylkill Valley Railroad, has completed a line of railroad, almost parallel with that of the Philadelphia and Reading, to the city of Reading, and from thence to Hamburg, from which point the road will be pushed to an early completion to Pottsville and the anthracite regions of the Schuylkill. It is expected that their lines will, at an early period, be extended up the Lebanon Valley, to connect with their main line to the West.

The machine-shops, car-shops, rolling-mills, &c., of the Philadelphia and Reading Company are located here; the pay-roll of this company alone being $150,000 monthly. There are also located here large manufacturing establishments, including foundries, forges, machine and boiler works, anthracite furnaces, cotton and woolen mills, hat factories, tanneries, pipe and sheet mills, stove-works, nut-works, hardware-works, tobacco factories and warehouses, grist-mills, paint-works, zinc-works, planing-mills, carriage factories, breweries, &c., giving steady employment to thousands of operatives.

It has six national banks, with aggregate capital stock of $1,300,000; fifty building and loan associations, whose income and loans, from the savings of the working classes mainly, reach at least $125,000 monthly. Two street railway companies traverse the city, from east to west and from north to south.

Among its public buildings are large churches of every denomination, two large opera houses, Mænnerchoir hall, and six large market houses, in as many sections of the city. It has also three parks.

The total financial transactions of the Reading post-office for the year 1885 amounted to the sum of $247,063.35, of which the postal money-order business amounted to nearly $103,000. The gross income of the post-office up to December 31, 1883, was $42,937.46, the net income $21,857.84; and notwithstanding the reduction in rate of postage the gross income for the year 1885 amounted to $41,936.81, and the net income to $19,361.53.

The receipts from internal revenue are about $300,000. There are two deputy collectors and seven gaugers in the county of which Reading is the county seat.

The sources of Reading's prosperity are of an enduring and permanent character, insuring for it a continuing and rapid growth. It is destined to become one of the great cities of the East in point of trade and population.

The Government now depends for its post-office accommodations, and for the accommodation of the United States revenue officers, examining surgeons, and commissioner located there, upon rental of buildings never constructed for any such purpose, and in which, from time to time, alterations, repairs, and extensions have been required to meet its growing wants, subject to the risks of removal. These quarters are insufficient for the public need, inconvenient for officials, and afford no security against robbery or fire.

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to select a site for a public building at Reading passed the House during the Forty-second Congress, and a bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds during the Forty-seventh Congress, and also during the Forty-eighth Congress.

The bill reported to the Forty-eighth Congress became a law, but the sum appropriated, $80,000, was entirely too small. The commission appointed by the Treasury Department failed to find a suitable site at such a price as would justify the commencement of the building, and so reported to the Department. Upon inquiry made as to the price at which a substantial building commensurate with the business and future growth of Reading could be erected, the Department suggests that the limit fixed by the present bill, $250,000, would be a proper appropriation.

Your committee are of the opinion that the amount heretofore fixed as limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Reading is too small, and they therefore recommend that House bill 1983 be amended by striking out the words "two hundred and fifty thousand," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and eighty thousand," and that as thus amended the same do pass.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. MCMILLIN. Was there not an agreement we should have the yeas and nays on this bill.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Yes; that was the agreement, and I will call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. It was agreed if the call for a quorum was withdrawn the yeas and nays should be taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Yes; that is so.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But that does not bind the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 69.

So the yeas and nays were ordered, one fifth of those present voting therefor.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 155, nays 34, not voting 134; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the bill was passed.

During the roll-call, on motion of Mr. SOWDEN, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. CARLETON, on this vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, with Mr. MCKINLEY, on this vote.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. BRUMM, for this day.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. BRADY, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. MCADOO. My colleague, Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, if present, would have voted in the affirmative on the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

RETURN OF A BILL.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its Clerks, requested the return to that body of the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran.

And then (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

Also, papers to be filed with bill for relief of Mary Buckley, mother of Martin Sullivan—to the same committee.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 8, 1886.

Prayer by Rev. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., of Gettysburg, Pa.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Warren County, Illinois, praying that all ex-Union soldiers be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a paper addressed to myself and my colleague, but evidently in the nature and intended as a memorial to Congress, against the passage of what is known as the oleomargarine bill. It is signed by Cooper & Co. and 20 other business firms in the city of Memphis, Tenn. I ask that the paper be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be so referred.

Mr. HARRISON presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Union Soldiers and Sailors' Rights Association of Indiana, favoring the enactment of an amendatory clause to section 1754 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing a punishment for non-compliance with its provisions, &c.; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL presented a memorial of citizens of Pensacola, Fa., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CALL. I present a memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Fernandina, Fla., stating—

That the port of Fernandina is situated at the entrance of Cumberland Sound, being the mouth of the Saint Mary's River.

That the port affords the deepest water for the entrance of vessels on the whole coast of Florida, Pensacola alone excepted.

That it is the mouth of the Saint Mary's, a deep and important river, and is connected with the whole coast of Georgia and Savannah on the one hand and the Saint John's River on the other, by the inland passage.

That it is the designated terminus of the ship-canal between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic.

That it is the only port on the eastern coast of Florida admitting vessels engaged in European and South American commerce.

That it is the only port on the eastern coast of Florida admitting vessels drawing over 12 feet of water.

That it has a considerable and increasing commerce, both foreign and domestic. The tonnage of vessels arriving and departing annually is over 300,000 tons.

That it is the railway terminus of the Florida Railway and Navigation Company's system, comprising nearly 600 miles of road in Florida.

That it has a bonded warehouse and greater facilities for foreign commerce now than any port on the Atlantic coast of Florida, and that "with a bar channel deepened (says General Gillmore in his report of July 1, 1885), the port will become at once far more valuable and attractive for maritime and naval purposes," and it will then have as great a depth of water as any harbor on the Atlantic coast.

That new lines of transportation now building will connect this port with the great granaries of the West.

That a semi-weekly line of large steamships is now running between Fernandina and New York, and English steamers are in the trade between this port and Great Britain.

That, as a commercial port, it is of superior importance to that of the Saint John's (Jacksonville).

That the low-water depth at the entrance of Saint John's River, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, is 6 feet, with a high-water depth of 11 feet.

That the low-water depth at the Fernandina bar, according to the same report, is 12 feet, and the high-water depth 16 feet.

That the average tonnage per vessel of foreign vessels arriving in the Saint John's, from 1880 to 1885, was 71½ tons, and during the same period at Fernandina was 442$\frac{88}{100}$ tons.

That the value of exports per sea from the Saint John's, 1880 to 1885, was $315,018.29, and from Fernandina $1,417,830.

That the amount of duties collected at Jacksonville, 1880 to 1885, was $6,245, and at Fernandina, during the same period, $59,388.

In view of these facts, the board of trade protests against the proposed removal, or abolition, of the custom-house from this port.

I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I present a resolution adopted by the Jacksonville (Fla.) Board of Trade, favoring legislation making liberal appropriations for sustaining the Signal Service of the Government on the Atlantic coast of Florida. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of William H. Williams and 48 other citizens and soldiers of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of John Birkelbach and 20 other citizens and soldiers of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of James Fox and 27 other citizens and soldiers of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; and the petition of Lewis Hopkins and 64 other citizens and soldiers of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of pension bills as recommended by the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a resolution adopted by the Iowa State Traveling Men's Association favoring the enactment of the bill now pending before Congress to remove the fees and licenses now being levied on commercial travelers for goods sold by them by sample in the several States and Territories. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the memorial of Mrs. A. F. Newman, of Utah, on the subject of female suffrage in that Territory. I have read it, and as it contains so interesting an account of the operations of the female suffrage Mormon law there, I ask that it may be printed as a document. As the subject has now been acted upon here, I ask that the memorial lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the memorial presented by him be printed as a document. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The memorial will lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1982) for the relief of John Fraser, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6692) for the relief of Ferdinand Plocher, to report it back adversely. There is a general law now authorizing all that is provided to be done by the bill and I move that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram Berdan, agent of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company of New York, claiming compensation for infringement of the Berdan patents in the manufacture of the Springfield breech-loading rifles at the national armory at Springfield, Mass., submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2619) authorizing a settlement of the claim of Hiram Berdan, assignee of the Berdan Fire-Arms Manufacturing Company; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1775) for the relief of Eliza Ellen Ehle, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit from the joint commission to consider the organization of the Signal Service, Geological Survey, &c., a report on that subject, and two bills which I ask may go on the Calendar; and at the request of the minority, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is absent, I also present with the majority report the views of the minority.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles:

A bill (S. 2620) to repeal so much of the act of June 20, 1878, as provides for the appointment of second lieutenants in Signal Corps; and

A bill (S. 2621) to limit the printing and engraving for the Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, and the Signal Service.

The views of the minority were ordered to be printed with the report.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2482) to restore pensions in certain cases;

A bill (S. 2418) granting a pension to Sarah E. Boulter;

A bill (S. 2002) granting a pension to Betsey A. Smith; and

A bill (H. R. 6311) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2435) granting a pension to Henrietta M. Drum Hunt; and

A bill (S. 2176) granting a pension to Joanna W. Turner.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James B. Royce, of Washington, D. C., late corporal of Company I, Seventh Vermont Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2622) granting a pension to James B. Royce; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8332) increasing the pension of James I. Miller, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 921) granting a pension to Clara L. Preuss; and

A bill (H. R. 4816) granting a pension to Mrs. Letitia J. Garrard.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report an original bill creating an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Considering the emergency which is known to all Senators, the committee directed me to ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is a very brief bill and I ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 2618) creating an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be paid the same compensation, perform the same duties, and shall be subject to all provisions of law that are now provided for the present Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. This act and the office hereby created shall continue in force one year only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I think that should stand over one day, as it is a very important bill, although I have great deference to the judgment of that committee. The Senate is not full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed, as a matter of course.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont who reported the bill to a suggestion made by my colleague [Mr. DAWES] as to the phraseology of the bill. It provides that the office shall be held for one year. Is it the intention of the committee to have a successive officer appointed for one year, or one officer?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; it is intended only as a temporary act.

Mr. HOAR. Then the bill ought to be amended by saying that the act shall only continue in force for one year. Otherwise it would be the duty of the President to appoint another officer at the end of the year and then another. I hope my friend will look at that question which my colleague has raised.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has now withdrawn his objection, that the bill in relation to an additional Secretary of the Treasury may be considered, and that an amendment which has been suggested by that Senator be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2618) creating an additional Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2623) for the relief of F. M. Ryon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2624) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2625) to establish a national art commission; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2626) to limit the creation of debts by the Territories of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of F. M. Ryon be taken from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, there being no adverse report.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BONDED EXPORT WHISKY.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas on the 6th day of January, 1885, the Secretary of the Treasury issued an order extending the time for the transportation or exportation of whisky then in bond, upon which the tax of 90 cents per gallon was due, or soon to become due and payable, which on the 30th day of June, 1885, amounted to 7,750,696 gallons, all of which had been stamped for export, and upon which, under the law, the tax amounting to $6,975,626.40 had become due to the United States; and

Whereas under said order the bonded period was extended, giving the owners of said whisky the term of seven months in which they were to export said whisky out of the United States, giving notice of their intention and entering into bonds so to do; and

Whereas on the 27th day of March, 1886, an order was issued by the Secretary of the Treasury permitting whisky exported under the order of January 6, 1885, to be returned to the United States, without the payment of the duty provided under the existing customs laws of the United States as provided by law, permitting the same whisky exported under the order of January 6, 1885, to be returned to the warehouses from which it was originally bonded for export:

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate the authority upon which the above-named orders were issued, together with all decisions of the Attorney-General of the United States, opinions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, correspondence, and all other papers relating to the before-mentioned orders of January 6, 1885, and March 27, 1886, now on file in the United States Treasury Department, and to inform the Senate what quantity of whisky has been exported out of the United States under the order of January 6, 1885; also, what quantity, if any, the tax was permitted to be paid upon after the expiration of the time provided by law, instead of its being stamped for export, and also, what quantity, if any, has been returned to the United States under the order of March 27, 1886, at what ports of entry it was admitted and received, and where it is now stored in bond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have it adopted, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the best way. It is merely a resolution for information.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution without the recital be read again.

Mr. DAWES. It is only calling for information; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first part of the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to it.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1391) to provide for the erection of a public building in Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 1983) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Reading, Pa.; and

A bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road; and

A bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1061) for the relief of Sarah M. Shearer;

A bill (H. R. 1627) granting a pension to Annie Bagley;

A bill (H. R. 4085) for the relief of John A. Orndorff;

A bill (H. R. 4782) granting a pension to Elizabeth McKay;

A bill (H. R. 5154) granting a pension to Margaret A. Poland;

A bill (H. R. 5406) granting a pension to P. E. Raiger;

A bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of Edward M. Harrington; and

A bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Antionette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney.

The message also returned to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran.

TARIFF AMENDMENTS TO OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed and the Calendar is in order.

Mr. DAWES. Yesterday the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] submitted and asked to have printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an amendment to the oleomargarine bill. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment, and ask that it may be printed and referred to the same committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of the amendment of Mr. BECK and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. —. That on and after the date of the passage of this act, for all purposes relating to customs duties and importations, "woolen cloths" shall be held and construed to include worsted cloths.

SEC. —. That, for the purposes above named, the concluding proviso of section 365 of said act relating to women's and children's dress goods shall be held and construed to apply to the whole of said section.

SEC. —. That for the purposes above named the term "knit goods," in section 367 of the said act, relating to cloaks, dolmans, &c., shall be held and construed to apply only to garments shaped wholly by knitting.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the amendment to the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Chief Clerk to read the order adopted yesterday which governs the proceedings of to-day and to-morrow, and which the Chair will endeavor to enforce as far as he can.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That after the disposition of Senate bill No. 371, the rest of to-morrow and next day be devoted to the Calendar under the five-minutes' limitation for debate and subject to objection, which objection shall operate only to pass over the case, retaining its place on the Calendar; and that no motion shall be made to proceed to the consideration of any bill where objection is made to the consideration of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to in the order of the Senate will now be proceeded with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act; that it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the said bill and the amendments thereto, and had appointed Mr. CRISP, Mr. RICHARDSON, and Mr. HANBACK managers at the conference on its part.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL CADETS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BUTLER as a substitute for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has the floor on the pending question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, when the Senate went into executive session yesterday I was referring to the claim which is made by that portion of the Committee on Naval Affairs represented by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] that the act of 1882 was retroactive, and therefore grievous and not to be borne. I find in the report signed by that portion of the committee, the one-half who favor the bill, these words, referring to the act of 1882:

The law was not operative when they (the cadets) entered the academy, and five years later was made to affect them, and is thus retroactive and in effect an ex post facto law.

I wish at no great length to enforce the view which I endeavored to present yesterday, that this claim is without foundation. There is nothing whatever in the act of 1882 that is retroactive upon the naval establishment. The committee which considered and matured that statute and presented it to Congress, where it was accepted and passed, considered that subject very fully, and it was on the basis that it was not a retroactive act that it was accepted and adopted by Congress.

The Court of Claims and the Supreme Court, which have since considered the force of that act, have taken into consideration this very subject. In the opinions of the Supreme Court cited in the report, and making a part of it, presented by the Senator from South Carolina, the court in two places refer to this very subject. The Supreme Court, upon appeal from the Court of Claims in the case of the United States, appellant, vs. De Witt C. Redgrave, the engineer who brought the suit, and whom the court decided the law of 1882 did not apply to because he was already a graduate, go further than this, and in discussing the provisions of the act of 1882 base their decisions on the simple fact that the cadet-engineer who had served four years and graduated was out of his course of studies and in the Navy, and therefore the act did not apply to him. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to this decision upon the point of which he is inclined to make so much. The court say, referring to this statute:

The provision in the act of August 5, 1882, for the discharge of surplus naval graduates is prospective only and does not apply to the classes of 1881 and 1882.

There the court have considered this very subject and have decided, in accordance with the intention of Congress when the act was passed, that it is not a retroactive act. So also Mr. Justice Matthews, in the opinion upon the case that came before the court, after a full discussion of this legislation, referring to the language of the act and to what it embodied as its purpose, says:

And to this end the whole scheme of reform embodied in the legislation was made prospective.

With what force it can be argued here that the operation of the act of 1882 was retroactive I fail to perceive. I know it was not the intent of the committee framing the act; I know it was not the understanding of Congress.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. May I ask the Senator if that is not the decision of the court?

Mr. HALE. I have just read from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Skipping a little bit. I ask if it is not really the decision of the court that it is a retroactive act?

Mr. HALE. On the other hand, the decision of the court is that it is not. The decision of the court, if the Senator will understand it, is simply upon the point that the engineers, unlike the cadets, had completed their course at the academy in four years, and were out of their studies and in the Navy, and therefore that the act did not apply to them. The court do not go into the question of obligation in the least, but declare in terms that the statute is prospective and not retroactive.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will ask the Senator, inasmuch as my name is signed to that report, whether it is not a fact that the court decided that there was a certain class of students, or whatever you may choose to call them, who made a contract, or that the Government contracted with under what the Senator calls the four-year theory and another class of six years?

Mr. HALE. No, sir; the court decide nothing whatever on that point and lay no stress whatever upon the question of contract. They simply declare that the engineers, unlike the cadets, had graduated at the end of four years, and that under the provisions of the act declaring that it should not apply to officers of the Navy, it did not apply to them. Then they go on further than that and declare that as to all the others the act is not retroactive but is prospective.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. As I read the language of the court, they do not say that the act is prospective so far as it relates to the engineers, upon the ground that the Senator has just stated, that they were officers of the Navy, that they had graduated, and therefore could not be discharged in that summary way. That was the idea as I understood by reading the decision.

Mr. HALE. The court go further than that, examine into the act and discuss its propositions and its leading purpose in a quite long and full opinion, and then at the end in the opinion of Mr. Justice Matthews—and I shall read it again showing that it does not simply apply to the engineers—he says:

And to this end the whole scheme of reform embodied in the legislation was made prospective.

I repeat that on this very point, of which so much is sought to be made, there was originally the purpose of the committee which framed the act that it should not be retroactive; there was the act of Congress adopting it with that purpose, and here is the decision of the Supreme Court upon the very subject-matter, declaring that it is not a retroactive act.

Let us see one reason why the committee and Congress were so careful. The youths who were then in the academy pursuing their studies were not in the service of the Navy of the United States. They were not a part of the Navy, and the act specifically and carefully and with the greatest scrutiny and care provided that nothing in it should apply to any officer in the Navy, because it was deemed to be of importance that the man who was in the Navy as an officer should not be troubled or sent out.

These cadets had been admitted as students by the Government, were being educated by the Government, were having their course of instruction supplied to them and receiving $600 a year in addition. The act was not only not retroactive as to them, not shutting them off, but declared that they might go on and complete their course at the expense of the Government. Every boy who was in there at that time has his right as a student and as a cadet very jealously guarded, and he is allowed to go on and complete his course; and if at the end of four years he chooses to take a certificate of what he has completed he may leave the service and go into civil life without any money, or he may continue and complete his six years' course and then go out and receive his $950. Nobody at that time thought of raising the point that the right of the boy at Annapolis was not jealously and scrupulously guarded. He was not a part of the naval establishment; but Senators are inclined to look, and the committee reporting the bill sustaining it by its report evidently look, upon those boys as part of the Navy.

The last examining academic board, the last board whose view upon this subject (not upon what I am speaking of, but upon the meaning to be given to the words I quoted), took up this very point for consideration. Let me read on this point one of the things that led to the provision of the act of 1882 as touching these boys. The academic board of visitors on June 6, 1885, the same board that is referred to in the report of the Senator from South Carolina, say this—I ask the attention of Senators to it:

There is, perhaps, another matter upon which it seems proper that something should be said. The cadets in the Military Academy at West Point are by an act of Congress designated as a part of the Army, but this board are aware of no statute which directly provides that cadets in the Naval Academy are a part of the Navy.

And that is so. The cadet at Annapolis does not stand as a part of the Navy of the United States and in its service as an officer, as the cadet at West Point does in regard to the Army; and this whole proposition went upon the theory that the rights of these boys as students, as cadets who were studying, should be jealously guarded; and so they were.

This proposition embodied in the act of 1882 that so carefully looked out for these cadets and gave them the privilege of completing their studies and jealously excluded the retroactive feature, would not be subject to objection one half as much as the proposition that the Senator from Massachusetts sustains; that is, shutting up the academy. You shut up the academy to-day or next year and you interfere with the course of study of every boy who has entered that academy. He might have some reason to say that the Government was expected to complete his course there.

Mr. DAWES. I have never been able to make the Senator understand the proposition I made. The Senator from Maine argued yesterday—and that is the burden of his portion of the report made to the Senate—that the course of instruction at Annapolis had resulted in producing a great many more officers for the Navy than there was any use for, and he has addressed himself for several years (and the bill under consideration is the result of that report of his) to relieving the country from the difficulties which that policy has involved us in. I suggested whether, instead of addressing himself to measures to relieve us from the results of the policy, he had not better modify the policy and reduce the supply; and he inquired of me if I would shut up the academy at Annapolis, and I said if it was necessary to reduce the supply to the needs and demands of the Navy, it would be better to shut it up than to go on overrunning the Navy with officers and then proceeding to devise measures by which we could throw the officers out after we had educated them. That was my suggestion. If the Senator supposed that I would be a party to inducing young men to embark in this education, and after having spent one, two, or three years there to shut the academy down on them, as you would a lid on a box, I have never made any such suggestion as that.

Mr. HALE. I asked the Senator yesterday if he would vote to shut up the academy at Annapolis, and he said in terms that he would.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly, and I say it now; but I would shut it up in some way in conformity with justice. The Senator seems to think that to relieve the country of the results of the unwise policy adopted it is necessary to disregard all the undertakings of the Government thus far instead of correcting the policy itself.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, if there has been any force whatever in what I have said, it is upon that very point; and I here and now utterly repudiate the idea that this legislation is based on the Government going back upon any of its undertakings. On the other hand, I have endeavored to show that the act of 1882 most jealously guards the rights of everybody, of every officer in the Navy that he shall not be turned out, and of every student who was pursuing his studies that his studies should not be interfered with; and I do here declare that it is an assumption on the part of Senators who favor this bill that they are seeking to do what will put the Government right in keeping its contracts. On the other hand, the Government has scrupulously guarded and sensitively guarded its duties in this respect; and there is nothing in the legislation which shows that the Government has been lacking in the least.

Yesterday I asked the Senator in terms:

Now—

Not hereafter, but "now"—

Now, will the Senator vote under any condition to close the school at Annapolis for six years?

To which he responded:

Mr. DAWES. Most certainly. I will do so rather than educate nine-tenths of all that graduate there at the expense of the Government without the slightest idea of ever utilizing that education in the Navy.

So that the Senator put in contradistinction one against the other, either the educating men and turning them out and receiving only what the Navy wants, or shutting up the academy for six years. I would rather pursue the course that the act of 1882 intends and lays out so clearly, than to rudely shut up that academy for six years. I differ with the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator did not understand me as imputing to him an intention to violate any of the contracts or engagements of the Government. The only assertion that I intended to make was that that was the effect of the proposition.

Mr. HALE. That I deny.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator did not ask me whether I would ruthlessly shut up the academy at Annapolis. He asked me if I would do it under any condition, and I repeat it I would do it under certain conditions.

Mr. HALE. The Senator made no conditions yesterday. He answered my categorical question clearly in the affirmative.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator be kind enough to read the question again?

Mr. HALE. I asked:

Now, will the Senator vote under any condition to close the school at Annapolis for six years?

Mr. DAWES. And I said that under certain conditions I would.

Mr. HALE. The Senator replied:

Most certainly.

And then he went on to say that he would do so rather than do what the act of 1882 did. I differ with him.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator says I meant by that that I would ruthlessly shut up the academy without any condition whatever.

Mr. HALE. I will accept the Senator's proposition that he would shut it up, without applying the word "ruthlessly," because that perhaps is a strong term to apply——

Mr. DAWES. The Senator must accept my answer as I gave it, that I would shut it up under certain conditions.

Mr. HALE. Well, it is not very essential.

Mr. DAWES. No, it is not worth anything; but it is worth going into the RECORD just as it was, if at all.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me, if I am capable of making anything clear, that I must have made it clear that this act is not retroactive, that Congress carefully saw to it that it should not be, and that the court has so passed upon and declared it as a matter of law, and that as a matter of right to these young men everything was done for them that could be done.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. I concur very fully with him that we ought not to provide a larger force for the Navy than may be necessary for the work of the defense of the country. I understand his position to be this: While these young men went to the Naval Academy there was no contract express or implied on the part of the Government that they would after completing their education enter into the naval service of the country. I can not take that view exactly. My impression is that when the young gentlemen were invited to become students at the Naval Academy the idea was present to their minds that after the completion of their studies they should be admitted into the naval service and have employment in that profession. If that is the case, it occurs to me that injustice was done by the act of Congress.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator even supposing that his assumption is correct, and it may be, that these young boys sixteen years of age supposed when they went there that they would be instructed and would be received into the naval service, does he hold because of that, because a boy so expected, that every rule of law and of policy and of the needs of the Government shall be overridden? Does the Senator forget what the Government was doing for these boys, and how much better a condition of life they were in than nine hundred and ninety-nine boys out of a thousand, how eager would have been so many boys to have taken their place, and that even to them in their tender years should be applied the rules which apply to men, that no man shall be taken as assuming what is contrary to the law and the needs and the good of the Government? Does the Senator set up the fact that the boy of sixteen supposed the Government would take him in as overriding everything else? When a judge is appointed to a court and it is declared that he shall not be removed until the expiration of his term, he expects that he will serve that term out, and yet the Senator knows and I know of case after case where the legislative power has intervened and abolished the court, and the judge has to take the result as the needs of the State or the General Government require and accept the legislation; and there is no hardship in that. It may have been a disappointment to the boy, I grant; undoubtedly it was a keen disappointment to many of these lads.

How it is that Senators who early and late upon all other things are in favor of economy and in favor of the Government exerting its rights and caring for itself have been overpersuaded in this matter as a question of sympathy I am unable to understand. I feel sympathy myself for these boys; I have had their case stated to me in most eloquent fashion; I have known and seen the expression of disappointment, and almost crushing disappointment, on the faces of different cadets when they were not allowed to go on; but I can not let that interfere with what seems to me to be the need of the Government. When the committee and when Congress considered this it took the other side, and endeavored to make recompense to these boys for their disappointment by treating them in the most generous fashion.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say for the information of the Senator, what of course is known, that the Committee on Naval Affairs never did consider this question.

Mr. HALE. No; but Congress considered it, and the bill was passed after one of the most animated debates that I ever listened to upon this floor.

Mr. BUTLER. It was put upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. It was put upon an appropriation bill, but with deliberation; and it was not passed in silence; it was not passed without scrutiny. Day after day upon this floor, in the heats of the closing days of that session of Congress, the Senate debated this question day in and day out, night in and night out. The whole scheme of the reformation of the Navy was brought in here, and it was antagonized and sharply disputed, and Congress at last adopted this, so that it was not done in a corner but in view of all the facts.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what is the generous compensation which he speaks of to the boys?

Mr. HALE. First, it is a generous compensation to any American boy to receive him in over and above his fellows who desire to come in to the naval school at Annapolis.

Mr. HOAR. But the compensation?

Mr. HALE. I am coming to that. All of this is compensation. Compensation is not a matter of cash alone, but that has not been left out here. Compensation is not always to be measured in bank notes, in checks upon banks, or in gold or in silver; but compensation is a large word. Education is compensation, and education is a better compensation to the youth of this country, and no Senator knows it better and realizes its force more than the Senator from Massachusetts—it is a better compensation than money.

Mr. HOAR. I think my friend understands my question exactly. I understood these boys had been received into the Naval Academy with an assurance that they should become educated to and become members of a certain profession, a profession limited in number, it is true, but recognized the world over as one of the eminent professions; that is, one of a naval officer. Thereupon, when they partially completed their education they were deprived of the right to enter upon that profession.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. HOAR. The profession of a naval officer in the service of the country. It is for that I understand the honorable Senator from Maine to say that generous compensation had been given in the education which they had received for that purpose. I suppose he meant by that compensation the $900, and it was for the sake of asking him another question that I asked that. I ask whether, supposing my honorable friend had been trained for the bar, as he was, and a brilliant and able member of it; when he had completed his studies at the law school, at the age of twenty-four or twenty-five years, he had been condemned never to practice law as long as he lived, would he consider $900 or $9,000 any sort of compensation for that? This, it is true, is a profession few in numbers in this country. It is larger in England and in France, in Germany and in Italy; but it is the one thing which that boy had been invited by his country to make the sole and honorable ambition of his life. After having his whole youth, with every hope and training of himself and his faculties and his habits and his sense of honor, when he had been brought to think of that one thing to which his life was consecrated, then suddenly you turn him off, and say, "We have given you education, and we give you $900; go." What compensation is there in that?

Mr. HALE. In the first place, the Senator, with his remarkable acuteness, which we all admire, has failed to perceive that even on the question of not permitting this student, this boy at the academy, the cadet, to enter the service, Congress has not interfered and prevented it. The act does not in any way prevent the boy who completes his course from entering the service of the United States. It does not say that at the end of the six years none of the class shall be admitted, but that to be admitted he must be near the head of the class. It narrows the number who shall be admitted; it does nothing more than that. There was no cadet of the class of 1883, of 1884, or any subsequent year after the legislation of 1882, that was forbidden in any way to enter the naval service; but it was simply said to him, "You shall be submitted hereafter to a severer test as to your studies, you shall be able by your proficiency to be one of the first sixteen or seventeen, or you shall not enter the naval service." It does not shut down the door and deny every one of this class, but it simply declares what shall be the qualifications.

Does the Senator doubt that Congress at any time could have added a half dozen studies to the course at West Point or at Annapolis, and thereby made it less likely that a student would graduate and enter into the service of the United States? This was only proceeding in that way: it was making the attainments of the cadet who should enter the service higher and better, and make him a better officer. That is all that it did, and I am glad the Senator has furnished me an illustration in reference to the profession of the law. He asks what would be considered if a young man had been intended to enter the profession of the law, and he should find after he had given time to the study that he could not enter the profession. Why, sir, in my own State, at one time the qualification, the examination to be pursued before a student at law should be admitted to our courts was very small and very low, and scores of young men in the State of Maine were pursuing the course of studies with the intention of entering the bar, the best of them, those with the noblest aspirations, undoubtedly expecting afterward to make up what was not required of them; and the Legislature came in and declared that there should be a strict examination, that it should be in open court, that it should cover things which had never been embraced before; and under that scores of young men who were studying intending to enter the bar were shut out and never entered the bar, because the legislative power in its discretion declared what should be the qualifications before the State would allow young men to be admitted to the advantages that this great profession offered.

Mr. HOAR. You do not say that these men shall go in on any qualifications. You only say they shall be better than somebody else. You say to thirty men or forty or fifty, "only the first sixteen of you shall come in, whatever your qualification is." That is altogether a different thing.

Mr. HALE. That is making the end and aim of the studies. I put it again, suppose Congress has come in at any time and declared that in addition——

Mr. HOAR. I have transferred all my acuteness to my friend on the other side.

Mr. HALE. Suppose Congress had come in and instead of lowering the number that should be made, not in terms, but said "only those who shall attain a certain proficiency in the more abstruse branches of study than what is now pursued should be admitted," that would be another method, and it would result in the same thing. It would pare down the number that should be received into the naval service of the United States just as effectually, just as ruthlessly, if you choose to use the word, as it would if it went the other way. That was all that was done.

Now, Mr. President, these young men and their friends are bound to get back. They do not mean to let Congress alone. As a relative of one of these boys told me the other day, he never meant to leave Congress alone until these boys had got back. They mean to get back. The question whether they are wanted is not considered; the question whether they will be well treated is not considered; but they mean to get back and burden the crowded rolls of the naval establishment; and this bill, working, as it does all the way, against bright men and in favor of dull men, will not take back into the Navy the brightest of these men by any means. The Senator from South Carolina, if he ventures, before this debate is over, to go into the argument of this bill, instead of trusting to the lobbying that has been done for it, if he ventures to discuss this question of the merits, will say that the numbers that I have given are too large, and that one hundred and forty-five will not come back. They will not.

Mr. BUTLER. I would go into the argument with my friend from Maine but that he is evidently talking against time, and I have no idea of being betrayed into a discussion with him.

Mr. HALE. I am talking against the Senator, for I know how I ought to go over all the ground and forestall him before he gets the ear of the Senate.

These boys will not all come back. There will not be one hundred and forty-five of them, but I will tell you and the Senate who will come back. The poorest of them, the dullest of them, the least enterprising of them, the boys that will make the poorest officers. The brightest of them, the ablest, the most enterprising, the ones who would make the best officers have not been hanging around Congress, have not been beating at our doors and clamoring to come back, but have taken the education that the Government gave them and the money that was bestowed upon them and have gone into other walks of life, and to-day are in the professions, are in engineering, are in mercantile and commercial business, or are teaching the youth of the country, and taking advantage of the good education that they got at the academy, and no voice is heard from one of those young men; but the drones and the indolent and the slothful and the unenterprising are the boys who are demanding that they be let back upon this overburdened establishment to increase the suffocation in the lower grades.

They will not all come back. Undoubtedly the brightest of them will never come back; and to-day as I know more than one, several of these boys are thankful that Congress interfered and in the needs and purposes of the naval establishment gave them an opportunity to retire with nearly a thousand dollars, and they are better off to-day than they would be if you had said that they would have to remain at the foot of the rank until they were nearly forty years of age. No, sir; they will not all come back.

If I were one of them I should feel a great deal better if I had taken my $950 and the course of instruction which is given in this institution.

The Senator from South Carolina, if he ventures to debate this bill as his report in the case does, will declare that this course of instruction prevents and disqualifies a young man from succeeding in private life. Why, aside from the seamanship and drill, it is the course which is pursued in our colleges and institutions where the boys pay their own bills. The examination is upon subjects that not every youth is competent to be admitted upon. In the first year, here are some of the studies pursued: In mathematics, Ray's Higher Algebra, Todhunter's Algebra; Chauvenet's geometry; in English studies, history and law, the structure and historical development of the English language, exercise in the composition of letters; in history, outlines of history, especially the history of Greece, Rome, and of the States of Western Europe, historical geography, important points in naval history, illustrated by notes and by lectures. Here are the authorities, the books that are read and studied: Modern languages, French and German, and thorough drill in those, with higher mathematics; English studies, rhetoric and composition, choice and use of words, argumentative composition, exercises in the composition of letters and telegrams, themes—all of the things that go to make a boy equipped for the struggle of life that must fall upon him upon which he must enter when he comes into competition with his fellows. So it goes on in the subsequent year.

I have had occasion, because I anticipated in reading the report what the arguments would be, to look up these matters. I have found out what this course was. I was once a visitor there myself and knew it, but had forgotten it, this course which it is declared unfits a boy for other business! The training that he gets there, outside of and over and above the naval drill and discipline and gunnery and seamanship, is a liberal education. There are not one-half of the colleges in the United States that rank as colleges which give a boy as good an education outside of the technique of this course at Annapolis as this institution does.

Here are some of the studies in the course pursued: Seamanship, ordnance and gunnery, mathematics, steam-engineering, astronomy and navigation, physics and chemistry, English studies, history and law, modern languages, drawing, and constitutional law—a thorough education in all of those. There is no Greek there, but I would give more for the education that they give in physics, in the higher mathematics, English literature, the uses of language, the medium by which we approach and communicate with and influence mankind, than I would for all the Greek that was ever taught in all the schools.

These boys get the advantage of that. It is the fault of the boy when at the end of six years he comes out of the academy if in addition to all that he knows about gunnery, about seamanship, about navigation, he has not got a higher education that makes him a fully equipped man for any field that he may choose to enter in civil life—it is his fault and not the fault of Congress; the claim that this is not a good education for these young men is not borne out.

Mr. President, I have taken much more time than I hoped to occupy when I rose; but I felt the importance of the subject. I have taken some interest in the naval establishment and in naval affairs ever since the day when, as a young man, I entered the lower House. I have seen two things happen, the naval establishment so far as concerned its materiel, its ships, running constantly down, and so far as its officers were concerned running constantly up, until the disparity was such that it rung out like a cry of fire and demanded the intervention of Congress. Congress intervened and passed the wise act of 1882. I have no apologies to make for that act. It is one of the things upon which I take some interest in considering that I had a part and parcel in it, for it begun the day when ships were to be built and the overplus of officers was sought to be restrained and prevented; and those added two existing good things. From that day to this some of the young men who were treated in that way have been before Congress constantly. They sometimes, without investigation because the subject was not discussed and presented, got bills reported in their favor; but they were never able to secure their passage. They have got academic boards that have visited the academy, that have been under sympathy by all that was heard from these young men, to report in their favor. But never on full discussion has Congress or either branch of it declared that it would go back upon the beneficent legislation of 1882 and involve the Government in this responsibility and destroy the good effect of that legislation.

Here we are in the seventh month of the session. The Committee on Naval Affairs has had opportunities to discuss and consider the whole subject of the Navy; the House of Representatives have had the same opportunity; and the first thing that comes up in reference to this great question, a question upon which our parties resolve alike when they get into convention that there should be a reorganization of the Navy, that we should have a respectable establishment, and not be the scoff and contumely of all the nations of the earth—the first thing that is pushed forward and obtruded in our faces is this provision to go back on the legislation of 1882 and take back these hundred or more officers who are no more needed in the naval establishment than the galley slaves or the rowers of the ancient Piræus would be needed; and we are asked to do that now and sympathy is invoked and it is declared that whatever may be the needs of the establishment this should be done.

Nobody has presented any bill that I have ever heard of in the House of Representatives or here that has been able to make its way for any new ships, because there are not all over the country in every State individuals personally interested to push such a bill as that, but supinely, slothfully, all these opportunities are neglected and we are asked, as the first thing in the direction of rehabilitating the naval establishment, to resuffocate this lower rank and to consign every boy who has gone on under this act and has graduated and has taken his place to find that if he graduated in 1884 and has got a commission as an officer in the Navy and has a chance for promotion, that if this bill passes the boys of the class of 1883 who could not enter the Navy under this law come in and are placed over him. They have no rights; no sympathy is evoked for them; they are the boys who are to make the stamina and the good blood and the efficiency of the Navy in the future; nobody is lobbied and besieged for them; but this other class that have gone away from the academy and been away shall come back now—not the best of them as I have said, but the others, and be put in over the boys who graduated the year after.

I protest against any such legislation. I protest in the interest of the American Navy against this attempt. I have said and tried to make plain that these boys have no reason to complain. The best of them do not complain. I have nothing to say against their character. I have no doubt that they are good, discreet boys, with a desire to enter the service, but every boy who enters the Naval Academy can not get into the service. In my own State there are hundreds of boys who would be glad whenever vacancies occur to be taken into this establishment, be educated, and take their chance. They can not go, because there is not room for them. They are just as worthy, they are just as ambitious, they are just as much entitled to the glowing description which the Senator from Massachusetts has given of the boys as those who do get into the establishment. And yet Congress does not propose to interfere and legislate for them.

And with this I leave the subject, earnestly protesting against the passage of this bill by the Senate as a step in the wrong direction, and as precisely the thing that Congress ought not to do.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina. I move to strike out, in lines 6 and 7 of the amendment, the words "entered the Naval Academy," and insert:

Completed the four years' course at the Naval Academy and received diplomas of graduation.

So as to read:

That that part of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1882, limiting the number of graduates of the Naval Academy to be retained in the service each year shall not apply to those cadets who had completed the four years' course at the Naval Academy and received diplomas of graduation prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he is certain that since the passage of the act making six years the course the student who keeps on for the six years, the last two years at sea, gets a diploma of graduation at the end of four years? I make the suggestion because the Senator does not want to make his amendment so that it will not apply to those boys.

Mr. McPHERSON. He gets a diploma of graduation when he leaves the Naval Academy and goes on his sea trip. The education at Annapolis being a technical education, a diploma of graduation is given him, and then he takes his position at sea for putting in practical use the technical education he has received. Hence the graduates of 1881 and 1882 at the time of the passage of the act of 1882 occupied an entirely different position, in my opinion, from that of cadets then at the academy who had not passed through the graduating course at the academy. I have ever been in favor of restoring the classes of 1881 and 1882 because they had finished their course at the academy and were then in the service of the Government.

Let it be understood that at one time the four years' course at the academy was all that was required of the naval cadets. Because of the fact that so many were entering the academy and no places could be found for them by promotion, the course was extended from four to six years, the two years additional being simply a sea course to put in practical operation the technical education they had received.

Now, what is to be done? When the law of 1882 passed it found the classes of 1881 and 1882 both having passed their graduating course at the academy, and they were on board ship. They were away from the country when the legislation of 1882 took place, which included them also under the construction placed upon the law and on which we have had no decision of the courts. It placed them then in an entirely different position from that of students then in the Academy who had not passed the graduating course, and nobody knew whether they ever would or not.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like very much to have it determined under which of these two leaders we are to array ourselves. The Senator from Maine, who has just occupied the time of the Senate for about an hour to-day, informed the Senate that these young men were not in the naval service although they were at sea. Now comes the Senator from New Jersey and says that after a four years' course they are in the naval service although they are at sea. The fact is that the four years' course at the academy does not entitle them to a diploma of graduation. The Senator from New Jersey is mistaken. They get their diploma of graduation after the six years' course, two years having been spent at sea on board ship.

Mr. HALE. But the two years' course at sea is just as much part of their studies.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from New Jersey I presume did not mean to state that as a matter of law they had become officers in the service and were technically in the service the last two years; only that they were on sea duty.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I understood him to say, that they were officers of the Navy after having graduated.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator from New Jersey means that.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let the Senator understand me distinctly. I say that at the end of the four years' course the cadets are subjected to an examination. Some are to pass; others are not. Those who do not pass the requisite examination are dismissed, or given another chance perhaps. Those who do pass, as I understand, receive a diploma of graduation.

Mr. BUTLER. There the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I will change my amendment to meet the case, and say:

And have passed the requisite examination at the academy.

Mr. HALE. I think that would be better.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from South Carolina asks who is the leader in opposition to this proposed measure. The Senator from Maine and myself differ with regard to what would be justice. The Senator from South Carolina and myself differ in like manner. I suppose I am not revealing any of the secrets of the committee when I say that I asked in committee that the bill be modified. I was not supported, but I find in the report made by the Senator from South Carolina that he supports me, and I will read from his report. I do not assume leadership in the matter; I want to be in accord with him. I will read from his report:

Mr. BUTLER. I have been simply trying to have it determined which was the leader on the opposite side—whether the Senator from Maine or the Senator from New Jersey. I do not aspire to be a leader at all.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me read from the report of the Senator from South Carolina and see how near I am in accord with him.

We further find that all of the classes of 1881 and 1882 were in actual service—

Mark the language—

when the act of August 5, 1882, was passed. Not only had they completed the four years' course at the Naval Academy and received their diplomas of graduation—

I use his language in my amendment as first offered, supposing it to be correct—

but they were then serving at sea. Even if desirous of resigning after the passage of this act, in order to engage in some business or profession, their absence from the United States made it almost impossible to secure a position, and, even if they could have done so——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I would like to ask whether it does not really mean this——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator wait and listen to the report:

the cost of returning to the United States would have been so great that they were forced to remain in the service until the completion of the two years at sea. The law was not operative when they entered the academy, and five years later was made to affect them, and is thus retroactive and in effect an ex post facto law.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Is that the minority report?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Each of the two reports is signed by an equal number of members of the committee, both for and against the bill. I speak now of the report signed by Mr. CAMERON, Mr. DAWES, Mr. STANFORD, and Mr. BUTLER, which the Senator from South Carolina submitted. He agrees with me in that report that the law would be retroactive touching the classes of 1881 and 1882. Therefore I agree with him that the classes of 1881 and 1882 should be restored, and I claim with him that there is a wide distinction between a naval cadet who entered the Naval Academy and graduated, who received his diploma of graduation, and who, under the orders of the Government, was sent to do sea service—in the language of the Senator's report, in actual service outside—and a mere student. Hence it is that I have ever been in favor of restoring those classes. I believe that as to them the law was retroactive. After the two years' sea course they returned from that sea cruise and an examination took place. It is the result of that examination, taken together with the former examination after the four years' course, that determines the position the cadet takes upon the Naval Register; his assignment is based upon that examination. Hence I supposed the Senator from Maine would aver that, that being his final examination, he is not accepted, and has not finished his course until that examination has taken place and he is given a place on the Naval Register, but that does not necessarily follow. He had left the academy, he was in actual service, and in the service of the Government, doing duty as a naval officer and filling a place that officers under pay are required to do and do fill.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask the Senator from New Jersey if the effect of his amendment would not be to blend two bills, to include here the classes of 1881 and 1882, to reinstate in the Navy those who were suspended with the words "honorably discharged" by Mr. Chandler, the then Secretary of the Navy? I ask whether the effect of the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is not that?

Mr. MCPHERSON. It would restore the classes of 1881 and 1882; it would restore all classes that had left the academy after passing an examination and doing duty for the Government on shipboard at the time the act of 1882 passed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The effect would be to blend two bills.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It would be to limit the operation of the bill before the Senate to the classes of 1881 and 1882, and would not restore those who were in the Naval Academy and who had not passed the graduating examination.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am only asking for information, not opposing the amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have stated the effect of the amendment. I claim that there is justice in the restoration of the classes of 1881 and 1882, and in that respect I differ with the Senator from Maine.

The Senator from Maine in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, if I understood him correctly, said that the act did not prevent any of these persons from receiving an appointment in the Navy; it simply subjected them to a competitive examination, and those who took rank highest on the list were the ones selected to fill any vacancies that might occur in the grade next above. But the Senator in that regard did not go far enough, because if the law of 1882 had not passed the classes of 1881 and 1882 who were at sea were then subject to promotion under the old law. What was that? They had a place on the Naval Register and whenever vacancies did occur by seniority they were entitled to promotion and must be promoted before those who entered the academy later. So in any event the classes of 1881 and 1882 would have been promoted if they passed the requisite final examination after return from the sea course, and they could not have been dismissed from the Navy except by court-martial. They were upon the Naval Register and would have been entitled to promotion which would have hindered the promotion that has been given to other and later classes.

That is exactly the situation. I claim that no injustice whatever has been done to the naval cadets who were in the Naval Academy and who had not finished their course. A good education is given them; a compensation is given them greater than they could earn at anything else; and if the Government of the United States owing to the topheavy condition of the Navy required, if the exigencies of the Government, the interest of the Government required that there should be a limit as to the number of officers who should be placed upon the Naval Register, then I claim that it was within the power of the Government and it was the duty of the Government to do it, and no injustice was done to those young men who were then pursuing their studies.

As to the education at the Naval Academy, in my opinion any young man entering the academy receives there an education which fits him for almost any department of business in life. The education there is a very full one; and one thing above all others which to my mind is indispensable and important to every young man who is seeking to attain an education is the discipline which is required from boys at the Naval Academy. Certainly, for myself, I think I would prefer to be educated there to fit a man for any place in life to any school or college in the country.

Hence I think, Mr. President, the Senate will not fail to draw a distinction and a very proper distinction between the classes of 1881 and 1882 and the classes which came in later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. I shall not detain the Senate by making any response to the Senator from New Jersey.

The burden of the argument of the Senator from Maine was that there was not room in the Navy now for these young gentlemen that we propose to restore. If there is any force in that argument, it applies just as much to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey as to the amendment which I had the honor to present. It would be very unfair, very unjust, it seems to me, to make this discrimination in favor of one set of these young gentlemen against the other.

I will say, now that I am on my feet, that the statements made by the Senator from Maine are in my judgment enormously exaggerated. I do not mean intentionally so. In the first place this measure will cost nothing like the amount which he has stated. I have had an estimate made of the cost as I arrive at it, which would be about $217,000 distributed over five years' time, or about $40,000 a year. In the next place he has exaggerated the number of cadets that will be likely to go back. It comes within my knowledge that a great many of them have gone into other pursuits. A great many of them may not desire to avail themselves of this bill if it passes.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be voted down. It would be very unjust, as I said before, to other young gentlemen to have this discrimination made against them. They regard it as a sort of stigma upon them to be put out of the service in this way. A great many of them, I think, would be perfectly content with having the vindication that this bill would give them.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Would it interrupt the Senator to answer me a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me draw an illustration. The classes of 1881 and 1882 were at sea when the act was passed. They had been four years in the academy; they had finished their course, and one of them had served a year at sea. A young man comes into the academy in the year 1881 by appointment; he has served there a year; he receives his compensation, more than he could earn in any other place in the world in any other business; does the Senator pretend to say that any injustice is done to that young man who entered the academy in 1881 if he should be given to understand that at the end of his term if he stood at the top of the list in the competition he might receive promotion?

Mr. BUTLER. I do think it would be the very grossest injustice if there was no such contract or agreement at the time he entered the service. I think it would be equally as unjust to the young man who entered in 1881 as to the one who entered in 1878. The act as to the young man referred to by the Senator from New Jersey would be just as unjust and harsh.

The Senator from Maine says there is no contract. Why, Mr. President, there is an agreement, and each one of these young men is required to sign this oath when he enters the Naval Academy:

I, ——— ———, of the State of ———, aged —— years —— months, having been appointed a cadet-midshipman in the Naval Academy of the United States, do hereby engage, with the consent of my (parent or guardian), that I will serve in the Navy of the United States for eight years, unless sooner discharged by competent authority.

There is the oath the young man is required to subscribe to when he enters the academy.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. What is the date of it?

Mr. BUTLER. It is a blank form of the oath that the cadet makes.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That does not apply to engineers, does it?

Mr. BUTLER. I take it that it applies to all, to all the cadet-midshipmen in the United States Naval Academy. I am not sure on that point, and it is not material to what I state.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Can not the young man at any time during that term resign?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course he is qualified to resign.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That is one side. It binds the Government and does not bind the cadet.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course he can resign; but that is the oath he is required to make when he enters the Naval Academy; and the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will make the act of August 5, 1882, if anything, more objectionable and more harsh than it now is. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the amendment that is offered by the Senator from New Jersey improves the bill very largely in this regard, that it cuts down largely the number of these young men that will be restored. I can not see the distinction that the Senator has in mind which puts the two classes that had finished their studies in 1882, and would take their final graduation in 1883 and 1884, in a different attitude from the others who came later, because when this act was passed about which so much controversy has arisen, in August, 1882, the members of the two classes that would graduate in 1883 and 1884, and who had ended their studies at the academy in 1881 and 1882, were away at sea without any opportunity to get out of the service. Those boys were undoubtedly differently situated from all the others. The other boys were in the classes and at the academy, had not been taken from it, were not away pursuing their duties upon the sea. These two classes had left the academy; they had not completed their course, because I again say that it is not a four years' course, it is a six years' course, and it makes no difference in law. But they had left the academy, and under the regulations and the law were pursuing their studies at sea and were away. They could not get back under two years. They had not the opportunity to resign; they had not the opportunity to get out and take their certificates of the four years' course of studies.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do you not think since the decision of the courts the practical recognition of this principle as applied to the cadet-engineers ought to cover this case?

Mr. HALE. I can see that a parity of reasoning might apply to the cadets who had completed their studies at the academy, but they are not the same in law. The cadet-engineers never had a six years' course, as the others had, and at the end of their four years they became graduates and were not touched by the law. The cadets who were in the six years' course were never graduates. Although they got through the four years' course at the academy, they were still cadets, but they had left the academy as the engineers had, and they invoke much more sympathy undoubtedly than this other class because they could not take advantage of the provisions of the act of 1882.

Mr. MCPHERSON. But the Senator is aware of the fact that as to the cadet-engineers it was not possible for them to be promoted to the grade of assistant engineer until they also had performed two years' service at sea and had passed their final examination. So with the single exception of the word "graduates" which was found in the law there was practically no difference whatever between the cadet-engineers who were restored by the decision of the Supreme Court and the classes of 1881 and 1882 which I propose to restore by this amendment.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator has not got the phraseology in his amendment, so that it makes no difference, but I think if he refers to them as the classes of 1883 and 1884 it will be more technically correct, because that is the way the academy refers to them by the years they graduate, their final graduation. They call them the classes of 1883 and 1884; but that is not essential, because the Senator has not embodied it in this amendment.

The Senator is correct in saying that their duties were the same; they went away the same; only the law in one case made them graduates and in the other it did not; and that is the foundation of the Senator's amendment, and as far as it goes it improves this bill. I shall vote for the amendment because it improves the bill. I would not vote for the bill even if so amended.

Mr. BUTLER. What then becomes of the Senator's argument that there is already suffocation and distress and all that sort of thing at the foot of the Navy now? Where will the forty-five young men of the 1883 and 1884 classes go?

Mr. HALE. I do not know, but I would rather the Secretary should be met by a question of disposing of fifteen or twenty young men put back than one hundred; and I would vote to cut down the bill the Senator from South Carolina has reported which would send one hundred or more young men into the overcrowded rank of ensign. I would vote for any amendment that would make it twenty. That is what the Senator from New Jersey proposes.

Mr. BUTLER. And then vote against the bill?

Mr. HALE. I would not vote for the bill, but I say I would vote to make it as small as possible.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In my opinion, if this question were presented to the court, believing as I do in the decision of the court, and recognizing as I do the principle there decided in the case of cadet-engineers, a like decision would be rendered in this case. There is no difference between the status of the cadet-engineer and the cadet-midshipman, except that the cadet-engineer must serve the same length of time and is then paid double pay to what he received while in the academy and before graduation. He is in the service of the Government, an officer of the Government, entitled to and receiving larger compensation. It simply shows that at the end of the graduating course they are called graduates, and that is the only distinction I can possibly draw in the law upon which the judgment of the court was rendered. Hence when a proposition is before the Senate to restore these classes, as the Supreme Court has decided practically the principle in the case of cadet-engineers, I claim that it is right on the part of the Senate to incorporate that much in a law and restore the classes of 1881 and 1882. As to all the other classes, it seems to me there is no requirement on us to put them back. It is simply a question with the Government, involving great expense; the question is, what are you going to do with these young men, where are you going to put them? We have a bill pending before the Senate, which I presume will be reported either favorably or adversely very soon, touching the cadet-engineers, thirty-four of whom are found I think now to be eligible under the decision of the court and the order of the Secretary restoring them to service. The next question is where to place them on the Navy Register. We must of course increase the number of assistant engineers to the extent necessary to furnish those young men places in that list. If either of these bills, either the committee's bill or the amendment I have proposed, should pass, it will be necessary to increase the number of that grade to which you propose to assign these young men, in order that they may be properly placed on the list. But I agree with the Senator from Maine that to pass the bill reported and advocated by the Senator from South Carolina would so complicate and so encumber the whole situation that we should not see any end of it. Confusion without any particular benefit to these young men would ensue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have another amendment to offer, and I think the Senator from South Carolina will not disagree with me in regard to this. In line 10, after the word "Navy," I move to insert:

And passing the examination now required by law.

Let it be settled whether these young men are professionally, physically, and mentally competent now by passing an examination. I do not think anybody can say that they ought to be restored to the Navy unless they are fit.

Mr. BUTLER. I think my friend the chairman of the committee has an amendment which will cover the question raised by the Senator from New Jersey as to a physical examination.

Mr. CAMERON. I have an amendment which I proposed to offer when the Senator from New Jersey took the floor.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to offer my amendment. After the word "Navy," in line 10 of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], I move to insert "and passing the examination now required by law."

So as to read:

And those cadets who have been honorably discharged under the provisions of the aforesaid act may, upon making application to the Secretary of the Navy and passing the examination now required by law, within sixty days after the passage of this act, be restored to the service and take their places on the Naval Register in the same manner as if said act had not been passed.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not quite see the force of that amendment. I do not know what examination the Senator refers to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is well known that a naval officer before he can be appointed or promoted must pass an examination. The examination is as to his physical, mental, moral, and professional qualifications. When the time has come for promotion an officer must pass that examination before he can be promoted. This is the year 1886.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not aware of any examination required by law, because the law never has required it. There is an examination for promotion. There are examinations when a boy enters the Naval Academy, and when he gets upon the Naval Register and seeks promotion of course he undergoes examination and he is promoted or otherwise as he is qualified; but I know of no examination that the law requires to meet a case like this. I do not know what kind of an examination the authorities would give them.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am perfectly willing to make it plain by adding after the word "law" the words "for promotion."

Mr. BUTLER. These young men are not asking promotion. They are simply asking to be restored to the Navy.

Mr. CAMERON. I will state that I do not think there is any law compelling them to undergo an examination prior to promotion even. That is a regulation of the Department. These young men have already passed their examination, and the only difficulty in my mind was that there might be some question as to their physical condition, and therefore I proposed to move an amendment in line 18 which I think will cover all that is necessary. But as to making them undergo a mental examination or any other examination except a physical one, it seems to me is asking a great deal more than ought to be required.

Mr. BUTLER. I concur entirely with the Senator from Pennsylvania, and would therefore ask the Senator from New Jersey to withhold his amendment until the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is acted upon.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am willing to hear the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. I propose to strike out all after the words "provided further," in line 18 of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, down to the word "graduation," in line 20, and in lieu thereof to insert:

No graduate shall be entitled to restoration until he shall have subsequent to the passage of this act passed a physical examination before a board of naval medical officers.

Mr. McPHERSON. I can not hear.

Mr. CAMERON. I propose to insert in place of the second proviso at the end of section 1 of the amendment the following words:

That no graduate shall be entitled to restoration until he shall have subsequent to the passage of this act passed a physical examination before a board of naval medical officers.

It says nothing about his mental or moral condition.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see that there might be other examinations that it would be essential these cadets should pass if they are going back in the Navy?

Mr. CAMERON. I do not see any such necessity.

Mr. HALE. Some of these boys, for instance, those that went out in 1883, have been entirely away from the Navy; have been away from naval studies; they have been away from naval associations; they have been away from all the things that tend to make a man competent for promotion in the Navy; and yet the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from South Carolina are not willing, in their determination to force these boys back, that that condition shall be met by examination.

Contrast for a moment, Mr. President, the condition of these boys, a graduate of 1883, for instance, who, after three years' absence, is coming back to be restored without examination, and is to be put into the Navy over and above the graduate of 1884, who went into the Navy, who has been in it ever since pursuing naval studies, attending upon naval duties, upon ships, in navy-yards, in the observatory, wherever he may be; and here this intrusion from outside is forced upon the Navy, and these boys who have been absent all this time are to be put in it over and above bright boys at the head of their class who have graduated; and the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Pennsylvania are not willing that they should be submitted even to an examination. It only discloses the determination there is to put these boys back whether or no, without examination and without qualification and without fitness.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is not authorized to make that statement.

Mr. HALE. I understood the Senator to object to an examination.

Mr. BUTLER. I objected to the amendment in the form in which it was put, and I am not sure but that I shall object to it entirely, because, without being disrespectful to the mover of the amendment, the Senator from Maine, I do not think there is any sense in it. That is my opinion about it. The Senator from New Jersey provides in his amendment that there shall be the examination now provided by law. I will say to the Senator from Maine that there is no examination provided by law for such cases because there has never been such a case in the history of the Navy. If the Senator from Maine or the Senator from New Jersey will give some line of examination I may consider it.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that whenever there is a promotion, not by law but by regulation, whenever a man comes up in routine by reason of a vacancy to the promotion that he has so long desired, he can not move a step, he can not go over into the promised land until he is examined under the regulations of the Department?

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. HALE. Now, let the Senator from New Jersey, if he chooses, or if that is essential to cover the point that no legal examination is required, that the law does not provide for it, modify his amendment and make it "such an examination as shall be required by the regulations of the Navy Department," because the Senator from South Carolina must perceive the great injustice to the boy who has remained in the Navy, has first attained the head of the class, and has been commissioned, and has got so far along in the numbers of his rank to have now a boy who has been three years away come back and be put over him and without examination. It only intensifies the objectionable features of this bill. I do not know that I feel like protesting further. I am willing to leave it to the Senate and let them decide upon this whole question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. HALE. I move to amend that by saying "and passing such examination"——

Mr. McPHERSON. I will listen to the suggestion.

Mr. HALE. It may be that the law does not require it. I propose to insert the words "and passing such examination as shall be fixed by the regulations of the Navy Department."

Mr. McPHERSON. The regulations of the Navy Department are printed regulations.

Mr. HALE. But this authorizes the Department to make another regulation.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well. I accept that.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply want to point out the injustice of both these amendments. If these young gentlemen are restored by this bill to the Navy Register, if they become naval officers with the rank of ensign and present themselves for promotion, according to the admission of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from New Jersey they will be subjected to a rigid examination before they can get promotion. Now, what harm can result to the service by simply passing the amendment as I have offered it, with the additional amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and let them take their chances, when it comes to promotion, to be subjected to the examination, which of course they will be obliged to be subjected to under the regulations? I can see no necessity in the world for this preliminary examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, as proposed to be modified, will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 10, after the word "Navy," it is proposed to insert:

And passing such examination as shall be fixed by the regulations of the Navy Department.

Mr. BUTLER. These young gentlemen all passed their examination after their six years' course and were entitled to be put upon the Navy Register as ensigns. Now, why subject them to an additional examination for getting back into the Navy when those who have remained in the Navy with their own classes are not subjected to a similar examination?

Mr. CAMERON. I want to say in addition that when they come up for promotion they must undergo an examination precisely the same as those who have remained in the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER. I have just stated that. There is no doubt about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON], as modified, to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the yeas and nays are taken I wish to call the attention of the Senator who offers this amendment to the place where he proposes to put it into the bill. If it is inserted in that place the effect will be that these young gentlemen must be examined within sixty days, which might be entirely impracticable. They are to apply within sixty days; and the place where this amendment is to go in would require that they should be examined within sixty days, which might make the whole thing entirely nugatory. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey does not mean to do that.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not feel any special concern about this amendment, except that I am in favor of anything which is restrictive of the proposition originally reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The bill itself I regard as entirely without merit. We are spending days in debate over a proposition to put into the already overloaded Navy one hundred and forty-five young men for whom there is about as much use as there is for a fifth wheel to a wagon.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sure the Senator does not desire to state the case otherwise than in accordance with the facts. There are not one hundred and forty-five to be restored by this bill or anything like it.

Mr. PLUMB. That is upon the assumption that all who were discharged from the Naval Academy under the law of 1882 will not avail themselves of the privilege of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir; I do not confine my estimate to that. The very highest possible estimate of those who would be eligible for reinstatement would be one hundred and eighteen, and about half of those perhaps will go back.

Mr. PLUMB. Let it be one hundred and eighteen, then. That is a difference only in degree, not in kind. The fact is that there are already at least three hundred officers in the Navy for whom we have practically no use. Now we propose to put one hundred and eighteen more into this already overburdened service. The money is something, of course; and I think on the whole that if we were to exert ourselves a little we could find some better way to spend that money; but it seems to be one of the peculiarities of our legislation that we are always ready to give the money in the Treasury to individuals, to increase compensation already large enough, and to create new places for which there is no necessity, while the industries of this country, its great commercial interests, go begging for lack of the support which the Government ought to give them, and which the money we propose to give here and now would help immensely to do; and we spend day after day in discussion about and in devising means for the benefit of the personnel of the Navy and not an hour in regard to those things which are vital to the creation and maintenance of a navy. Putting one hundred and eighteen more officers into the Navy and thereby spending the money which otherwise might be used to build ships, putting one hundred and eighteen officers into the Navy for whom there is no earthly use, is not only an unwise—I was going to say almost a criminal expenditure of the public money, but it is to overload the Navy and make it impossible that it shall ever be anything else than it is now, simply the nursery of personal preference and favoritism which inevitably find their way into this Chamber in the shape of legislation like that under consideration.

It is the establishment also of a principle that when we take young men into the Naval or Military Academy, the expectations which they may have formed, which have no basis in the law, are to control Congress, no matter whether there is need for their services or not. While they can resign, quit the service at any moment of time they choose so to do, the Government can never dispense with them at its own option and when necessary for the public interest, but have got them tied on our backs like the Old Man of the Sea. Whether they are needed in the public service or not, and whether they are useful or not, we have always got to keep them. I think the establishment of that principle in these two branches of the service would be worse than the expenditure of the many millions of money by which the cost of the establishment is thereby unnecessarily increased.

Mr. President, no Army officer and no naval officer holds his commission by any tenure except the will of Congress. There is neither law nor equity that requires us to keep one single one of them in the service a moment of time beyond that when we, in the exercise of the sovereign power given us by the American people to be exercised in their interest, say his services are needed for the interests of the Government. We have turned out of the Army of the United States from time to time hundreds of officers of the greatest military reputation, men who had served in actual war and not in the quasi-military performances that go under the names of army operations in time of peace, men who carried upon their person the wounds of an honorable and dangerous service, men to whom the Government is under obligation which it can never repay with money or with anything else that it can do, because the patriotism and the self-sacrifice of that service was such as legislation can never adequately reward. Then there was no talk that we had no power over the subject, that there was any injustice, and that Congress should be governed by the expectations which these people had formed. But now, forsooth, when some young gentlemen to whom we have given an education, whom we have fed and clothed and sheltered during the process of giving them that education, equipped them for the race of life to the fullest extent that education can do, because they thought they ought to stay longer, we are debating here a proposition to put them back into the Navy, not for a day, not for the purpose of salving their wounded pride, but to stay a lifetime in the service of the Government under great pay and in positions in which they can never, so far as any one can now forecast the conditions of the future, ever render one single hour of useful service to the Government.

If that is not an unwise and reckless perversion of the legislative power and a most unwise and reckless use of the public money, I do not know what language could describe such. Instead of more officers of the Navy, we need fewer. Instead of a greater personnel, a greater current expense, we need to put the knife in and cut strongly, decisively, and deeply in order that we may have a service worthy of the Government and which at the same time shall be kept within proper limits as to current expense.

There is neither justice nor propriety in this demand. We are in the closing hours of a session, with great and important measures awaiting the action of Congress, and there never has been a time when, in my judgment, there was as much need of Congress doing something not only to limit the ordinary expenditures for running the Government, but to turn the public revenues which we may have in excess of the closest needs of the service, if we are to continue to raise them into sources which will be beneficial to the great body of the American people. At this time to spend days in debating a bill of this character, and to seriously consider a proposition to overburden the Navy with one hundred and eighteen utterly useless officers, it seems to me is trifling with the public interests committed to our charge.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I think the Senator from Kansas is laboring under a mistake when he states that there will be under the operations of this bill one hundred and eighteen additions to the Navy.

Mr. PLUMB. I accepted the statement of the Senator from South Carolina who has charge of the bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I hold in my hand a memorandum with regard to naval cadets which furnishes the number for the three years, 1883, 1884, and 1885, a copy of which the Senator from Maine has. It is an official statement. Forty-one naval cadets were given certificates of honorable discharge under the act of August 5, 1882, for the year ending June 30, 1883; eight naval cadets graduated in the year ending June 30, 1884, and twenty-one naval cadets graduated in the year ending June 30, 1885, making in numbers seventy in those three years. The statement does not include the graduates of this year; but taking about the pro rata, I assume that altogether there will be ninety.

Mr. HALE. The Senator must see that in addition to that, not only are the graduates of this year affected by this bill, but the graduates of 1887 and 1888 are also in addition to the ninety.

Mr. BUTLER. That is exactly the correct statement.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator say that this bill does not take up the six classes the first of which graduated in 1883?

Mr. BUTLER. I mean to say this: Of the class of 1888 there will be but eight young men affected by this bill, because but eight had entered prior to its passage.

Mr. HALE. Of course it is a matter of estimate; nobody can tell; but even that has not been reckoned by the Senator from Tennessee. You may cut this down to the lowest figures you can, and you will not make it below the figures just given by the Senator from South Carolina, one hundred and eighteen; but the Navy Department furnishes the figures at the basis of one hundred and forty-five if they all go back. They will not all go back undoubtedly, but there will be over one hundred.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If we assume the same rule of diminution in the number that is shown by this same memorandum to have occurred in the line of cadet-engineers, 25 per cent. less, then you get the number.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I agree with everything that has been said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], but I want to emphasize his remarks by this statement, that official reports show that the Congress of the United States has appropriated $385,000,000 since the close of the war for naval purposes, for the building and repairing of naval vessels and for the pay of officers and seamen. I have had occasion heretofore to make the statement that in the city of Washington from year to year have been naval deadheads standing like lamp-posts upon the corners of the streets, attending public routs and assemblies, officers of the Navy without a ship after this enormous expenditure has been made by the party to which the Senator from Kansas belongs. And now he very properly says that he is opposed to increasing this number of deadheads to the extent of one hundred and eighteen, according to the Senator from South Carolina, and one hundred and forty-five according to the Senator from Maine.

Sir, it is a most conspicuous argument against the policy of the Republican party in regard to the Navy. We have few ships; but still we go on increasing officers, for what? In order to perform land duty; in order, I say it without meaning any disrespect to them, to float around the watering places of the country, and there are no vessels upon which they can place their service as naval officers or commanders. If I understand this discussion—and I have listened to it very patiently for the best part of two days—it amounts to this, that we have now graduated a certain number of young gentlemen for whom we have no use, and they come through their relatives and on their own personal solicitation and ask to be continued in a service which has no use for them whatever.

I am utterly opposed to any such bill. The first thing for us to do is to create a navy and then have officers in order to command our vessels; but until we have the vessels it is an expenditure of the public money contrary to all sort of reason for us now to pass such a measure as is proposed to the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know how many officers we have now to every ship in the Navy without these men? Fifty-nine. Fifty-nine officers on the active-list to every vessel in the Navy now, and they want more!

Mr. BUTLER. The trouble about the indignation of the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Missouri is that it breaks out, if I may be allowed to use such an expression, a little too late. I submit to those two Senators and to the Senator from Maine if it is exactly fair, if it is exactly just, if it is exactly right to these young gentlemen who are seeking to have their rights restored to them by this bill to visit upon their heads what the Senator from Missouri chooses to call "naval deadheads" about the city of Washington. Is it exactly fair for the Senator from Kansas, who seems to take special delight and pleasure in shying a brick at the head of every naval officer who is presented to this body, to make this the occasion of an assault upon the naval service of the United States?

A great deal has been said by the Senator from Maine and other Senators about these young gentlemen being obtruded into the Navy, about intrusion and obtrusion and lobbying. Sir, I say for the benefit and the information of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Maine that but one single one of these young gentleman has spoken to me on the subject.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is an exception, then.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say further to the Senator from Maine that they did nothing but what they had a right as American citizens to do in presenting their grievances to Congress and asking in a respectful manner, as they have done, that they be considered. And, sir, while the Senator from Maine is protesting against this bill, I protest in the name of these young gentlemen against this assault upon their character for demanding what they had a right to demand from Congress. This indignation, this freak of virtue, this intense desire for economy comes a little too late, I submit with great respect. Why, sir, it has not been two months since the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Missouri voted for a bill which I hold in my hand conferring upon the cadets at West Point precisely what we ask for the naval cadets who graduated at Annapolis. I heard nothing about suffocating the service; I heard nothing about young gentlemen through their friends importuning Senators and haunting the doors of Congress when that bill was passed. I did not hear the eloquent voice of the Senator from Kansas animadvert upon the criminality of such extravagance at that time. It has become the fashion when Senators are in pursuit of something to strike at to select the officers of the American Navy.

I have been in this city for very nearly nine years in the discharge of my official duty and I have failed to see these deadheads standing about like lamp-posts in the streets of Washington from among the officers of the Navy. But I have seen that whenever the demand of duty called them they have responded with gallantry and courage and efficiency, and I deny in their name, and in the name of the naval service, the truth of the statements of the Senators from Kansas and Missouri. I venture to say there is not a naval officer to-day within the city of Washington who is not here either upon proper leave or in the discharge of his official duty under the orders of his superior officer.

But let us suppose that there are the abuses to which these Senators refer, is that fact to be allowed to affect the rights of these young gentlemen, as I insist? If this legislation had been passed and applied to the cadets who came after its enactment I should have made no demur or protest. I recognize the right of Congress to reduce the naval establishment; I recognize the right of Congress to reduce the military establishment; but I deny the right of Congress to commit an act of injustice such as was committed by the act of August 5, 1882.

It has been stated that this bill would restore one hundred and forty-five naval cadets or ensigns. There is no truth whatever in the statement. At the very highest figure there are not more than one hundred and eighteen, and I undertake to say that out of that number not more than sixty, perhaps not more than fifty, would ask to come back into the Navy.

These young gentlemen considered, and as I think properly considered, that that legislation, stuck at the eleventh hour upon a general appropriation bill, upsetting the organization of the Navy, was a stigma upon them which it is the duty of Congress to remove by the passage of this bill.

The Senator from Maine talks about injustice being done to the young officers who remained in the Navy. The injustice has been done to those who were incontinently kicked out by Congress without reason or excuse and without justice. Sir, they ought to be put back, and then I will join the Senator from Maine or any other economical Senator upon this floor who is so much alarmed at the little money that is to be spent in doing justice to these young gentlemen who have dedicated years of their life in preparation for the service of their country which they would otherwise have devoted to preparation for a career in some other branch of life, and will consider with him what justice to others may require.

I say it will not only not cost $1,200,000, but it will not cost over $200,000, and that to be distributed through five years. If I had the time I would demonstrate it, notwithstanding the letter which the honorable Senator from Maine has had read from the Secretary of the Navy. The estimates made in that letter were based upon the assumption that the cadet-engineers would be restored. That whole question has been eliminated by the Supreme Court, who in a decision accompanying the report say that they were never out of the service. I suppose the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Missouri will rise and indignantly denounce the Supreme Court for entailing an additional expense upon Congress in putting thirty-five or forty cadet-engineers back when there was no need for them.

I think the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, which provides, as I understand it, that there shall be a mental examination before they shall be restored, is unjust. As I stated a while ago, the officers who have been retained in the Navy are not to be subjected to that test. Why subject these young gentlemen? If there is an officer of the United States Navy who has profited by the misfortune of his brother officer I should vote to have him discharged and dismissed with ignominy from the naval establishment of the country, but I do not believe there is an honorable man on the Navy Register to-day who would profit by the misfortune to his brother officer.

Now, one word in reply to what we were told by the Senator from Maine, that this Government is under obligations to the bright men. I think that was his language. It is a new rule for the guidance of the legislative department of the Government or of any department of it that because the Creator has not endowed all with an equal amount of brightness of intellect those not so endowed are to be condemned in disgrace. The proposition is simply monstrous, that because a young man does not acquire a certain standard of intellectual excellence he is to be condemned in disgrace, because forsooth the Government is under obligations to the bright men of the country.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Why, certainly.

Mr. HALE. Of course I made no such proposition as the Senator is now stating, but I put this to him: The class of 1884 in graduating furnishes seventeen boys at the head of the list who are received into the Navy and get their commission. We will call them the brightest of the class because they are at the head of it. If the bill passes the boys of the class of 1883 who were not at the head of the class, who were at the tail of the class, will come in and be put over those who were at the head of the class of 1884. That is not a question of disgracing a boy because he is not as bright as another boy, but is a case of a premium to a boy who does not pursue his studies in such a way as that he gets to the head of his class, and it is putting the head of the class at a disadvantage as compared with the tail of the class. To that I do object. I do not know of any law or morals or ethics by which that ought to be done.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator rose to ask me a question, and made a speech.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe in that?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course I believe in it. I believe in exact justice to all alike, whether a man is brilliant or dull; and if any other course had been pursued the Senator to-day would not have had the opportunity of rejoicing in the reputations made by some of the most distinguished officers in the late war, both in the Army and Navy.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator what test is made at West Point in graduating except this very thing? Are there not scores of boys dropped out there because nature has not endowed them with bright intellectual faculties?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not complain of that, but where they have come up to the requirement and graduated, whether they be bright or dull, when they have passed their examination, I say that it is the very cruelty of injustice to say that because they do not happen to have an equal amount of intellect with others they are to be kicked out. I say to the Senator that if that had been the rule he would never have heard perhaps of Sheridan and Grant and many others of the most distinguished soldiers of the late war.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir; but not to make a speech.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator think it is in the competence of Congress to discharge any naval officer for any cause whatever other than misconduct, without doing him an injustice?

Mr. BUTLER. I think, of course, that Congress has absolute jurisdiction over both the Army and Navy.

Mr. PLUMB. Can Congress justly reduce the naval establishment by discharging from the force any person now in it?

Mr. BUTLER. I will go further than the Senator is willing to go, and I will state as a matter of fact that Congress has a right to abolish the Army and Navy both.

Mr. PLUMB. Can it do that without doing injustice? I am referring now to what the Senator said about injustice to these young men who had ordered their affairs in accordance with the expectation that they were going into the Navy, and that is, I understand, the foundation of this bill. I ask him if it would not be a greater injustice to abolish the Navy or to do any act in relation to it which would require the mustering out of the officers of the Navy?

Mr. BUTLER. I am very frank to say that I believe Congress has a right to reduce the naval establishment.

Mr. PLUMB. Without injustice?

Mr. BUTLER. Without injustice; which is what Congress never did do.

Mr. PLUMB. If it can do that without injustice, how does the case of the young men who have only been engaged for four, five, or six years compare with the turning out of men who had reached fifty or sixty years and had served in the Navy thirty or forty years?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not claim that Congress ought to turn out those, and I do not believe Congress ever reduced the establishments except those raised for an emergency in war. Of course when men went into the Army and Navy at such a time, they went in on the assumption that the force would be reduced to a peace establishment. That could be done without the injustice which was the result of the act of August 5, 1882. It applied to young gentlemen who were then in the Naval Academy. If it had been made prospective, and had relieved all those in the academy and applied to those who entered subsequently, it would have been perfectly competent, and perfectly just, and perfectly proper that Congress should have done it.

What I complain of is that that act should have applied to those young gentlemen who went in under an express contract that they were to serve in the naval establishment for eight years.

I agree with a great deal the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Kansas have said, that the Navy may have too many officers; but I do not believe in the doctrine that you shall strike down without cause or excuse those who have entered the service with the expectation of remaining in it. The legislation on that subject should be made prospective, so that when a young man goes to the Naval Academy he may do so with his eyes open; and then no complaint can be made.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say only only one word in reply to what the Senator has said in reference to our being committed to this principle by having voted for the bill touching the West Point graduates. That is in no regard similar to this situation. The West Point Academy in its relation to the Army has never been like the Annapolis Academy in relation to the Navy. The Army has always absorbed all that West Point could graduate, and more too.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like just in that connection to read the act for which he voted, to see whether he is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield for that purpose?

Mr. HALE. The Senator may read the act if he chooses, but I doubt whether I voted for it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator did not vote against it.

Mr. HALE. It created no attention here.

Mr. BUTLER. The act of May 17, 1886, reads as follows:

That when any cadet of the United States Military Academy has gone through all its classes and received a regular diploma from the academic staff, he may be promoted and commissioned as a second lieutenant in any arm or corps of the Army in which there may be a vacancy and the duties of which he may have been judged competent to perform—

This is the part of the act to which I wish to call the Senator's attention—and in case there shall not at the time be a vacancy in such arm or corps, he may, at the discretion of the President, be promoted and commissioned in it as an additional second lieutenant, with the usual pay and allowances of a second lieutenant, until a vacancy shall happen.

Mr. HALE. I was going on to explain——

Mr. BUTLER. That is the act the Senator voted for.

Mr. HALE. No; I did not.

Mr. BUTLER. If he did not vote for it he did not vote against it, and now he says it is a great act of injustice to do the very same thing for the young gentlemen who were discharged at the Naval Academy.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator now allow me to go on?

Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon. He gave me permission.

Mr. HALE. I was referring to that very act and was going on to state the situation which led to it. The two establishments are not in the least alike. The fact in regard to West Point and the Army is that the classes are not large enough to fill the vacancies.

The rule in the Navy and at Annapolis is precisely the reverse; the classes are always greatly larger than the vacancies. West Point has gone on for years and has not required any such legislation as the Navy did, because every year the classes would be smaller than the vacancies, and the President would fill up the vacancies by appointments from civil life. That has been done year after year. This year there is an exceptional condition. There is a very large graduating class. There never has been before such a large graduating class, and it is not likely to occur again. The letters and reports from West Point do not show that it is expected it will occur again. Here is a solitary case standing out where a class is graduated larger than the vacancies, and everybody knows that the vacancies occurring hereafter will soon absorb that overplus.

Therefore, for this single class, not as a matter of policy, not running through all the future, not suffocating the lower ranks like the pending bill reported by the Senator from South Carolina, but only for the time being the act was passed disposing of a few officers and allowing them to remain on the supernumerary list until the vacancies absorb them. Everybody knows that that was the ground on which the act was put, and it was presented simply as a measure for the time.

Whenever West Point gets into the condition that Annapolis got into, and is loading into the Army scores and hundreds of graduates who can not be taken care of in the Army, then the same knife will have to be applied to West Point that was applied to Annapolis, and the Army will only take those whom it needs to fill the vacancies. The situation in the Army is not in the slightest degree like the case we are considering.

Mr. DAWES. Is there any difference except in degree?

Mr. HALE. Yes; there is a very great difference, because everybody knows that there are exceptions in every phase of human life which we have to provide for, and we are willing as a matter of gratuity to do it; but it does not involve the principle of permanently overloading the military establishment. That is the difference. It is a principle which is a grievous wrong, it is an iniquity to the establishment to permanently overload it, and the West Point situation does not involve that principle.

Mr. DAWES. It does not involve it to the same degree, but the act passed in May took care of those on hand just as this measure proposes to do.

Mr. HALE. It does not involve it at all. It is not permanently overloaded, but only for a few weeks or months.

The Senator from South Carolina in eloquent fashion apostrophized the Navy, its gallant officers, capable men, honorable gentleman. They are all that, I agree with him fully, and in the protest that for one I am making against this bill I am speaking for the officers of the Navy, for the men who are in the Navy now, for the young gentlemen who have gone on and earned their commissions and are treading the way that naval officers pursue and looking forward to promotion. I I am speaking for them against this intrusion, and not against the naval officers. I agree fully, and the Senator can go no further than I go in praising the spirit and gallantry and honorable character and conduct of the officers of the naval establishment; and I want to save the naval establishment from the blight that will grow over and be put upon it at the bottom if this intrusion is allowed.

Mr. BUTLER. All I desire to say in reply is simply this, that if the Senator desires to destroy the esprit of the Navy, as I understand it, he can not adopt a more effective method of doing it than just such legislation as was put on the appropriation act in 1882. I think nothing on earth will so destroy the feeling of pride in the Navy as that radical legislation, introduced at a time when it was impossible to have had an elaborate and full discussion of it, and in that way slap in the face, if I may use the expression, the very best and most meritorious officers of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. I think the bill before the Senate would do more to sap ambition and destroy honorable endeavor and encourage slothfulness and indolence and lack of attention and ambition than any measure that has been before the Senate touching the Navy.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from South Carolina imputed to me sentiments which I did not utter at all in derogation of these young men, and I did not hear anybody else say anything disrespectful of them either. I certainly had no thought in my mind that was adverse to them as young men of character, and I never have heard of their being about the halls of Congress, although other Senators no doubt have. I said nothing about the Navy except that it was overloaded. I spoke of the unwisdom, of the impolicy of what I regarded as a great wrong in adding to the expenses of the establishment, already great, by increasing the number of its officers when there were already a great many more than we needed or could by any possibility make use of at any time in the near future, so far as we can foresee that future. I objected to this method of increasing the expenses of the Government at a time when I think on the whole they ought to be diminished.

The Senator from South Carolina, as he is bound to do, says that whoever enters the Naval Academy or the Military Academy does it with an expectation that he will graduate from the academy into the Army or Navy and that he will be kept there all his life, and that Congress is estopped from ever turning him out except it does to him a gross act of injustice. He is driven to that position. It is the logic of this bill. Without that assumption the bill has no leg to stand upon. That idea I want to repudiate at the outset. I say the establishment of that principle is vicious not only with reference to the Army and Navy but with reference to all other branches of the public service. It is no more unjust to turn a young man out of the Navy, if I may use that expression, at any time when the Government thinks it has no further need of his services, than it is for the executive officers of this Government to turn out of the Departments men who have served there for ten, fifteen, or twenty years and who have come to believe that they were to go on as long as their lives last.

More than that, these people are not turned out to put somebody else in their places, but because their places are not needed; while in the other branches of the public service men are turned out to give place to other persons, and their just expectations, if any man can have a just expectation of a life service under the Government, have been not only disappointed but they have been disappointed while the place which they have been filling, and so far as we believe, satisfactorily, was itself left and filled by somebody else.

Now, there is something very singular about this——

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator proceeds further, while I did not desire to interrupt him, he has put me in a position I did not occupy. I did not state that Congress might not put men out of the Army and Navy without injustice. I made no such statement. I think Congress may, but I do not think it ought to have exercised that discretion when it put these young men out.

Mr. PLUMB. Who is to revise that discretion?

Mr. BUTLER. The Congress itself can revise it, and that is what I am trying to get Congress to do now, in a sense of justice.

Mr. PLUMB. But Congress said, here is a class of people we do not need, and it simply said to them for that reason, having no need for your services, we will let you go back to civil life. There the Senator says that Congress did a gross injustice which now calls for this special legislation to remedy; that it is unjust to those people who are on the threshold of life, who can not have made any special preparation for service in the Navy, who have a naval education but an education as well liberal with reference to the curriculum which obtains in all modern colleges, fitting them better for the duties of life than the average young men are fitted, and that too at the expense of the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to appeal to the Senator to allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask him if he does not think within his own experience that great injustice has been done by Congress in legislating officers out of the service in the Army and Navy.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know of any such case.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator's memory certainly is very defective.

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask the Senator to refresh it.

Mr. BUTLER. When we were on the Committee on Military Affairs together we restored numbers of officers who had been unjustly discharged by reason of what was known, I believe, as the "benzine board," and I think I have heard the Senator plead with great earnestness in behalf of some of those officers.

Mr. PLUMB. I gave my assent so far as I now remember to but one bill of that kind. That was the only one, and that was a case which did not involve an increase of the number of officers in the Army at all. It stood upon an entirely different footing. We do not need these men.

Mr. BUTLER. We did not need the man to whom the Senator refers.

Mr. PLUMB. But the place was there. He went back into that place, and his going back did not increase the number of officers in the Army by one.

Mr. BUTLER. But he prevented the promotion of others, of course.

Mr. PLUMB. That has nothing to do with the public side of the question. That is a matter of complaint for the individual who is thus interfered with, and not on the part of the public.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all these young gentlemen have done, and yet they are berated from one end of the country to the other because of their doing it.

Mr. PLUMB. I have heard nobody berate them.

Mr. BUTLER. I have.

Mr. PLUMB. I have not heard a word uttered in disrespect of these young men in this debate; but I do say it is a little singular that these young men, strong in physique, mentally and physically strong, well educated at the expense of the General Government, should be here seeking so persistently to get back. There are avenues open to them throughout the country which it seems to me would satisfy a reasonable ambition. It is a part of the general craze to get into the Army and the Navy, to get an easy berth, to have a life position, to be removed as far as possible from the contingencies which affect the ordinary run of people.

I think on the whole that in this great country there ought to be some place where these people could earn a living. I think after having an education given to them they ought to be able to take care of themselves. To a certain extent it is an impeachment of their self-respect and of their independence that they should be here asking Congress to take them back. The very fact that they are here implies that the bargain to be made is an unequal one and that they are to profit at the expense of the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that they are here. I have seen but one of them. I think that statement is entirely a gratuitous one. I do not believe they are here.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator mean to say that there has not been any demand from these young men for the passage of the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course not. I take it for granted there has been.

Mr. PLUMB. That is what I am referring to. I am not referring to lobbying or any thing of that kind, but I am referring to their desire to get back into the service of the Government when they know as well as anybody else that the Government does not want them and has got nothing for them to do. I do not speak of them with any special disrespect in that connection, but I only mention it because it has been brought up. I say again it is a part and parcel of the general craze to get into the Army and Navy and to be put into berths which are known to be tolerably soft and which are expected, whether justly or otherwise, to be permanent. To pass this bill is a recognition of the fact when once an expectation of this kind comes to exist in the mind of somebody, Congress can not put any hand on it, no matter what the public interest may require.

For these reasons I am opposed to the bill, but I am opposed to it for another reason. I believe that if we are to keep up the Naval Academy the best use we can make of it is to turn back into civil life a large portion of the graduates. It is better for the country to have young men who have had their attention turned to naval affairs and to military affairs and who have been educated with special reference to the service in these two branches scattered all over the country. We all know that the men who won distinction in the war were not the men who had been longest in the service from West Point, but men who, having served at West Point, had beside mingled with the people in civil life and thereby become broadened, widened, more sensible, and better qualified for the great commands which devolved upon them.

When the time comes to make use of the Army and the Navy, if it ever should come, it will be found that the men who have served the longest in those two branches of the service are not the men who are the best qualified to command. So I think if we are to keep up the Naval Academy on its present scale, and I would say the same thing about West Point, to turn a large number of the young men who graduate there back into civil life would be an advantage to the country and an advantage to them.

For the other reasons which I have mentioned, I hope the bill will not pass.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall vote against the bill. In doing so I desire to state that I am not at all surprised that these young gentlemen feel that an injustice has been done to them. They certainly went into the Naval Academy under the expectation and with the promise, implied at least, held out to them that if they graduated there they should be retained in the naval service of the country. The option, however, rested with them to retire at the end of the course from the Navy if they saw proper to do so.

I am not surprised that they have with some feeling applied to Congress to restore them to their positions in the Navy, but I can not agree with the Senator from South Carolina that any disgrace whatever has been inflicted upon these gentlemen. They went out under the act of 1882, which sought to reduce the number of officers of the Navy, and they went out in the same manner that some other grades of officers went out. It was not intended by Congress to degrade any of the officers who were dismissed from the service, or reduced in the service, at that time. I can not agree, therefore, with the Senator from South Carolina that these young gentlemen have been disgraced at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not state that; the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply said that they very properly and naturally thought that some stigma—I can not say a disgrace, a disgrace means degradation, but that some stigma had been put upon them by the legislation of 1882, not to the extent of a disgrace perhaps. That is what I said.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not agree that any stigma was put on them. It was understood at the time that it was simply an effort to reduce the number of officers of the Navy, not to discharge a man because he was not meritorious, but some rule of action had to be applied in order to bring down the number of officers of the Navy to the standard which was deemed at that time proper.

I say again I am not surprised that these young gentlemen feel that they ought to be restored. Their expectations in life have been to some extent cut off. At least the ambition which they entertained has been diverted into another channel. But I am not sure that a benefit was not conferred upon them. I am not sure but what it will prove to the advantage of every one of these young men that they were discharged or dismissed from the naval service. For one I do not believe that that path to fortune and to fame is the best for the young men of this country. I believe that civil pursuits are the pursuits to which the ambition of young men ought to be directed, not to naval and military pursuits.

However, we can not restore these young men without encumbering the Navy with a number of officers whom the Navy does not need. It is a practical question and one which we have got to deal with practically. It is not simply to defer to the feelings of the young men who would like to get back, but we are to see what the service of the country requires; and in that aspect of the case I can not see that the services of these young men are required in the Navy.

Therefore, I shall be compelled for one to vote against the bill, believing that the best interests of the country will be served by its defeat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER.] The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11 of the amendment, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert:

Upon passing such examination as shall be fixed by the regulation of the Navy Department.

So as to read:

And those cadets who have been honorably discharged under the provisions of the aforesaid act may, upon application to the Secretary of the Navy within sixty days after the passage of this act, upon passing such examination as shall be fixed by the regulation of the Navy Department, be restored to the service and take their places on the Naval Register in the same manner as if said act had not been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I supposed the yeas and nays had been ordered and were pending upon my amendment as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was changed after the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I supposed the vote was to be taken by yeas and nays after the amendment I had offered was changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would have been done if the amendment had not been modified.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If it is not too late, I desire to call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of the misunderstanding, the Chair will ask if there is a second to the demand for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. RANSOM (when Mr. MILLER'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and my colleage [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If any Senators are present who have not voted, and have a right to vote, they had better cast their votes in order to secure a quorum.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Having the right to vote in order to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. FAIR. As I am at liberty to vote to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Coke,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Cullom,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Fair,	Payne,	Teller,
Call,	Hale,	Plumb,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—15.

Bowen,	Dawes,	Harrison,	Walthall,
Brown,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Whitthorne,
Butler,	Evarts,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cameron,	Harris,	Spooner,

ABSENT—37.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Ransom,
Blair,	Gray,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Camden,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hearst,	Miller,	Stanford,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vance,
Conger,	Jones of Arkansas,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Voorhees.
Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,
George,	Kenna,	Pike,
Gibson,	McMillan,	Platt,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. After the word "further," in line 18 of section 1, I move to strike out the words:

That this act shall not apply to those cadets who failed to pass the physical examination at the time of graduation.

And to insert:

That no graduate shall be entitled to restoration until he shall have, subsequent to the passage of this act, passed a physical examination before a board of naval medical officers.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask that the amendment be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert:

That that part of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1882, limiting the number of graduates of the Naval Academy to be retained in the service each year shall not apply to those cadets who had entered the Naval Academy prior to the passage of said act; and those cadets who have been honorably discharged under the provisions of the aforesaid act may, upon making application to the Secretary of the Navy within sixty days after the passage of this act, upon passing such examination as shall be fixed by the regulations of the Navy Department, be restored to the service and take their places on the Naval Register in the same manner as if said act had not been passed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to make any change in the assignments made under the provisions of the act approved August 5, 1882, of graduates of the Naval Academy to the line and to the staff and Marine Corps: And provided further, That no graduate shall be entitled to restoration until he shall have, subsequent to the passage of this act, passed a physical examination before a board of naval medical officers.

SEC. 2. That officers restored under the provisions of this act shall not be entitled to receive pay for the period intervening between the date of their discharge under the act of August 5, 1882, and their restoration as herein provided for, but in all other respects they shall be considered as having been continuously in the naval service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] as amended by the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. HALE. Which is now the main bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the main bill. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired generally upon all political questions with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I do not understand that this is a political question, and I shall assume to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. PLUMB (when Mr. INGALLS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. INGALLS] is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I should vote "yea" if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], with whom I am paired, were here.

Mr. HAWLEY (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLATT] is out of town, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] has been transferred to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bowen,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Walthall,
Brown,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Whitthorne.
Butler,	Evarts,	Payne,

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the original bill. If there be no amendments proposed as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. When the bill is reported to the Senate I shall propose the amendment I offered to the substitute, limiting it to the classes of 1881 and 1882, and I shall also move to insert the examination required.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have not prepared the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator that I do not think he would care to offer the amendment to the bill now before the Senate, because this is a bill that nobody is for. This is the original bill as introduced and sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Nobody was for that bill. Then it was amended, and half the committee reported the substitute which has been in controversy and which has just been voted down. The Senator from New Jersey does not want to offer his amendment to this bill. I think myself there is not a Senator here who would vote for the present bill. It is only technically before the Senate, as it was the original bill sent to the committee, but the test vote was on the amendment which was voted on, which was the bill itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the bill on the table. That will be the shortest way to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ELLEN CORCORAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces that the Calendar is in order under the rule adopted yesterday.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to take up——

Mr. HARRIS. The regular order.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish only to reconsider a vote so as to change the number of a regiment in a pension bill which was passed. It is a House bill, in which there was an error. I asked yesterday to have the bill returned to the Senate, and it has been returned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin desires to make a formal amendment to a bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran."

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I move to change the number of the regiment to the sixty-first instead of the fiftieth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "the," it is proposed to strike out "Fiftieth" and insert "Sixty-first;" so as to read:

Late chaplain of the Sixty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HARRISON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TRUSTEES OF ISAAC R. TRIMBLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar will now be proceeded with according to the rule adopted yesterday.

The bill (S. 1388) for the relief of the trustees of Isaac R. Trimble was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report on the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who reported the bill, is not present, that if there is any desire to discuss it and inquire into it it had better be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

JOHN FRASER.

Mr. HOAR. The chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. MORRILL] this morning reported the bill (H. R. 1982) for the relief of John Fraser and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to. The Committee on Claims have reported an original Senate bill on the same subject, so that it is unnecessary to have the House bill committed to them. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the consideration of the House bill and that it be placed on the Calendar, so that when the Senate bill is reached in its order the House bill may be called up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the consideration of the bill indicated, and it will be placed on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

FLORIDA INDIAN WAR CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 1729) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the State of Florida, on the allowance made by the Secretary of War under joint resolution of Congress approved March 3, 1881, and reported by him to Congress May 22, 1882, $92,648.09, in full settlement for Indian wars from 1855 to 1861. But there shall be delivered to the State all bonds and coupons of the State now held by the trustee of the Indian trust fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that reported as an original bill? I notice from the report that Senate bill 1293, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, was recommended to be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This was reported as an original bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Not as an amendment to the other bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that as it was recommended in the report that Senate bill 1293 be indefinitely postponed, that action be taken. Perhaps it has already been done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That action was taken at the time.

Mr. CALL subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the vote which was taken a few minutes ago by which Senate bill 1729, to reimburse the State of Florida for expenditures in suppressing Indian hostilities, was passed may be reconsidered. The bill was passed without my observation, and it was my intention to offer an amendment to the bill. I ask that the vote by which the bill was passed may be reconsidered, and that the bill retain its place on the Calendar.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

FORT MARION, FLORIDA.

The bill (S. 457) for the repair of Fort Marion, at Saint Augustine, Fla., and the inclosure of the grounds attached to said fort, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 7, after the words "in charge of," to strike out the words "the city authorities of Saint Augustine and," and in line 8, after the word "officer," to strike out the words "of said fort" and insert "at Saint Augustine;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the repair of Fort Marion, at Saint Augustine, Fla., and for the inclosure of the grounds attached to the fort as a park or place of public resort, the said park or grounds to be in charge of the commanding officer at Saint Augustine.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YELLOW-FEVER COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1730) providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the truth of alleged discoveries of the specific cause of yellow fever, and of a method of preventing that disease by inoculation, and to obtain all information possible as to the cause and prevention of that disease.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a very important commission, and I hope it will be a valuable one. I move in line 3 of the first section to insert after the word "authorized" the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" that is to say, that the commission shall be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It is an important commission.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think there can be any objection to that amendment.

Mr. EUSTIS. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I presumed there would be no objection, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 3, after the word "authorized," it is proposed to insert the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" so as to read:

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a commission, which shall proceed to Mexico, and, if necessary, to the Central American states, Havana, and Brazil, and there make a careful and complete investigation of, and report, after thorough examination, the methods of inoculation pursued and their effectiveness in protecting against yellow fever, together with all other information relative to that disease which may be discovered by experiment or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. HAWLEY. I intended to suggest that we might as well omit the preamble. It is purely an argument for the passage of the bill and in the nature of a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out the preamble to the bill.

Mr. EUSTIS. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the preamble will be stricken out.

LIEUT. D. PRATT MANNIX.

The joint resolution (S. R. 50) authorizing Lieut. D. Pratt Mannix, of the United States Marine Corps, to accept the decoration of the third class of the Double Dragon tendered to him by the Emperor of China on account of distinguished services rendered the empire as torpedo instructor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, March 3, 1886:

This is an application made to the State Department by Mr. E. J. Smithers, chargé d'affaires ad interim at Pekin, informing the State Department that Li Hung Chang, viceroy of China, has informed him that his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of China has conferred upon Lieut. D. Pratt Mannix, of the United States Marine Corps, the decoration of the third class of the Double Dragon, on account of distinguished services rendered by him to China as torpedo instructor. The viceroy states that he displayed the utmost ability, and that all the soldiers under his tuition have become proficient, which has been a service of great satisfaction to the viceroy.

As this was a service rendered the Emperor of China by a citizen of the United States, which was eminently satisfactory to his majesty, and as the Secretary of State of the United States joins in the recommendation that he be permitted to accept the decoration tendered by the emperor, your committee report the accompanying joint resolution, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have been opposed in the Committee on Foreign Relations to all these bills, with here and there a very rare exception in some act of extreme gallantry and heroism, or something of that kind. I think in a Republic like ours, if an officer of the United States is willing to be detailed, and almost all of them wish to be, in order to see foreign countries or to do something, receiving full pay and emoluments all the time from the proper Departments, to agree that he may receive decorations and titles is injurious to our republican public interest.

I was against this bill in the committee and I am against it now, and having said that I am done.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not share the fears of the Senator from Vermont. This officer, if I may use the term, was borrowed from the United States Government for three or four years to give instructions to Chinese employés and officers of the army and navy of China in the construction and management of torpedoes. The service was exceedingly satisfactory. On the close of his term the government there chose to say "thank you" in the form they have of doing such things. I do not think there is any danger that it will injure the patriotism of Captain Mannix or of the service in general. It is a mere courtesy. It is unusual of course in our management of business, but one to which they are accustomed.

Mr. BROWN. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that these decorations are probably too often conferred for trivial reasons, and the Committee on Foreign Relations have reported against one of them occasionally. At this session I recollect we have postponed indefinitely more than one bill of that character; but I believe the committee were very nearly unanimous in this case. My friend from Vermont was opposed to it, but the committee notwithstanding his objection reported the joint resolution favorably, as the officer rendered important service to China in torpedo instruction and she thought proper to recognize his services by conferring the third class of the Double Dragon decoration upon him.

While I am not well enough versed in Chinese literature to know what was the origin of the degree, I think it is a very honorable one and only conferred upon those who have rendered distinguished services to the empire. I think, under the circumstances, we ought to pass the joint resolution and permit Lieutenant Mannix to accept the decoration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a division on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, a year or two ago the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and myself had the temerity to oppose a bill of this kind, by which we both got pretty severely criticised in a New York city paper.

In my judgment all this legislation is radically wrong. I believe it has the effect of lessening the respect which the officers of the country have for republican institutions and republican simplicity and of engendering a spirit of aristocracy and love of a monarchical form of government.

I never want to see an American officer with one of these double dragons, or a single dragon, or any other sort of a dragon on him. If he has the plain, simple uniform of his country and goes everywhere in republican simplicity, whether at home or in foreign lands, he is a better officer of this Government in my judgment than if decorated with every order that every government of Europe could put upon him.

I do not believe in this character of legislation. I would rejoice to see less of display and of foreign manners, and more of the republican simplicity of our fathers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I ask for a division simply. I do not want to take time with the yeas and nays. I merely want to get the actual sense of the Senate.

There were, on a division—ayes 13, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall be required to have the yeas and nays to get a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr FRYE] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—17.

So the joint resolution was rejected.

WILLIAM SCHUCHARDT.

The bill (S. 1444) for the relief of William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico, $750, in full compensation for his services in obtaining testimony for the use of the United States and Mexican Claims Commission appointed under the convention of July 4, 1868, with Mexico.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BROWN March 3, 1886, from the Committee on Foreign Relations:

This is a claim presented in behalf of William Schuchardt, United States commercial agent at Piedras Negras, Mexico, for the sum of $750, which he claims as compensation for services in obtaining testimony for the use of the United States and Mexican Claims Commission appointed under the convention of July 4, 1860.

It was approved by the Secretary of State in 1880, and again by Mr. Frelinghuysen in 1882, as a just claim. A favorable report was made on it in the House of Representatives in the Forty-fifth Congress by Mr. Bridges, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and in the Forty-sixth Congress a similar report was made by Mr. Cox, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and in the Forty-sixth Congress a favorable report was made by Mr. Johnson, from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and the bill has passed in both Houses, but at different sessions.

Your committee report back the bill favorably.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSIT OF SAVINGS OF SEAMEN.

The bill (S. 1417) to provide for the deposit of the savings of seamen of the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any enlisted man or appointed petty officer of the Navy may deposit his savings, in sums not less than $5, with the paymaster upon whose books his account is borne; and he shall be furnished with a deposit-book, in which the paymaster shall note, over his signature, the amount, date, and place of such deposit. The money so deposited shall be accounted for in the same manner as other public funds, and shall pass to the credit of the appropriation for "Pay of the Navy," and shall not be subject to forfeiture by sentence of court-martial, but shall be forfeited by desertion, and shall not be permitted to be paid until after final payment on discharge, or to the heirs or representatives of a deceased sailor, and shall be exempt from liability for the sailor's debts; but the Government shall be liable for the amount deposited to the person so depositing the same.

Section 2 provides that for any sums not less than $50 so deposited for the period of six months, or longer, the sailor, on his final discharge, shall be paid interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

By section 3 it is provided that the system of deposits herein established shall be carried into execution under such regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a good bill, I think.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY HOME FOR DISCHARGED SEAMEN.

The bill (S. 1527) to provide a temporary home for certain persons discharged from the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to permit any person receiving the honorable discharge authorized by section 1429 of the Revised Statutes to elect a home on board of any of the United States receiving ships, during any portion of three months granted by law as the limit of time within which to receive the pecuniary benefit of such discharge, the men so choosing a home to be entitled to one ration per day for their keeping while furnished with such home, but not to pay, other than that authorized by section 1573 of the Revised Statutes of the United States upon re-enlistment; and the persons so furnished with a home shall be amenable to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy or other competent authority.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report in that case or some explanation of the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is a public bill and speaks for itself, and so I drew no report. I will explain it.

Under the present law, the sections referred to here, if a sailor, an enlisted man, has served for three years consecutively and desires to re-enlist he is allowed three months' time off the ship. That is the policy of the present law to encourage continuous enlistments. This simply provides that during those three months if the sailor, instead of going into the cities and ports and spending his money, chooses to go on board the receiving ship he shall be permitted to do that. It makes no new establishment, no new ship, but simply provides, in encouragement of this continuous re-enlistment, that he shall be taken on board a receiving ship. It is to give him a place to sleep, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, and one ration a day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIRED-LIST FOR SEAMEN AND PETTY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 1591) to amend an act entited "An act to authorize a retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward," approved February 14, 1885, so that the same shall apply to the United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act approved February, 14, 1885, by inserting, after the words "or both," the words "or has served thirty years in the Navy, either as an enlisted man or as an appointed petty officer, or both," and by inserting, after the word "rank," the words "or rating;" so that the act shall read, when amended, as follows:

That when an enlisted man has served as such thirty years in the United States Army or Marine Corps, either as a private or as a non-commissioned officer, or both, or has served thirty years in the Navy, either as an enlisted man or as an appointed petty officer, or both, he shall, by making application to the President, be placed on the retired-list hereby created, with the rank or rating held by him at the date of retirement; and he shall thereafter receive 75 per centum of the pay and allowances of the rank or rating upon which he was retired.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought there not to be in that case—I thought there was in the other case—a provision that they shall not draw a pension? I think an amendment ought to be added there to cover both classes. I move to insert:

And shall not while so borne on said retired-list draw or receive any pension.

Mr. HALE. There is no provision of that kind in the bill for the Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. This will make it apply to both. I thought it was in the Army bill, but this amendment will make it apply to both. This bill is an amendment of the law, and changes the whole section so as to make it include both. By putting in what I suggest we shall cover both classes.

Mr. HALE. My only question is how would the Senator have it apply, that while upon the retired-list the man should not draw a pension or while drawing a pension he should not be upon the retired-list?

Mr. COCKRELL. While upon the retired-list he shall not draw a pension.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that. Let the Senator frame that amendment and add it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add to the bill:

But while so borne upon such retired-list shall not draw or receive a pension.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator would leave both the soldier and sailor free to elect?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

But while so borne upon such retired-list shall not draw or receive a pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to amend the title by adding "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend the title by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to.

MOBILE MARINE DOCK COMPANY.

The bill (S. 300) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company was announced as next in order.

The Committee on Claims reported an amendment, in line 6, after the word "appropriated," to strike out $101,938.81 and insert $86,202.65; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Mobile Marine Dock Company, or to its authorized agent or attorney, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $86,202.65, in full payment for the use and occupation of and damages to property taken of said company from the 16th day of April to the 15th day of November, 1865, inclusive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a long report. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ALLOWANCES TO POSTMASTERS.

The bill (H. R. 4415) to make the allowances for clerk-hire to postmasters of the first and second class post-offices cover the cost of clerical labor in the money-order business, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That involves consideration that will take a long time to go into.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

FEE ON DOMESTIC MONEY-ORDERS.

The bill (H. R. 4177) to reduce the fee on domestic money-orders for sums not exceeding $5 was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN FRASER.

The bill (S. 1771) for the relief of John Fraser was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that instead of that bill the House bill of the same title may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the bill (H. R. 1982) for the relief of John Fraser be considered instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to the same rule.

Mr. HOAR. Of course subject to the same rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1982) for the relief of John Fraser. It appropriates $914.20 for payment in full to John Fraser for services as acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during 1878 and 1879.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me to say a word before the report is read.

Mr. Fraser was an architect in the employment of the Government under a particular contract. When the difficulty in the Supervising Architect's office came up some years ago he was called to the office of Supervising Architect and held it temporarily. He performed in addition to that the duties of the contract which he was engaged in, the superintendence of a particular public building, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He was a man of great personal worth and integrity, and standing very high in his profession. The Committee on Claims thought that under the peculiar circumstances, as Mr. Fraser had performed the duties of both places, sat up far into the night, and performed them with great acceptability, we ought to make an exception to our usual rule and pay him for both services. On full debate the Senate disagreed with the committee, and decided to pay Mr. Fraser only the difference between the pay of Supervising Architect and the pay for superintending the building of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and on that, if I recollect aright, the Senate passed this bill without dissent.

We considered ourselves instructed by the action of the Senate, and this year we have reported a bill only to pay Mr. Fraser the difference. Now the report may be read, if it is desired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that this bill as now framed does not come in contravention of the standing rule about paying double salaries.

Mr. HOAR. No. Mr. Fraser, if this bill passes, will simply get pay as Supervising Architect during the time he did the whole of the duties of that office, and he will not get any additional pay, although during that time he superintended the building of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. PLUMB. The passage of this bill will be followed by bringing up a class of cases long since disposed of and equally meritorious, those of officers of the Army who had commands beyond their rank, captains of companies who commanded regiments and colonels who commanded brigades.

Mr. HOAR. My friend will allow me to interrupt him one moment right there. This man was not an officer at all. He merely had a contract with the Government to supervise the construction of a building, to do a certain professional duty. Then having that contract with the Government he was appointed to and held a certain office. He does not get the pay of more than one office. He is not an inferior officer getting the pay for a superior office. It is simply as if the Senator from Kansas supposing he was here arguing an important law case, and there was a vacancy for the time being in the office of Attorney-General, and he was retained to act as Attorney-General for the Department, this would give him under the circumstances the Attorney-General's salary for those two months, and not give him the previous compensation which he had stipulated for arguing the law case. That is the point.

Mr. PLUMB. Just what I was saying exactly; the captains acted as colonels, the colonels acted as brigadiers-general and sometimes as majors-general, and that ran through all the military performances. While it is true that these men in the Army have had the pay of the rank in which they were commissioned and mustered, they have not had the pay for the rank in which they actually served and did duty.

I object to this bill. We employ for the Government more than a hundred thousand people, first and last. It occasionally happens that by reason of an emergency of some kind an employé in one Department is required to move himself up another step, or to perform some duty which in an emergency is cast upon him which if some other person were present would be performed by that other person. If Mr. Fraser is to be paid, we are committed to the payment of every person in the Government service who goes away from the desk to which he considers himself appointed or out of the particular track in which he ordinarily moves. No private individual does that. The book-keeper of Mr. Stewart's establishment if he were alive to-day may be the man to-morrow on the responsibility of whose judgment great financial transactions are to be carried on in the absence of Mr. Stewart. He does not come into possession of Mr. Stewart's share of the profits or of any enlarged salary by reason of the fact that at this particular moment something was cast upon him that was not in strict contemplation at the time he was employed.

If we do this we commit ourselves, as I stated before, to a principle which running through all our service will compel us to be constantly readjusting the salaries of all our employés. When a man is employed by the Government he does not agree to do a particular thing; but he agrees to give his time to the Government, so many hours as the Government may require.

Mr. HOAR. This was one of a dozen things he was doing every day, as if he was building a house for you and one for me, and holding no office at all. This bill only proposes to pay him the salary of an office while he held it, deducting what he received for the other service.

Mr. PLUMB. Does it propose to take something away from him? Then I think upon the whole the Senator does not understand the bill. I am in favor of it if that is the case, not because I want to do any injustice to Mr. Fraser, but I should like to see an example of that kind set. I should be glad to see some one case come before Congress where actually an official proposed to have his emoluments cut off. I think it would be one of the most wholesome examples that could be set. But instead of that it is not to cut down his salary, but increase his salary.

Did Mr. Fraser give any more of his time by reason of this employment than he had given before? Was he actually performing any more service to the Government than he had contracted to perform when he entered that employment? I think he did not. Questions of this kind are constantly arising. Mr. Lamar is away to-day and some one who sits in his office to-day as stenographer, or clerk, or assistant secretary moves his chair up near Mr. Lamar's desk, and for the time being performs the duty of Secretary of the Interior, signing papers as such. Is he to receive Mr. Lamar's salary? Is Mr. Lamont, who has been doing some important duties in behalf of the President, to receive Mr. Cleveland's salary during Mr. Cleveland's very proper and necessary absence at Deer Park?

I think on the whole we ought to hesitate a long time before committing ourselves to this principle which I believe the Senate has voted down many and many a time.

Mr. HOAR. It has voted it up.

Mr. PLUMB. It may have voted it up sometimes, but I think it has done it, if it has at all, without understanding what it was doing.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, both in the Committees on Appropriations of which I have served with the Senator from Kansas, and in the Finance Committee we have had a number of cases where persons occupying inferior positions are called upon to perform the duties of their superiors and have set up claims for the pay of their superiors because they have performed those duties. I believe on both committees we have resisted that class of claims. Three or four cases of that sort are pending before the Committee on Finance now, and the chairman submitted several of them to me as a subcommittee to examine. In making that examination I looked over a great many cases, and among others my attention was called to this case. I do not believe that this is a case that comes within the principle suggested by the Senator from Kansas, but that it is a fair case to increase the compensation of the man without establishing any bad precedent. This man was employed for a particular service, to be paid for that service as the superintendent of a building, not in the regular employ of the Government, and while he was so employed——

Mr. HOAR. He was a private architect.

Mr. BECK. A private architect eminently qualified for the position; and as a vacancy for the time being occurred in the office of Supervising Architect of the Treasury, no better man being found and perhaps none as good, this man was asked to do the duties of that place in addition to what he was doing. Being a private citizen employed for a special purpose, this simply pays nine hundred and odd dollars more for that extra work that he did, and really saved the Government from the temporary employment of a man who would have obtained full pay for doing the duties of Supervising Architect while he was drawing his pay for the other work which did not occupy his full time.

When I came to examine this case I was satisfied that the bill ought to pass and would set no bad precedent anywhere.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate bill on the same subject, the bill (S. 1771) for the relief of John Fraser, is indefinitely postponed.

OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The bill (S. 64) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect the public works against trespass or injury was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. That bill may lead to some discussion, and the substance of it is already embodied in the House river and harbor bill. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that that retain its place on the Calendar for consideration when reached at some future day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JAPANESE WORKS OF ART.

The bill (S. 1772) providing for the purchase of the Capron collection of Japanese works of art, now on temporary deposit in the National Museum, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is not here. If any controversy is to arise, perhaps it had better go over.

Mr. HARRIS. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All cases that are passed over, under the special rule adopted yesterday, retain their place.

CHARLES A. SIBLEY.

The bill (S. 918) for the relief of Charles A. Sibley, guardian of Lloyd M. Stevens, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported adversely.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

Mr. HOAR. Why not dispose of it by unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. Some one may want to debate it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been indefinitely postponed and a motion to reconsider entered.

CAPT. NICHOLAS J. BIGLEY.

The bill (S. 42) for the relief of Capt. Nicholas J. Bigley was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will pass over.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not dispose of it?

Mr. ALLISON. I object to this because I find it was postponed indefinitely and then reconsidered. I presume some Senator who is absent may want to call it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BRITISH BARK VISCOUNT CANNING.

The bill (S. 330) to remit the forfeiture of the British bark Viscount Canning, and to refund the proceeds of the sale thereof to her owners, Edward D. Morris and C. R. Morris, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over.

Mr. PUGH. That claim has the unanimous indorsement of the Judiciary Committee. The facts are set forth in the report, and it is approved by Attorney-General Devens and by Secretary Folger. I do not think there can be any objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I will say to the Senator who objected that this is a case of dealing with a citizen of a foreign government where we are bound in a certain sense to afford the relief. Under the circumstances I hope the Senator will at least hear the report.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my objection.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, which was, in line 13, after the word "sum," to insert the words "not exceeding the amount covered into the Treasury;" so that the bill as amended will read:

That in the matter of the forfeiture of the British bark Viscount Canning, on which she was condemned and sold by order of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama, at Mobile, in June, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to proceed on the petition for remission in the same manner and with the same effect as if the sum arising from the sale of said vessel had not been covered into the Treasury; and if said forfeiture, or any part thereof, shall be remitted, the Secretary of the Treasury may pay out of the Treasury such sum, not exceeding the amount covered into the Treasury, as he may remit to the parties entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees was announced as next in order.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, which was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "said," to strike out the words "grantees of the said city and county" and to insert "city and county, and the grantees of the same," so that the section will read:

SEC. 2. That upon the approval of this act the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall issue a patent for said land to said city and county, and said patent shall inure to said city and county, and the grantees of the same, and their said successors in interest, as a confirmation of said city and county's grants of said land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN WAISHKEY, JR.

The bill (S. 1793) to confirm the homestead entry of John Waishkey, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUGH FOSTER.

The bill (S. 1664) to confirm the homestead entry of Hugh Foster was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRIAL OF CAUSES IN SUPREME COURT.

The bill (S. 439) to disqualify justices of the Supreme Court from sitting in the trial of causes which have been previously heard before them in their circuits or otherwise, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is adversely reported.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CINNABAR AND CLARK'S FORK RAILROAD.

The bill (S. 980) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LETTERS PATENT FOR DESIGNS.

The bill (S. 1813) to amend the law relating to patents, trade-marks, and copyright was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that hereafter, during the term of letters patent for a design, it shall be unlawful for any person other than the owner of the letters patent, without the license of such owner, to apply the design secured by such letters patent, or any colorable imitation thereof, to any article of manufacture for the purpose of sale, or to sell or expose for sale any article of manufacture to which such design or colorable imitation shall, without the license of the owner, have been applied, knowing that the same has been so applied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. KINKEAD AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1353) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claim of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred on the said Court of Claims to hear the said claims of John H. Kinkead and Samuel Sussman and Charles O. Wood upon the evidence already filed and such additional legal evidence as may be hereafter presented on either side; and said court shall award to said parties a fair and reasonable rent for the use of the said buildings for the time the same have been occupied by the United States, and also a suitable indemnity for said buildings themselves; and the receipt of such rent and indemnity shall thereafter bar any further claim by said parties for the use of said buildings or for the value thereof, and before receiving the same, all of said parties shall execute a release to the United States for all right, title, and interest whatever in and to the said property; and any defense, set-off, or counter-claim may be pleaded by the United States as defendants, as in cases within the general jurisdiction of the court, and either party shall have the same right of appeal as in such cases: Provided, That the liability of the United States shall be the same as if the acts done by the officers of the Government in the premises had been done by the agent of a public corporation.

Mr. LOGAN. From what committee does the bill come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. LOGAN. It ought to be amended so as to give the court power to decide the question. As it is it requires judgment to be given for these parties. I asked from what committee it came, because I know it has been before the Military Committee at former sessions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the consideration of the bill objected to?

Mr. LOGAN. I shall not object if the committee reporting the bill will amend so that the court shall have a chance to decide the question of liability.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have objected to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection the bill goes over.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I beg pardon of the Chair. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Missouri to allow the case not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not. It retains its place.

RICHARD H. PORTER AND JAMES PORTER.

The bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Iowa to withdraw that objection a moment at least that I may make a statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. TELLER. This is a case of very great hardship. These men have been asking at the hands of Congress relief, and I think the Senate has passed the bill at least three times. They are growing old. The property was taken in 1857. I hope the Senator will let the bill go through.

Mr. ALLISON. I have withdrawn my objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that the Third Auditor of the Treasury, on the 10th of May, 1861, made the following award:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE, May 10, 1861.

In pursuance of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1849, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States," and of an opinion of the Attorney-General dated April 25, 1861, it is adjudged that there is due from the United States to James and Richard H. Porter, for property impressed by order of Colonel Johnston, then in command of the United States forces en route for Utah, and lost by them in the fall of 1857, while transporting goods from Atchison, Kansas Territory, to Camp Scott, Utah Territory, and while said property was in the service aforesaid, as follows: One hundred and seventy-five head of cattle at $55 per head, $9,350; 5 horses and mules, at $150 each, $750; and this sum, $10,100, is payable to the claimants present.

R. J. ATKINSON.
Third Auditor.

Which award was, in 1864, reconsidered by the Third Auditor and modified so as to allow only $750 instead of $10,100; that there appears to have been no fraud or improper conduct charged against the Porters; and that Attorney-General Bates, in 1861, declared the first award made in accordance with the law, the Solicitor of the Treasury having twice since approved the award.

The bill therefore directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Richard H. Porter and James Porter $10,100, less the $750 paid them under the second award, in full for all claims for damages or compensation for property impressed by order of Colonel Johnston, in command of the United States troops en route for Utah in 1857.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest whether the preamble may not be omitted. The amount is stated in the body of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know. That was the way it passed the Senate several times. I am not on the committee that reported it. The interest I have taken in it is because I reported it years ago and because I know one of these claimants, who is in great destitution and want.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the preamble.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to striking out the preamble—any way so that these men may get their money.

The preamble was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Secretary to read the bill again, so that the Senate may see that it distinctly names the sum to be provided for, the word "said," before "sum," being stricken out in lines 4 and 5.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest, after the word "them," in line 6, to strike out the words "under the second award;" and before the word "paid" to insert the word "heretofore;" so as to read:

Less the sum of $750 heretofore paid them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be made by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

ACCOUNTS WITH RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. BROWN. Yesterday when the bill (S. 511) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies was under consideration objection was made to certain language contained in the report of the Committee on Railroads that the committee in making out the report had used language disagreeable to a portion of the committee; and the report at my instance was withdrawn by the unanimous consent of the Senate. It has since been amended and agreed to by the committee, and I am instructed to submit it to the Senate and ask that it be printed and that the amended report be filed in lieu of the report which was withdrawn yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that course will be pursued.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest that the original report on the files be suppressed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been already ordered to be suppressed.

Mr. BROWN. This being in lieu of the other, of course the other is withdrawn.

H. J. T. MOSS.

The bill (H. R. 2463) for the relief of H. J. T. Moss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Postmaster-General to adjust and settle the claim of H. J. T. Moss, postmaster at Saint Jo, Tex., for money-order funds lost in transit, notwithstanding the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster-General to adjust certain claims of postmasters for loss by burglary, fire, or other unavoidable casualty," approved March 17, 1882.

Mr. PLUMB. Does that state the amount?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me to be an indefinite bill.

Mr. MAXEY. Four hundred and eighty-two dollars is the amount. The bill is to adjust the account. That was the amount lost. It simply authorizes the Postmaster-General to adjust that account notwithstanding the act approved March 17, 1882. That act required the report of the loss to be made within three months. This gentleman shows conclusively the cause why the report was not made within three months, and the loss is admitted by the Department.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it prospective in its operation? Does it apply to this man as long as he lives? I think he has the right to the benefit of this provision indefinitely as often as he happens to be robbed.

Mr. MAXEY. Oh, no.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the bill be read again.

The bill was read.

Mr. LOGAN. Lost when? Does the report say when it was lost?

Mr. McMILLAN. Is there a report?

Mr. MAXEY. There is.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let that be read.

Mr. COKE. This bill simply relieves a party from the operation of the limitation of three months. That is all there is about it.

Mr. LOGAN. When did the loss occur?

Mr. MAXEY. The report will show conclusively if read.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not call for the reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREST RESERVATION AT CLARK'S FORK.

The bill (S. 581) to establish a forest reservation on the headwaters of the Missouri River and the headwaters of Clark's Fork of the Columbia River was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

GEORGE W. SAULPAW.

The bill (S. 474) for the relief of George W. Saulpaw was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to George W. Saulpaw $7,000, in full compensation for his steamer Alfred Robb, taken by the United States for the use of the Government during the late rebellion.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us have the report in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HOAR March 10, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 474) for the relief of George W. Saulpaw, have considered the same and respectfully report:

We adopt the report made June 12, 1878, by Mr. HOAR, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The petitioner has always been a loyal citizen. Before the war he was a member of a firm who were engaged in building railroad bridges. They built bridges over the Cumberland River at Nashville and Clarksburg, and also some other small bridges. They built a bridge over the Tennessee at Danville, which was completed in November, 1861. Said firm purchased a steamboat called the Alfred Robb in March, 1860, for the transportation of stone, timber, &c., needed in their bridge-building, for which they paid $8,500. November 21, 1861, said firm dissolved, and petitioner became sole owner of said boat, for which he allowed $5,500. The rebels had then blockaded the Tennessee River near Fort Henry, below said bridge, and the petitioner was unable to get the boat out of the river. He thereupon began running her as a packet from Danville to Eastport, Miss., a distance of about 175 miles, and continued this employment until about February 13, 1862, when the rebels seized her near Eastport by force, and used her as a transport until April 10, 1862. The boat was then lying in Little Bear Creek, near Tuscumbia, Ala. The rebel General Walker sent orders to have said boat burned and destroyed, as he was about to evacuate the country.

The pilot and clerk, who were loyal men, and who had remained on board while she was in the rebel service, succeeded in evading the order and in running the boat down the stream, where she was concealed at a place called Coyer's Island, until April 22, 1862, when she was taken by the Union gunboat Tyler. She was then taken to Cairo, Ill., and converted into a gunboat, used as such during the war, and was retained by the United States till the summer of 1865, when she was sold at Mound City at the great auction of the Mississippi gunboat squadron, and brought $9,200. The pilot entered into the Government service, and so remained through the war. The clerk and pilot were in the petitioner's employ, he designing to retain them, and paying them, deeming that his boat would be safer and his chance of securing it better by so doing. They intended to save and secure the boat for the owner, and had actually and completely delivered her from rebel control when she was taken by the United States gunboat. The circumstances of the delivery of the boat are proved by the testimony of the pilot, whose character and trustworthiness are established by the evidence of several United States officers with whom he served. The date and circumstances of the capture fully appear in the report of Lieutenant Gwin, commanding the gunboat Tyler, dated April 23, 1862, and forwarded to the Navy Department by Flag-Officer Foote, by report dated April 26, 1862.

The boat was of 80 tons, in good running order, as appears by the report of the officer who captured her. She is fully described in the other evidence, and we think was worth nearly her original cost when appropriated by the United States. Upon these facts we hold that all the owner's original right and title to the boat had revested in him, wholly purged from any effects of the impressment by the rebels. The owner's agents in his behalf and by his authority had completed the escape of the boat from rebel hands. This is not the case of a recapture by our Government of property of its loyal citizens which the enemy had taken and put to a military use. It is the case of the full and complete retaking of the property by the owner himself. It is as if the crew of a merchantman captured by the enemy at sea had risen in the night and retaken the vessel. In such case we conceive the title of the owner would completely revest.

The foregoing narrative, so far as relates to the time, place, and circumstances of the taking by the United States of the Alfred Robb, is as well established by public official records as any fact can be. Yet, on the 15th of July, 1862, an information was filed in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, on the relation of George D. Wise, as informer, against the steamer Alfred Robb, her engines, furniture, tackle, &c., setting forth "that on the 15th day of July A. D. 1862, there was seized on the Mississippi River, below Cairo, and brought into this district, the steamer Alfred Robb, her engines, furniture, tackle, &c. Said seizure was made by George D. Wise. Said seizure was made for the reason that said property was being used by and with the knowledge and consent of the owner, in aiding the present rebellion, contrary to the act of August 6, 1861, and being so used it has become forfeited." Every one of these allegations was false. The steamer was not seized July 15, 1862, but passed into the possession of the United States in April. She was not seized on the Mississippi River, and was not seized for the reason that she was being used by the knowledge or consent of the owner in aiding the rebellion. Wise never seized her at all. On this libel notice was ordered by publication fourteen days in a newspaper printed in Springfield, and by posting of a copy of the monition near the place of trial.

Wise was a captain and assistant quartermaster with the United States gunboat flotilla, to which the Alfred Robb then belonged.

A writ of attachment and monition issued, directing the marshal to attach the property, &c., and to detain the same until the further order of the court. The marshal made return as follows:

I hereby certify that on the 7th day of August, A. D. 1862, I have by virtue of this writ attached the within-named steamer Alfred Robb, and made due proclamation.

D. L. PHILLIPS,
United States Marshal.
By ISAAC KEYS,
Deputy.

To which is annexed the following receipt:

OFFICE OF GUNBOAT FLOTILLA,
Cairo, Ill., August 7, 1862.

Received from D. L. Phillips, United States marshal, southern district of Illinois, one steamboat called Alfred Robb, which has this day been attached by the said David L. Phillips as aforesaid; the said boat being now in the service of the United States as a gunboat on the Western waters, which I agree to deliver as hereafter may be decreed by the judge of the district court aforesaid, if in my power, and consistent with my duty to the United States.

GEO. D. WISE,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster.

Upon these proceedings a decree of sale was made, and the boat bid off by George D. Wise aforesaid, in behalf of the United States, for the sum of $4,000, of which the court decreed $12.50 to the clerk, $96.82 to the marshal, $100 to the district attorney, and ordered the balance, $3,790.38, to be divided between the United States and George D. Wise, "the informer herein."

The owner of the boat had no notice or knowledge of the proceedings.

There was no actual proof of the allegations of the information, the record alleging a proclamation for all persons interested to appear, a default, and an order "that the allegations of the libel be taken as true against said property."

A request was made, at the close of the war, to the Quartermaster-General for return of the Alfred Robb, and for such information as the records of the Department might show as to the history of these transactions. The following answer was returned:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C. September 18, 1865.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 20th and 31st of July last, with reference to the claim of G. W. Saulpaw, esq., for the return to him of the steamer Alfred Robb, captured by the western gunboat flotilla in February, 1862, in the Tennessee River, you are respectfully informed that this boat was sold by the United States marshal under a decree of confiscation, having been captured while being used for insurrectionary purposes, and was purchased by the Navy Department, and placed under the charge of Capt. George D. Wise, the then quartermaster in charge of the property and accounts of the flotilla, and by him transferred to the Navy Department, October 1, 1862. You are informed that it is beyond the power of this Department to assist you in the settlement of this account.

You are respectfully referred to D. L. Phillips, esq., United States marshal, Springfield, Ill., for any further information concerning this vessel.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. D. WISE,
Colonel in Charge Third D. W.

R. J. ATKINSON, Esq., Washington, D. C.

The following letter, of which the original is before the committee, is found in the files of that office, which is evidently a first draught of an answer to the foregoing request, from which we think the nature of the transaction can be fairly inferred:

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1865.

SIR: Your letter of July 20, transmitting evidence, &c., pertaining to claim of G. W. Saulpaw, esq., of Tennessee, for compensation for the steamboat Alfred Robb has been referred to me by the Quartermaster-General.

You are respectfully informed that the case of the steamer Alfred Robb was duly adjudicated before the United States court for the southern district of Illinois, at Springfield, some time in the year 1863. Due notice was given at that time to claimants to show why she should not be condemned, having been used for insurrectionary purposes, but if any evidence was presented it was not considered satisfactory to the court, as she was condemned and sold by the United States marshal, and, after deducting expenses, one-half ($1,895.19) went to the informer and the other half to the United States Treasury.

Please read the above and see if it is correct.

How did the Robb come into our possession after the capture? Who paid for her at the sale of confiscation? I do not remember how I came into possession of the $1,895.19 given me by the marshal. Whom did he get it from? as although I bid the boat in, yet I do not remember to have paid any money for her, and yet received a portion of the sale. If she was sold by the United States marshal and I bid for her, I should have paid the amount and taken a voucher from the marshal. Can you explain all this, for it has entirely passed out of my mind, and I have no time to hunt up papers, and Mr. Blount is away.

Yours,

GEO. D. WISE.

R. J. ATKINSON, esq., Washington, D. C.

It is evident that the decree of the district court was entirely without foundation in fact, and the findings upon which it proceeded were erroneous. Under these circumstances if the decree were technically valid until reversed by proper proceeding, and constituted a binding judgment in rem, we do not think the Government ought to avail itself of such a technical defense to avoid repayment to the true owner of the proceeds of his property now in the Treasury.

But the decree is upon its face wholly erroneous and void.

It is settled that under the act of August 6, 1861, as well as under the later similar acts, there must have been an actual seizure of the property by the marshal to make a decree of confiscation valid. "The marshal must take the property under his actual custody and control." (Pelham vs. Way, 15 Wallace, 202; Brown vs. Kennedy, ib., 591; Miller vs. United States, 11 ib., 268; Pelham vs. Rose, 9 ib., 103.) The property must remain in the custody of the marshal, so that he can deliver it to the highest bidder, if it be purchased under the decree of sale. But the return itself sufficiently shows that no such seizure was or could have been made. The gunboat was in the actual service of the United States, in command of an officer who retained possession. The receipt of Captain Wise, made part of the return, declares that "the boat is now in the service of the United States as a gunboat on the Western waters, which I agree to deliver as hereafter may be decreed by the judge of the district court aforesaid, if in my power and consistent with my duty to the United States." It clearly was not in his power, or consistent with his duty, to make such delivery. This consent or receipt no more transferred the possession of the gunboat from the United States to the marshal than would a like document executed by the cook or cabin-boy.

We think, therefore, the owner's title to his boat has never been lawfully divested.

The boat cost the firm, of which petitioner was a member, $8,500 in March, 1860. In November, 1861, she was valued at $5,500 in the division of the property of the company. She sold for $9,200 in 1865, at a large and extensively advertised auction sale of such property. But it does not appear that the alterations made in her by the United States may not have enhanced her value. The sale to Wise for $4,000 was nothing more than mere form, even if a form were really gone through. The claimant is not entitled to interest nor to compensation for the use of his boat, under the rules uniformly applied to like cases. Under all the circumstances we recommend the payment to the claimant of the sum of $7,000, and report a bill to that effect.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to inquire how the committee arrived at the conclusion that all the statements made by the captors were untrue?

Mr. HOAR. That case has been explained to the Senate three times.

Mr. LOGAN. Never when I was present.

Mr. HOAR. And every time on explanation the Senate has unanimously passed the bill; but the case certainly demands explanation.

The facts in regard to this man's ownership, his loyalty, his own recapture of his boat, and that it fully passed into the United States authorities on the reports of the United States naval officers are as well settled as the fact that I am a Senator of the United States. There is no question about them in the mind of anybody. Then the boat being with the gunboat flotilla on the Mississippi River, a man whose name is given here filed in the southern district of Illinois a libel for the condemnation of the boat. The law required in order that the court should have jurisdiction that the marshal should take possession—a well-settled principle of the admiralty law. The marshal reports:

I have by virtue of this writ attached the within-named steamer Alfred Robb. She was then down on the Mississippi River, the marshal being in the southern district of Illinois, and here is the receipt:

OFFICE OF GUNBOAT FLOTILLA, Cairo, Ill., August 7, 1862.

Received from D. L. Phillips, United States marshal, southern district of Illinois, one steamboat called Alfred Robb, which has this day been attached by the said David L. Phillips as aforesaid; the said boat being now in the service of the United States as a gunboat on the Western waters, which I agree to deliver as hereafter may be decreed by the judge of the district court aforesaid, if in my power, and consistent with my duty to the United States.

GEO. D. WISE,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster.

That gentleman could no more have delivered that boat, it was no more consistent with his duty to the United States, and it was no more a taking possession of the boat by the marshal, than if that document had been executed by the cook or the cabin-boy. It was an absolutely untrue certificate. Then the marshal goes on to say that the money was paid over, and there is an application made here to Mr. Wise and to the Quartermaster-General in which they say they can not tell anything about it.

Mr. LOGAN. Who was the quartermaster?

Mr. HOAR. The quartermaster was George D. Wise. I should like to read two or three sentences. After reciting all these documents the committee say:

It is evident that the decree of the district court was entirely without foundation in fact, and the findings upon which it proceeded were erroneous. Under these circumstances, if the decree were technically valid until reversed by proper proceeding, and constituted a binding judgment in rem, we do not think the Government ought to avail itself of such a technical defense to avoid repayment to the true owner of the proceeds of his property now in the Treasury.

But the decree is upon its face wholly erroneous and void.

It is settled that under the act of August 6, 1861, as well as under the later similar acts, there must have been an actual seizure of the property by the marshal to make a decree of confiscation valid. "The marshal must take the property under his actual custody and control." (Pelham vs. Way, 15 Wallace, 202; Brown vs. Kennedy, ib., 591; Miller vs. United States, 11 ib., 268; Pelham vs. Rose, 9 ib., 103.) The property must remain in the custody of the marshal, so that he can deliver it to the highest bidder, if it be purchased under the decree of sale.

But the return itself sufficiently shows that no such seizure was or could have been made. The gunboat was in the actual service of the United States, in command of an officer who retained possession. The receipt of Captain Wise, made part of the return, declares that "the boat is now in the service of the United States as a gunboat on the Western waters, which I agree to deliver as hereafter may be decreed by the judge of the district court aforesaid, if in my power and consistent with my duty to the United States." It clearly was not in his power or consistent with his duty to make such delivery. This consent or receipt no more transferred the possession of the gunboat from the United States to the marshal than would a like document executed by the cook or cabin-boy.

Mr. DAWES. Will my colleague state how it came into the possession of the United States if it had been recaptured and was in possession of the owner?

Mr. HOAR. It was recaptured by the owner himself. It was in the first place in a strip of the Tennessee River which was occupied by our people, the rebels, however, occupying the country on each side of the river, as the Senate well recollects. Then when the rebels took possession of that part of the river they got possession of this boat. Then our forces moved upon the Tennessee River, and an order was sent down to burn this boat. The pilot, who had kept on board at the desire of the owner for the sake of watching his chance to retake the vessel, and who afterward entered into the service of the United States and continued during the war, and whose character is highly certified to by several United States officers——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to remind the Senator that his five minutes have expired.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to finish this sentence.

He then ran the boat away, concealed her under an island, and delivered her to the owner, and our forces found her there in the possession of the owner when they took her. Then the United States took possession of her and impressed her.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to discuss this, but here is the error, I think, that my friend from Massachusetts has fallen into. The bill undertakes to dispute a record of a United States court in the first place. I know personally something about this. I know both Mr. Phillips and Mr. Wise. Mr. Phillips seized this vessel at Cairo and turned her over again. She was in possession of Mr. Wise, and he turned her over again with his receipt to show a delivery on the judgment of the court. Is not that the fact about it?

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what your report says.

Mr. HOAR. There was no seizure at all by the marshal.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose he did not go and take her by the bow and tie her up and seize her in that sense, but the writ shows the facts. He took the receipt of Wise for the delivery of the boat on the decree of the court. That is the fact about it.

I will state that at the capture of Fort Henry that boat was in the possession of the rebels on the Tennessee River, and this pilot ran her away from our forces and not from the rebel forces. When you say that these things are untrue there is no justification for attacking the records. There were three boats there, and they were all run away from our forces and not from the rebels. I happen to know personally some things about the occurrences there, because Captain Worthington, a man who was a captain in our Army, owned one of these boats himself, and it was seized by the rebels there. Captain Worthington's boat was captured by a company in my command.

Mr. HOAR. This boat has nothing to do with that.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us see. His boat was run away with in the same way precisely from the rebels. He recaptured it, and I introduced a bill myself in relation to that case. It went to the Committee on Claims of the Senate and they refused to pay Captain Worthington for his boat because it was in rebel possession when we captured her. This boat is to be paid for and his is not to be. He was a young man from Illinois who owned one of the three boats, and Congress refuses to pay him, and now we are to vote to pay this man.

I do not know anything about this man's loyalty; but when these things come up that I personally know something about, I must say they do astound me. I am just as well satisfied that this man is not entitled to one cent as that I am not entitled to a cent for that boat. I was at Fort Henry, know all about the capture, know about these boats escaping not from the rebels but from the Union forces to keep them from taking possession. For this man to come now and plead loyalty and claim payment for his boat is an outrage on the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. I do object and shall continue to object.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is clearly out of order. He has once spoken.

Mr. HOAR. I am not out of order in asking unanimous consent; and I do not think any single Senator's sense of fair play would permit the declaration just announced to be made, followed by an objection, without giving me an opportunity to say a word.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not object to the Senator being heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks consent of the Senate to make remarks on this subject. If there is no objection the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed. The Chair is only seeking to enforce the rule.

Mr. HOAR. I have no fault to find with the Chair.

Mr. President, I think the honorable Senator from Illinois has confounded this case with some other, and that he is not speaking to the facts in this case, because, as I say, these facts are in the reports of the Union officers made at the time and made to the Department in regard to the history of this vessel and the character of the pilot and the circumstances of her rescue. They are all found in the Department. I am perfectly willing to say that if the Senator from Illinois, whose sense of justice we all understand, will take the papers which accompany this report and will read them all, if then he does not come in and declare that he is in error in the statement he has made, I am perfectly willing for one to abandon the case.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall certainly, if I find that I am wrong, so state.

Mr. HOAR. I know that there is no Senator who would do it quicker than the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. But in connection with this case the report shows the place where the boat was captured, Tuscumbia, and the fact is that I could not get a claim of the same amount almost to a dollar for a boat that belonged to a captain who then served in the Union Army whose boat was captured just above Paducah, a short distance off, and run up there above the fort and held and recaptured again——

Mr. HOAR. I never heard of that claim.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that. It has not been before this committee.

Mr. HOAR. Of course if the honorable Senator thought the other one ought to be allowed when the circumstances were the same he will not object to this.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not thought anything about it, because I have not introduced it since the committee reported against it on the ground that the boat was in the service of rebels when we captured it. On that ground they refused the claim, and I have never asked for it since. I was only speaking of the fact that the owner was a loyal man serving in the Union Army and could not get pay for his boat captured at the same time, and it struck me as very strange that this man could get pay for this boat.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to state a single fact?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I know nothing of the service in which this boat had been engaged or the circumstances under which it was seized, but I had various official duties to perform with George W. Saulpaw, as a railroad bridge builder, up to and during the year 1861——

Mr. HOAR. He was a Vermont man.

Mr. HARRIS. From a somewhat intimate and thorough acquaintance with him I simply desire to say that I always understood him in 1861 and afterward to be a thoroughly loyal man. He was a Union man from the beginning to the end of the controversy.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not questioning the loyalty of anybody in connection with this claim; but the rule of law is that if the vessel was in the possession of the rebel forces at the time we captured her the owner is not entitled to pay. That rule was applied to the man that I thought was a loyal man and I want the same rule applied to this man. The fact that he lived in Vermont makes him no better than if he lived in Illinois.

Mr. HOAR. This man captured her himself, but the captain into whose possession she first came——

Mr. LOGAN. No, he did not capture her. He ran her away.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask leave to make this statement: If this man was loyal and sensible, I think he would have got his case before Congress a little sooner, and I think it is very grave ground of suspicion that twenty four years after this occurrence the claim is presented.

Mr. HOAR. The bill has been reported half a dozen times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has gone over under objection. The next bill will be stated.

GREENSBURG LIMESTONE COMPANY AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of the Greensburg Limestone Company and others was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to appeal to the Senators from Kansas and Illinois to take the sense of the Senate on this little claims bill of Saulpaw, which has gone by I know, but I am speaking now in my five minutes to the next bill, not to violate any rule. I will state, as I ought to do to inform the Senate that I am under this bias, that the nephew of this old gentleman, who is eighty years old, is a constituent of mine.

When five or six years ago he brought me these papers I felt, as I do about a great many such claims when there has been a Southern claims commission, &c., that there could not be anything in it. He asked me to read the papers through, the certificates of the Army officers and Navy officers, and so on. I did so, and in spite of my prejudices, allowing for the bias of the nephew of this old gentleman being my constituent, it seemed to me that he had a fair case. And so I presented his papers, and they were sent to the Committee on Claims and considered without any urgency of mine; I never did anything more about it; and they reported in favor of the claim. It passed the Senate, I am sure without dispute or doubt.

Now, I should be glad if these gentlemen would be kind enough to allow the sense of the Senate to be taken upon this little claim, and I say that without reference to whether injustice has been done to the constituent of my friend from Illinois, which certainly would not lead him to be willing to do injustice to somebody else; I know that perfectly well.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Senator from Vermont is the very gentleman who beat my bill. I will say that to him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I think not.

Mr. LOGAN. If you will look back about ten years in the RECORD you will find that to be the case, on the very principle that we recaptured the vessel while she was in the employ of the rebel forces and therefore the owner was not entitled to pay for her. That was the principle, and I look on this as the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have made my appeal. I have nothing more to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of the Greensburg Limestone Company and others is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want the report read in this case, if I can not touch my friend from Illinois on the other case.

Mr. LOGAN. I know something about that.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HOAR March 10, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 756) entitled "A bill for the relief of the Greensburgh Limestone Company and others," report that the same ought not to pass. But they believe that the claimants are entitled to relief, and further report a new bill and recommend its passage.

The claimants made a contract with the United States, dated August 21, 1874, by which they agreed to furnish certain "dimension rubble-stone" for the custom-house and post-office building at Cincinnati.

The contract contained the following stipulation:

"This contract shall be valid and binding when approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and not otherwise, and no departure from its conditions shall be made without his written consent."

The contract was duly approved by the Secretary. When it came to be executed the superintendent required the contractors to deliver "dimension stone." They protested that "dimension stone" was another and different thing from the "dimension rubble-stone" named in the contract, and notified the superintendent that it was much more expensive and valuable, and that they should demand from the United States the excess of the value of the stone so required and delivered. They thereupon submitted to the order of the superintendent and proceeded to deliver dimension stone as required.

Thereafter they filed a petition in the Court of Claims for extra compensation. But on examining the decision of the Supreme Court in Hawkins's case, 7 Otto, and of the Court of Claims in Brandon vs. United States, 16 Court of Claims, 402, they discontinued their petition and apply to Congress for relief.

They say that mechanics making such a contract are in the power of the superintendent, who represents to them the Government of the United States, and who can compel them to submit to his terms or take the alternative of a costly, perhaps ruinous, lawsuit. They cite several legislative precedents where Congress has given relief in similar cases.

But the committee think these precedents ought not to be followed. Whatever may be the hardship to the contractor, we can not adopt a principle which would put it in the power of the superintendent, a local and subordinate officer, not only to alter a contract made by the Secretary of the Treasury, which expressly stipulates that no departure from its terms shall be allowed without his written consent, but also to increase the expense of a public work whose cost is expressly limited by an act of Congress. We therefore advise the rejection of the original bill, which rests upon the ground above stated.

But we think the claimants ought to be permitted to recover what the departure from the original contract has actually saved to the United States in the completion of the work, not exceeding the original contract price. The claimants allege that they can show that the United States saved a large sum in the cost of cutting, fitting, handling, and laying the stone, which otherwise they would have been compelled to expend in completing the work according to the original design. We can see no reason in justice or public policy why this should not be paid them. If they had contracted to build an outer wall of wood and been compelled to build one of brick or stone, while they could not justly claim either the increased cost of value of brick or stone over wood, they might at least be allowed the saving to the United States of the sum which would have been required to pay for painting the wall of wood, and which a brick wall would not need. We therefore report the accompanying bill. Under its provisions the claimants, to recover anything, must establish to the satisfaction of the court:

(1) That they were compelled to furnish a more costly and valuable material than their contract required.

(2) That this change in the contract saved to the United States in the completion of the building an amount equal to that to be recovered.

(3) That the entire cost of the building is not thereby increased.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that bill read again.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Greensburgh Limestone Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, William W. Lowe, Daniel W. Levett, and Oliver M. Thompson, partners doing business under the firm-name of W. W. Lowe & Co., and John L. Scanlon, being the parties of the second part named in a certain contract in behalf of the United States made by Samuel Hannaford, such contract being one for the delivery of certain stone as therein described for the erection of a custom-house and post-office at Cincinnati, Ohio, and bearing date the 21st day of August, 1874, or the survivors of such parties, are hereby authorized and empowered to bring in the Court of Claims a suit against the Government of the United States, upon the said contract, for the damages by them sustained, in regard to the premises in said contract provided for, by reason of their being required, in the execution of such contract, by the superintendent and others in charge of the construction of the said building, to deliver stone, as is alleged, of sizes and character different from those called for in the said contract, or different from those which they were entitled to deliver thereunder. And the said court is hereby authorized and directed to take jurisdiction in said case, and to render a judgment therein for whatever sum, if anything, shall be shown by the evidence to have been the increased cost, damage, and expense to which the said claimants were subjected by reason of their being required, as aforesaid, to deliver stone different from that provided for in said contract, if the court shall hold that such requirement was not authorized thereby: Provided, That such recovery shall in no case be in excess of what shall appear from the said evidence to have been saved to the Government in avoiding loss or waste of stone, in the expense of cutting and fitting the said stone for the structure or structures for which they were designed, as provided in said contract, and in handling and setting such stone in said structure or structures; the claimants in no case to recover for anything that they shall not show to have been done by them not required by the contract, nor for anything that they shall not show to have been saved to the United States in the cost of the building by reason of the departure therefrom. And in the said action each party to the same shall be entitled to give in evidence all competent and relevant testimony already heretofore taken and filed in said court in a certain action, numbered 11972, heretofore prosecuted on said contract, and also all other competent and relevant testimony which either party may offer in the case. And each party to the said cause shall be entitled to take an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who I believe reported this bill, if these people are entitled contract-wise to compensation, why they can not go to the Court of Claims without the passage of this bill?

Mr. HOAR. They are not entitled contract-wise, I suppose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then on what ground does the claim stand?

Mr. HOAR. I will state it, if the Senator will pardon me.

These men agreed to furnish a certain portion of the work on this public building, stone of a certain character, dimension rubble-stone. They were required by the architect on the ground to furnish dimension stone, which is another thing altogether, and which saves a great deal of laying and trimming and handling. He claimed that they were lawfully required to do it; they claimed that they were unlawfully required. He was the Government officer on the ground and these mechanics urged that the Unied States ought to be bound by his action; but the committee say, no, we can not allow a local officer to alter a contract made under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, which stipulates that it shall not be altered without his written consent, and especially one which might bring the expense beyond the amount stipulated in the act of Congress.

So we think it is clear that although they submitted to that demand, it does not give them any legal claim upon Congress; and now they come in and say, "We have no legal claim in consequence of having done more than our contract required, yet we saved money to the United States in the entire cost of the work; it ought at least give us that difference." For instance, suppose I have agreed to furnish the wall of a certain building, and my contract only requires me to furnish a wall of wood, which is to be painted under another contract by the United States; I have nothing to do with that. The local superintendents says: "You must make a brick wall;" and I submit and make a brick wall. It costs me a great deal more, and I come to Congress to be paid the excess, and Congress says, "No; this local superintendent had no business to put a construction on your contract." But I say, "At least, as I saved to the Government the cost of painting by giving you brick or stone instead of wood, you have got a better building; let me have so much." And that is the ground on which the committee proceed. We say these men may go into the Court of Claims, and if they can show, first, that what they did was what they were not required to do; next, that it made a saving to the United States in another part of the work; and, third, that the whole work does not exceed the original contract price, you may have what you show you saved to the United States. That is the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why did they yield to the demand of this superintendent or architect if they were not bound to do so by their contract?

Mr. HOAR. They were stone-cutters in a distant part of the country who made a contract with the United States to furnish dimension rubble stone, and when an architect who is employed to superintend and accept and approve comes in and says, "You have got to do so and so under your contract," these men submit. They brought their suit in the Court of Claims; Judge Shellabarger was their counsel. After the suit had started he became satisfied it could not be maintained on the original contract, and he came to Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the short of it is that we are to relieve these mechanics on the ground that they did not understand their rights?

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all, Mr. President. They protested at the time that they were not bound to do this, as I understand.

Mr. HOAR. What would a stone-cutter in Vermont or in California or in this very case in Indiana do who has contracted with the Government, has got his work out and all ready, and the local architect says, "You must do a certain kind of work for the Government under this contract?" He says, "No, I do not think so; I do not understand it so at all." The architect adheres. If the mechanic resists, he is probably to be ruined. He has got his obligations to his subcontractors and to his workmen, which are lost. He has got to pursue the Government by possibly a distant lawsuit in a court of justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont have spoken more than five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not spoken one minute on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator spoke on another bill, counting it on this bill expressly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I give up.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me it is an absolutely just cause.

Mr. HARRISON. I think Senators who have listened to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts must see that instead of being a liberal bill this is really a hard bill on the contractors; that is, it requires them to submit to pretty severe terms in order to get a just compensation from the Government for the work they did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand the ground on which this bill stands, I confess.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL CADETS.

Mr. HALE. I ask to take up a Senate bill that was laid on the table this morning for the purpose of moving that it be indefinitely postponed. I intended to make that motion at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," be taken up with a view of indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that and let us have a short executive session.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. Not now.

Mr. ALLISON. My motion is that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 9, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 8, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Rev. S. W. HADDOWAY, of Washington, D. C.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

On motion of Mr. MCMILLIN, by unanimous consent the reading of that portion of the Journal relating to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions was dispensed with.

The remainder of the Journal was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] on Friday evening last there was a brief discussion between him and myself, in which a remark of mine has by an error of some kind been placed in another part of the RECORD, and in an entirely different context from that to which it properly belongs, and I ask to have the correction made, which I shall now point out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that such a correction, referring to a proceeding other than that of yesterday, would properly come up after the Chair has complied with the rule and laid before the House certain messages from the Senate and executive and other communications. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter to make this correction.

MISSOURI PACIFIC RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPH LINE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers at the conference during the day.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

Senate bills of the following titles were severally read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed, namely:

A bill (S. 158) granting a pension to Mary A. Mykins;

A bill (S. 1459) granting an increase of pension to Walter A. Donaldson;

A bill (S. 1614) granting a pension to Sarah C. Wright;

A bill (S. 1897) granting a pension to Alexander Trimble;

Senate amendments to House bill No. 524, granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross, were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 7, 1886.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request will be complied with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GEORGE K. SHEARMAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Third Auditor in relation to the claim of George K. Shearman, of Harrison County, Indiana, and recommending an amendatory act to the act approved May 17, 1886, providing for the payment of said claim; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF CHARGES D'AFFAIRES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State recommending an urgent appropriation of $8,100 to supply a deficiency in appropriation for salaries of charges d'affaires ad interim for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN FINN VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of order and findings of fact in the case of John Finn against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LAWLER, for to-day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DOCKERY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CURTIN, for two days.

To Mr. HANBACK, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEPHENSON, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. FARQUHAR, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSON, for four days.

To Mr. TUCKER, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DINGLEY, indefinitely.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. LYMAN, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of J. S. Herwick, House bill 6009.

TITLE TO LANDS IN SAGINAW BAY.

On motion of Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1571) to quiet and confirm the title to certain lands in Saginaw Bay, in the State of Michigan, and the same was recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CORRECTION.

Mr. HENLEY. In the debate on the bill to repeal certain public land laws on yesterday I stated I was in favor of the repeal of the pre-emption law. I am made to say this morning in the RECORD I was in favor of the pre-emption law being retained.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. (See page 5372.)

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. CULLOM a member of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes, and to authorize and empower the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to pass such general laws, in the place of Mr. PLATT, excused.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at San Luis Obispo; and

A bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 244) for the relief of Mary F. Potts;

A bill (S. 511) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies;

A bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation all property held by trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2474) for the relief of James S. Clark & Co.

C. A. ARTHUR AND W. H. ROBERTSON.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow Chester A. Arthur, collector of the district of the city of New York, in settlement of his accounts, a credit for the sum of $8,436.88, the same being for the sum of $5,000 in gold coin, a sum now charged to the said Collector Arthur, which was stolen or disappeared from the office of the then cashier of the custom-house at New York, January 21, 1876, without the default or negligence of said collector, or of the late William D. Robinson, cashier; and for the sum of $3,436.88, the amount of an apparent discrepancy in account of proceeds of sales of unclaimed goods, which is unexplained by reason of the death of Samuel G. Ogden, late auditor of the custom-house, who had charge of such account, and personally received and disbursed all moneys thereon during his whole term of service of thirty-six years. And that the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow William H. Robertson, collector of the district of the city of New York, in settlement of his account, a credit for the sum of $13,094, the same being a sum now charged to the said Collector Robertson, which was stolen or disappeared from the office of the cashier of the custom-house at New York, without the default or negligence of said collector, or of the late James Hoffman, cashier.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to know whether there has been a favorable report upon this subject by a committee of the House?

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is a unanimous report in its favor from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear the report read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The report is somewhat long.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I should like to have it read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me to explain perhaps it will answer the purpose he has in view. The report is quite long and contains several documents.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I simply wish to know the facts of the case.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will state the facts if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. NEECE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri), was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred bill S. 2053, having considered the same, submits the following report:

This is a bill for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York. The Senate report on this bill meets the approval of this committee and is adopted by this committee. The report is as follows, namely:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York, beg leave to submit the following report:

Chester A. Arthur was appointed collector of customs at New York city December 1, 1871. At the close of business on the 21st day of January, 1876, the cashier, William D. Robinson, reported the coin $5,000 short. Skilled detectives were immediately employed, but up to this time no one has advanced even a theory which was considered worthy of attention, and it was, and will probably ever be, a mystery, in regard to which nothing was ever settled except the bare fact that a $5,000 coin certificate had either disappeared, or by some unaccountable error had never been received.

Your committee would further state that on assuming the collectorship Chester A. Arthur found in office Samuel G. Ogden as auditor of the custom-house. Auditor Ogden had been appointed June 1, 1841, and had faithfully discharged the trusts imposed upon him, the accounts as rendered by him having been closed as correct by the Treasury Department, under the bonds of collectors Curtis, Van Ness, Lawrence, Maxwell, Bronson, Redfield, Schell, Barney, Draper, King, Smythe, Grinnell, and Murphy; that said Ogden died September 10, 1877, Chester A. Arthur being still collector. During the thirty-six years the said Ogden was auditor he correctly accounted for $3,300,000,000 collected, and $180,000,000 disbursed; that the said auditor himself in person during his official life received and disbursed moneys from the proceeds of sales of unclaimed merchandise and prepared the accounts thereof; that some time after his death an apparent discrepancy was discovered in such accounts, for Chester A. Arthur's term of office, of $3,436.88, according to the adjustment by the accounting officers at Washington. This apparent discrepancy was not discovered till after the death of Auditor Ogden, and it is just to presume that it could be made satisfactorily to disappear but for his death. Your committee further state that all of the accounts of the said Chester A. Arthur for his two terms of office, nearly seven years, have, except as to the items herein mentioned, been adjusted and closed on the books of the Treasury Department, covering a total of receipts of $861,131,198, and of disbursements of $39,912,213.

A bill granting Collector Arthur the relief now asked for passed the Senate during the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, but failed to receive action in the House. Since that time up to the present Congress the said Chester A. Arthur has been Vice-President and afterward President of the United States, and for evident reasons did not petition Congress for his relief.

While Hon. JOHN SHERMAN was Secretary of the Treasury, he wrote a letter exonerating Collector Arthur from all personal responsibility and expressing the opinion that he ought to be relieved by Congress.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that the proper accounting officers allow Chester A. Arthur in the settlement of his accounts a credit of the sum named in the bill, $8,436.88.

This committee would further state that William H. Robertson was appointed collector of customs for the district of the city of New York on the 25th day of July, 1881. The facts in this case are as follows:

The said Collector Robertson in assuming his office retained, by reason of the great trusts confided to them, the persons who had been appointed by his predecessors in the cashier's department. During his term of office certain shortages in his cash receipts were discovered, the last one on the 12th day of March, 1883, amounting in all to $13,094; that the secret-service officers of the Government, in conjunction with Pinkerton's detective force, inquired into the matter at length, but without fixing the responsibility for the loss upon any particular person or persons. Collector Robertson in his memorial to Congress states that, acting upon his own impressions, he dismissed from service one of his attachés, who subsequently died; that another attaché resigned and afterward committed suicide; that the cashier, James Hoffman, who had been in office many years, was an upright and honest man, and his death, in the opinion of Collector Robertson, was hastened by the loss occurring in his department and his inability to locate the responsibility.

During the administration of the office by Collector Robertson the receipts by him amounted to $349,729,636.59, and the disbursements to $35,404,265.19, and it does not appear that there is any discrepancy in any of his accounts, except the shortage heretofore mentioned.

In view of these circumstances, your committee recommends that the proper accounting officers allow William H. Robertson a credit for the sum named in the bill, $13,094.

It therefore seems to this committee that both of the petitioners for whom relief is asked in this bill were the victims of fraud or errors against which they could not reasonably have protected themselves, and therefore this bill (S. 2053) is reported back favorably.

The following are a few cases of similar legislation:

The Forty-seventh Congress authorized and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to credit Francis E. Spinner, late Treasurer of the United States, with the sum of $47,097.65, amount of deficiency of June 2, 1875; he was also authorized and directed to pay to the Treasurer of the United States the sum of $650.61 to reimburse said Treasurer for an amount appearing on his books as a deficiency.

In the Forty-seventh Congress the Senate passed a bill granting relief to Thomas B. Shannon, collector of customs at San Francisco, Cal. He had signed a check for $4,777.84, to which the countersignature of the naval officer had been forged, and had paid over the amount of the forged check to the assistant treasurer.

In the same Congress the Senate passed a bill granting relief to Frank Soulé, collector of internal revenue for the first district of California, releasing him and his sureties from liability on account of certain defalcations.

The following officers have been relieved from the default of employés by acts of Congress, viz: William J. Patton, collector internal revenue, Arkansas, $36,081.88; E. B. Pendleton, collector internal revenue, Virginia, $26,476.28; J. L. Thomas, jr., collector customs, Baltimore, $27,540.25, and many others which it is unnecessary to mention.

The following letters in these cases are submitted herewith:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1878.

SIR: From a recent report to this office of Messrs. Graves, McMillan, and Hale, it appears, among other things, that a shortage occurred in your collections in January, 1876, of $5,000, coin, which has not yet been made up. From the statements made by yourself and the cashier of your office the Department has no doubt but that the loss occurred through no negligence on your part, and if I had the power to relieve you of your legal liability for the amount I would gladly do so, but the matter having been brought officially to my attention I am compelled to ask you to make up the amount at as early a day as practicable, or to seek relief from Congress, which will probably consider your request favorably, and pending such action the Department will for a reasonable time suspend its demand for payment.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

C. A. ARTHUR, Esq.,
Collector of Customs, New York City.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY,
Collector's Office, February 20, 1885.

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 18th instant (a. m.), in relation to the balance for which I appear on the books of the Department to be accountable to the United States, under my official bond, dated July 25, 1881.

The amount represents various sums which disappeared in a most unaccountable and mysterious manner from the cashier's department of this office at various times during the period of my incumbency, prior to March 12, 1883, when the last loss occurred.

By authority of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, Pinkerton's detectives and a special detective of the Department made an exhaustive examination of the matter, and everything that ingenuity of man could suggest to discover the thief was resorted to, but without any absolutely conclusive result.

On one occasion, however, it was proven that the deficiency was in funds to which only three persons had access during the day. One of them, and only one, whom I found in office, was known to have been present on every occasion when money had disappeared, not only during my term but during the terms in office of two of my predecessors.

Even circumstantial evidence failed to go any further, but upon this coincidence the clerk was dismissed, and the result would seem to justify such action.

He died soon afterwards, under the most painful circumstances, in the asylum for the insane.

Feeling that I have not, in this connection at least, failed in the "true and faithful" discharge of the duties of my office, it is my intention, at the expiration of my term of service, to apply to Congress to relieve me from liability for this loss, for which I think I ought not to be held responsible.

Very respectfully,

W. H. ROBERTSON,
Collector.

H. C. JOHNSON, Esq.,
Commissioner of Customs, Washington, D. C.

PINKERTON'S DETECTIVE AGENCY, New York, May 4, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Relative to the investigation made by this agency into the loss in your cashier's department of $9,000 in gold certificates on March 12, 1883, permit me to say:

The idea of an honest error in this case does not appear tenable, and, I think, may be dismissed. There is nothing in the detail of the work of that day, or in the "tickets" which were checked by the "counters" and receivers at the "paper-crib," to indicate that a $1,000 gold certificate could have been mistaken for one of $10,000, nor is it at all probable that both a "counter" and a receiver made separately the same error in counting.

I therefore decide that a larceny of the amount was committed by some one who had access to the money after it reached the "paper-crib."

In company with Mr. Drummond, of the secret service division, my general superintendent, Mr. Bangs, and my superintendent, R. A. Pinkerton, made careful and rigid examination of all such persons, and in every instance were impressed with the frankness and truthfulness of the employés, with one exception. The facts developed by these examinations early developed the strong probability that the larceny lay between only two of the men. One of these, Mr. Russell, I think may be entirely exonerated; but as to the other, his manner and statements bristle full of suspicious circumstances, and I understand that the investigations relative to this man, which are still being instituted by Mr. Drummond, add to the suspicions first entertained.

There is as yet no absolute legal proof of his guilt, but my opinion is very decided that he, without collusion with any one, stole the money.

Yours, respectfully,

ALLAN PINKERTON,
By ROBERT A. PINKERTON,
Superintendent.

Hon. WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON,
Collector of the Port of New York.

UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
SECRET SERVICE DIVISION, NEW YORK DISTRICT,
New York, May 6, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I find by an examination of reports in my possession that I met you first about March 27, 1883, regarding the case. That from April 2 to June 30, 1883, I had three men constantly on the case; that from April 10 to May 10, 1883, there were four men on the case; and from July 9 to July 29, 1883, there was one man on the case. These men were all withdrawn for the reason that the Secretary refused to longer pay them. During all this period I gave my personal supervision over all the men.

Very respectfully,

A. L. DRUMMOND.

Hon. WM. H. ROBERTSON,
Katonah, Westchester County, New York.

Mr. Bangs, Mr. Robert Pinkerton, and I did everything that was possible to do in the time we worked to discover the thief, and my four men did the same. We were all morally certain who the thief was, but had no legal proof. Since his dismissal I believe not a dollar has been lost.

A. L. DRUMMOND.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims whether this is a unanimous report of that committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is there anything to show that this money was not embezzled? I have yet to hear any explanation of how it was lost. If it was embezzled, there ought to be no relief. If it was not, it might be proper to grant the relief.

Mr. SPRINGER. As far as the evidence before the committee is concerned, it appears that the money was lost through no fault of the collector in either case.

Mr. McMILLIN. How does that appear when they do not know how it was lost?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does appear from the facts as presented that in any event the collector himself could not have been at fault. The wonder is that in the handling of so many millions of dollars so little disappears mysteriously.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether it appears that any effort was made to fix the liability for this loss.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes. Detectives were employed and other efforts were made to fix the liability, but so far they appear to have been unavailing.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ANNAPOLIS.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 201) and that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows: "An act (S. 201) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Annapolis, Md."

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to call for the regular order.

Mr. COMPTON. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection and allow me to state, as I can within two minutes, the reasons for the passage of this bill at this time.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I shall be obliged to maintain my objection. There are probably forty bills of a similar character and of equal merit in this House in the same position as this one, and I do not see why the gentleman from Maryland should be allowed to get his bill through to the prejudice of all the rest.

Mr. COMPTON. I only ask to be allowed to state the reason why this bill should be passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects to the consideration of the bill, and therefore it is not before the House for debate.

Mr. COMPTON. I understood the gentleman to intimate that he would hear what I had to say about it.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman objects to the consideration of the bill and declines to withdraw his objection.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise, as you are aware, to a question of privilege which I proposed to make yesterday, but consented should go over until to-day in order that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] who is involved in my question might be present. I base my question of privilege upon a conscious, deliberate, persistent, abuse of an order of the House by the Representative from the eighth district of Alabama, and in order that you, Mr. Speaker, may know precisely upon what allegations my claim of privilege rests, I send you a preamble and resolution which I have prepared that they may be now read, and upon which I hope to have a vote of the House after their consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it appears from the publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 6 of a speech of Hon. JOSEPH WHEELER, of Alabama, purporting to have been made on the evenings of May 28 and June 4, by unanimous consent of the House, the House then having under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order of January 15, 1886, that said JOSEPH WHEELER had been guilty of an abuse of the order of the House, inasmuch as no part of said speech had been made in support of, or opposition to, or with reference to any bill granting a pension reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions, or to a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities, which three classes of bills constituted the sole objects that might be considered under the said order of January 15, in pursuance of which the said meetings of May 28 and June 4 had been held: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That as the delivery of said speech and its publication in the RECORD were without sanction of the House and in contravention of its special order, the said speech be expunged from the RECORD, and that the Public Printer be directed to omit it from the permanent RECORD, and be prohibited from issuing any copy or copies thereof in pamphlet or other form from the columns of the daily RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there are several points of order that I desire to reserve on that resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make a point of order upon it now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. It appears that the RECORD itself shows that the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] were made by the unanimous consent of the House at the evening session, that the discussion was participated in by others, and that toward the close of it a member of the House asked and obtained unanimous consent for the prolongation of the discussion. Now I submit that that which was done by the unanimous consent of the House can not be an offense against the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not within the province of the Chair to decide whether the matter in question is or is not an abuse of the orders or rules of the House. It is alleged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to be an abuse of the order of the House, and it is for the House itself to decide whether that allegation is true or not. All the Chair can do is to determine that the charge made and the motion made to expunge the speech from the RECORD, which contains the official proceedings of the House, presents a question which the Chair must entertain as a matter of privilege. It is for the House itself to say whether the charge made is true or not, and whether the speech in question should be expunged from the RECORD or not. The Chair can not decide that question.

Mr. REAGAN. I was proceeding upon the supposition that as the RECORD itself discloses, and is conclusive proof of, the fact I have stated, we need not go further——

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the House. Whenever a motion is made upon the floor of the House to expunge any matter whatever from the RECORD, for any reason whatever, it involves a question which the House, not the Chair, must decide.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the gentleman from Texas has submitted his point of order, I desire to indicate the point of order I intended to raise, that it may be considered. It is, that any exception to the fact that this speech may have been delivered out of order should have been taken at the time of its delivery, and the point not having been taken at that time, the House waived the right to take further notice of it, as appears from the fifth clause of Rule XIV, which says:

But he—

Referring to the member who is charged with having spoken words out of order—shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. That is also a matter for the House to determine when it votes on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPRINGER. The allegation is that this speech was delivered out of order. If so, the fact should have been taken advantage of at the time; but other business having now intervened, the House can not take further notice of the matter.

The SPEAKER. But that is a matter for the consideration of the House in determining what action it will take upon the motion to expunge this speech from the RECORD. It is not a matter which the Chair can decide. The House might determine after consideration that it would expunge from the record of its proceedings matter which it had expressly authorized to be inserted there; and the Chair could not prevent it.

Mr. REAGAN. Allow me to make a statement——

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] beg the question at issue. They assume the whole case.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is it not in order for the affirmative side to be heard?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided the points of order raised by the several gentlemen.

Mr. REAGAN. In view of the proceedings of the House in this matter I desire to submit the point that while any resolution or action of the House is subject to the control of the House and can be expunged by order of the House, yet a different rule applies to debate; and a speech made in the House can not be expunged unless exception is taken to it under the rule referred to by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. That may be so. The House may decide when it comes to a vote on the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it will not expunge this speech from the RECORD for the very reason which the gentleman gives; but the Chair can not decide that matter.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the House is to judge whether this speech is an abuse of the rules of the House, will it not be necessary that the speech be read? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can read his speech in his own time if he so desires when he obtains the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. On the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas, I desire to have read a portion of the RECORD showing——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that point of order. At a later period the gentleman from Tennessee may have the matter read as a part of his remarks. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, if I made myself understood the preamble and resolution are not now under consideration except by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the resolution must be pending, otherwise there is no question before the House.

Mr. KELLEY. Exactly; it is pending, but will come up for a vote I presume after discussion.

The speech in question was made, as its author tells us in the RECORD of last Sunday, on May 28 and June 4, "the House having under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order, by unanimous consent."

I am unwilling, sir, that future readers of the records of this Congress shall by any possibility be able to suspect me of having sat by during what must have involved three hours listening to the slanders——

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman allow me a remark for information?

Mr. KELLEY. The slanders which have been accumulating during twenty-five years, many of which are absolutely putrescent, upon one of the most unselfish patriots by whom the country was ever served, and one of the most beloved friends I have ever known in my long life. I am unwilling, sir, that a paper which records in a feeble and halting way as an apology the assertion that it was in the warmth of indignation that its author had denounced Abraham Lincoln and Edwin M. Stanton as conspirators, and Mr. Stanton as an "arch-conspirator" against the character of particular American citizens, and as having combined with others to thwart the success of the Union arms—I am, I repeat, unwilling, Mr. Speaker, that posterity shall be told through the columns of the official record of the proceedings of this House that the Republican party sat quietly in the hours of approaching midnight to hear these slanders on Lincoln and Stanton poured out by the hour, and that no man, either Republican or Democrat, who had periled his life under the administration of the war power exercised by Lincoln and Stanton for the support of the Union should have risen to say that these slanders which having been consigned years ago to the haunts of treasonable gossip and vile slander, are now offensive to the olfactories of all well-informed Union men of every section of the country.

Sir, we owe something to the illustrious dead, and I do not believe that such scandalous matter as is embodied in these twenty-five columns of Sunday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be sent to posterity with the sanction of this Congress, which if it vindicates its own special order must declare that there was no warrant for uttering the speech and none for declaring in the official record that it was made with the unanimous consent of the House. When was that speech made? On the 28th day of May and the 4th day of June, we are told. Gentlemen, who of all of us who sat in this Hall on those days until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when a recess was taken under a special order of the House, heard the member from the eighth district of Alabama on either day? Did he utter in this Hall by daylight in our hearing the nauseous stuff he has printed? No; and truth would have required him to say "in the evening session, under a special order of the House." That order was made on the 15th day of January last to provide for the consideration of pension bills. Did it authorize legislation on or the discussion of a subject which not only did not profess to relate to pension business or the removal of disabilities, but which was avowedly entered upon because there was no pension business or bill for the removal of disabilities pending, and before a score or two of gentlemen who were present, but who did not constitute the American Congress, and whose delegated powers were limited for the time being by the language of the special order which empowered them to assemble?

Here it is:

January 15, 1886.

Under the head of special orders in the Calendar.

On motion of Mr. MATSON—

"Resolved, That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills granting pensions reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities only, be considered."

Any legislation or discussion beyond the subjects designated was an infraction of the order, and every word of the speech printed in the RECORD is beyond the terms of the order. It is all outside of the limitations imposed upon these evening meetings by the House, which is falsely said to have given unanimous consent to the utterance of these slanders. Slanders upon whom? I ask the gentleman—I must keep myself within parliamentary language—from Alabama to listen to the reply to this question, which he shall hear in a voice coming from the other side of the Silent River, the voice of a patriot who was wearing away his life day by day and hour by hour in the service of his country, for whose destruction the hand of the member from Alabama was raised.

Yes. If he will give me his ear he will learn that so early as May, 1862, Edwin M. Stanton knew that he was assailed and that whether his life should be longer or shorter, he would be survived by jackals, hyenas, and ghouls, who, seeking objects of their hate in the grave, would rehash the false and scandalous stories that were even then giving pain to his family and friends; and, as if gifted with prescience, he at that early day prepared and confided to a friend an overwhelming reply to this unlicensed midnight assault which was to be published by its author as having been made in the House of Congress with its unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker, the paper I am about to read is a letter from one dear friend to another whom I too could call a friend, though I did not love him as I did the subject of these slanders, Edwin M. Stanton.

If the member from Alabama finds himself described in this letter he will remember that I am not its author. In reading it I do but ask that the slandered dead may be heard in his prophetic words in his own defense:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1862.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Yours of the 10th is welcomed as an evidence of the continued regard of one whose esteem I have always been anxious to possess.

I have been very well aware of the calumnies busily circulated against me in New York and elsewhere respecting my relations to General McClellan, but am compelled from public considerations to withhold the proofs that would stamp the falsehood of the accusations and the base motives of the accusers, who belong to two classes.

First. Plunderers who have been driven from the Department when they were gorging millions.

Second. Scheming politicians, whose designs are endangered by an earnest, resolute, and uncompromising prosecution of this war as a war against rebels and traitors.

A brief statement of facts on official record, which I can make to you confidentially, will be sufficient to satisfy yourself that your confidence in me has not been misplaced:

First. When I entered the Cabinet I was and had been for months the sincere and devoted friend of General McClellan, and to support him, and so far as I might aid and assist him in bringing the war to a close, was a chief inducement for me to sacrifice my personal happiness to a sense of public duty. I had studied him earnestly with an anxious desire to discover the military and patriotic virtue that might save the country, and if in any degree disappointed I had hoped on, and waited for time to develop.

I went into the Cabinet about the 20th of January. On the 27th the President made his Order No. 1, requiring the Army of the Potomac to move. It is not necessary, or perhaps proper, to state all the causes which led to that order, but it is enough to know that the Government was on the verge of bankruptcy, and at the rate of expenditure the armies must move or the Government perish. The 22d of February was the day fixed for movement, and when it arrived there was no more sign of movement on the Potomac than there had been for three months before. Many, very many earnest conversations I had held with General McClellan, to impress him with the absolute necessity of active operations or that the Government would fail because of foreign intervention and enormous debt.

Between the 22d of February and the 8th of March the President had again interfered, and a movement on Winchester and to clear the blockade of the Potomac was promised, commenced, and abandoned. The circumstances can not yet be revealed.

On the 8th of March the President again interfered, ordered the Army of the Potomac to be organized into army corps, and that operations should commence.

Two lines of operations were open—one moving directly on the enemy at Manassas and forcing him back on Richmond, beating and destroying him by superior force, and all the time keeping the capital secure by lying between it and the enemy. This was the plan favored by the President. The other plan was to transfer the troops by water to some point on the lower Chesapeake, and thence advance on Richmond. This was General McClellan's plan. The President yielded his own views, although they were supported by some of the best military men in the country, and consented that the general should pursue his own plans. But by a written order he imposed the special condition that the army should not be removed without leaving a sufficient force in and around Washington to make the capital perfectly secure against all danger, and that the force required should be determined by the judgment of all the commanders of the army corps.

In order to enable General McClellan to devote his whole energy to the movement of his own army (which was quite enough to tax the ability of the ablest commander in the world), he was relieved from the charge of the other military departments, it being supposed that the respective commanders were competent to direct the operations in their own departments.

To enable General McClellan to transport his force every means and power of the Government were placed at his disposal and unsparingly used.

When a large part of his force had been transferred to Fortress Monroe, and the whole of it about to go in a few days, information was given to me by various persons that there was great reason to fear that no adequate force had been left to defend the capital in case of sudden attack; that the enemy might detach a large force and seize it at a time when it would be impossible for General McClellan to render any assistance. Serious alarm was expressed by many persons and many warnings given me which I could not neglect. I ordered a report of the force left to defend Washington. It was reported by the commander to be less than twenty thousand raw recruits, with not a single organized brigade. A dash like that made a short time before at Winchester would at any time take the capital of the nation. The report of the force left to defend Washington and the order of the President were referred to Major-General Hitchcock and Adjutant-General Thomas, to report—

First. Whether the President's orders had been complied with;

Second. Whether the force left to defend the city of Washington was sufficient.

They reported in the negative on both points. These reports were submitted to the President, who also consulted General Totten, General Taylor, General Meigs, and General Ripley. They agreed in the opinion that the capital was not safe. The President then by written order directed me to retain one of the army corps for the defense of Washington, either Sumner's or McDowell's; as part of Sumner's corps had already embarked, I directed McDowell to remain with his command. And the reason was approved by the President.

Down to this period there had never been a shadow of difference between General McClellan and myself. It is true that I thought his plan of operations objectionable, as the most expensive, the most hazardous, and most protracted that could have been chosen; but I was not a military man, and while he was in command I would not interfere with his plan, and gave him every aid to execute it. But when the case had assumed the form it had done by his disregard of the President's orders and by leaving the capital exposed to seizure by the enemy, I was bound to act, even if I had not been required by the specific written order of the President.

Will any man question that such was my duty?

When this order was communicated to General McClellan it of course provoked his wrath, and the wrath of his friends was directed upon me because I was the agent of its execution.

If the force had gone forward as he had designed I believe that Washington would this day be in the hands of the rebels.

Down to this point, moreover, there had never been the slightest difference between the President and myself. But the entreaties of General McClellan induced the President to modify his orders to the extent that Franklin's division (being part of McDowell's corps, that had been retained) were detached and sent forward by boat to McClellan.

This was against my judgment, because I thought the whole force of McDowell should be kept together and sent forward by land on the shortest route to Richmond, thus aiding McClellan, and at the same time covering and protecting Washington by keeping between it and the enemy. In this opinion Major-General Hitchcock, General Meigs, and Adjutant-General Thomas agreed; but the President was so anxious that General McClellan should have no cause of complaint, that he ordered the force to be sent by water, although that route was then threatened by the Merrimac. I yielded my opinion to the President's order; but between him and me there has never been the slightest shadow since I entered the Cabinet, and except the retention of the force under McDowell by the President's orders for the reason mentioned, General McClellan has never made a request or expressed a wish that has not been promptly complied with, if in the power of the Government.

To me personally he has repeatedly expressed his confidence and his thanks in the dispatches sent me.

Now, one word as to political motives. What motives can I have to thwart General McClellan? I am not now, never have been, and never will be a candidate for any office.

I hold my present post at the request of the President, who knew me personally, but to whom I had not spoken from the 4th of March, 1861, until the day he handed me my commission. I knew that everything I cherish and hold dear would be sacrificed by accepting office. But I thought I might help to save the country, and for that I was willing to perish. If I wanted to be a politician or a candidate for any office, would I stand between the Treasury and the robbers who are howling around me? Would I provoke and stand against the whole newspaper gang in the country, of every party, who to sell news would imperil a battle?

I was never taken for a fool, but there could be no greater madness than for a man to encounter what I do for anything else than motives that overleap time and look forward to eternity.

I believe that God Almighty founded this Government, and for my act in the effort to maintain it I expect to stand before Him in judgment. You will pardon this long explanation, which has been made to no one else. It is due to you, who were my friend when I was a poor boy at school, and had no claim upon your confidence or kindness. It can not be made public for obvious reasons. General McClellan is at the head of our chief army, he must have every confidence and support, and I am willing that the whole world should revile me rather than to diminish one grain of the strength needed to conquer the rebels. In a struggle like this, justice or credit to individuals is but dust in the balance.

Desiring no office or honor, and anxious only for the peace and quiet of my home, I suffer no inconvenience beyond that which arises from the trouble and anxiety suffered by worthy friends like yourself, who are naturally disturbed by the clamors and calumnies of those whose interest or feelings are hostile to me.

The official records will at the proper time fully prove—

First. That I have employed the whole power of the Government unsparingly to support General McClellan's operations.

Second. That I have not interfered with or thwarted them in any particular.

Third. That the force retained from his expedition was not needed and could not have been employed by him; that it was retained by express orders of the President upon military investigation and upon the best military advice in the country. That its retention was required to save the capital from the danger to which it was exposed by a disregard of the President's positive order of the 6th of March.

Fourth. That between the President and myself there has never been the slightest shadow of difference upon any point, save the detachment of Franklin's force, and that was a point of no significance, but in which I was sustained by Generals Hitchcock, Meigs, Thomas, and Ripley, while the President yielded only to an anxious desire to avoid complaint, declaring at the same time his belief that the force was not needed by General McClellan.

You will, of course, regard this explanation as being in the strictest confidence, designed only for your information upon matters where you have expressed concern for me.

The confidence of yourself, and men like you, is a full equivalent for all the railing that has been or can be expended against me; and in the magnitude of the cause all merely individual questions are swallowed up.

I shall always rejoice to hear from you, and am as ever,

Truly, yours,

EDWIN M. STANTON.

[Applause.]

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman please to state to whom that letter was directed?

Mr. KELLEY. It was addressed to the Rev. Heman Dyer, D. D., an Episcopal clergyman. Does that letter from Edwin M. Stanton, written in the relations of friendship to one who had been his benefactor in childhood and had encouraged the development of his quick and massive intellect, his unconquerable will, his conscientious sense of duty—does that letter, I ask, written under such circumstances need corroboration against these midnight slanders? It shall however have confirmation and it shall have it from one of the men to whom false and garbled expressions inimical to Lincoln and Stanton are attributed in the course of this villainous diatribe.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES UNITED STATES,
Culpeper Court-House, Va., May 1, 1861.

The PRESIDENT:

Your very kind letter of yesterday is just received. The confidence you express for the future and satisfaction for the past in my military administration is acknowledged with pride. It shall be my earnest endeavor that you and the country shall not be disappointed.

From my first entrance into the volunteer service of the country to the present day I have never had cause of complaint, have never expressed or implied a complaint against the administration or the Secretary of War for throwing any embarrassment in the way of my vigorously prosecuting what appeared to be my duty. Indeed, since the promotion which placed me in command of all the armies, and in view of the great responsibility and importance of success, I have been astonished at the readiness with which everything asked for has been yielded, without even an explanation being asked. Should my success be less than I desire and expect, the least I can say is, the fault is not with you.

Very truly, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

I wonder that the rattling of the bones of Ulysses S. Grant did not alarm the conspirators who claimed to have power to give unanimous consent of the House by setting aside the special order under which they had assembled the other night.

The testimony of Stanton and Grant against the allegations of the author of these malicious slanders!

Mr. Speaker, I am not as young nor as strong as I was when, at his request, it was my habit when in Washington to see Edwin M. Stanton every day before repairing to my committee-room or to the floor of this House. His invitation I still have and cherish, and God knows how faithfully I gave him the opportunity every morning of making any communication to me or imposing upon me any duty for the performance of which he deemed me specially fitted. For him, the statesman I honored and the friend I loved, I have nothing more to say at this time.

I come now to ask the House to vindicate its orders and to protect them against conscious, deliberate, persistent invasions, to be followed by the untrue announcement that what was done by an abuse of an order of the House was done with its unanimous consent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say—and the RECORD will sustain my assertions—that on the night of the 28th of May, when the member from the eighth district of Alabama attempted to force a discussion outside of the business named in the order under which the meeting was held, the then chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] informed him of the impossibility of the consent of that meeting entitling him to speak on the subject he proposed to discuss. Other members did the same.

My colleague [Mr. BAYNE] explained to him elaborately the parliamentary and Congressional law which prohibited the discussion he sought to enter upon, and (if my memory serves me right, and I say it with that qualification) reminded him that the House in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would be the place to invite the discussion he was endeavoring to force in spite of the order of the House. He was told that, though the House at that evening session held under the special order had to go into Committee of the Whole on the pension bills it took up, it could not consider anything outside of them except bills to remove disabilities; that the case was not as when the House went into Committee of the Whole with no special bill before it, but on the state of the Union generally, when any subject might be discussed. He yielded for the time, hoping, as he said, to get in when the legitimate business of the evening was over; but it was then midnight, and probably the apprehension that if he slandered the dead too grossly he might see apparitions on his way to his lodgings, induced him to consent to forego the privilege for a week. Then, so he claims, one gentleman said he would hear him, and on that promise, a week later, he claimed to have had unanimous consent of the House and to have a right to force the discussion which resulted in these twenty-five columns of the RECORD.

Again, the chairman on this evening, that of June 4, told him he could not go on, but fell into the mistake of adding "without unanimous consent." Unanimous consent of whom? Under a restricted order like that, who was the man who, having made an objection, could give unanimous consent of the House by withdrawing that objection? Because that was it; that is the whole story. One of the twenty or thirty gentlemen present had stopped the evil performance by an objection, but, unhappily, he was induced to withdraw the objection, and thereupon supervened the "unanimous consent" of the House, overriding its special order! The member from Alabama may say, as Stanton did in the letter I have read, "I have never been taken for a fool," and he did not fall into a blunder when he sought midnight and a social conclave to make the speech which would not have been listened to on the floor of this House under unanimous consent.

Did he know that he was not discussing a pension bill? Yes, sir; for the RECORD shows that he said: "I do not want the floor until the business is all over." When the pension and the disability bills were passed, they who were at that session had nothing to do but to go home. The order under which they were there was exhausted, and the attempt to influence legislation outside of that order by act or word was an infringement of the privileges of the House, an abuse of its order, and, as it turned out, must be a mortification to every honorable man who knows Stanton's record and reflects that there is a possibility of posterity believing that he, as a member of the House, sat quietly by and without objection listened to the member from the eighth Congressional district of Alabama make his speech on Edwin M. Stanton. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MORRISON and Mr. WHEELER both rose.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a higher question than the gentleman from Illinois can rise to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I have been slandered upon this floor. Statements have been made regarding me which are not true, and I wish to correct them.

Mr. MORRISON. That is no question of privilege.

Mr. WHEELER. It is a privilege that has been granted to every member of this House, and never yet refused to a member of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has had occasion to rule heretofore that a mere disagreement between members of the House as to the correctness or incorrectness of a statement made does not present a question of privilege, but that when a gentleman is charged with having corruptly or knowingly made a false statement on the floor of the House, or with having made a statement on the floor of the House for the purpose of misleading the House in reference to legislation before it, a question of privilege is presented. The Chair, of course, does not remember all that has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]. The general course of the remarks of that gentleman has been to show that the statements made by the gentleman from Alabama with reference to the conduct and character of Mr. Stanton while Secretary of War were not correct; but the Chair does not remember that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated that the gentleman from Alabama has knowingly made any false statement concerning the course of conduct or the character of Mr. Stanton, and about that matter the Chair would of course have to consult the RECORD to see exactly what has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

There is a difference of opinion undoubtedly between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Pennsylvania not only as to the character but as to the official course of Mr. Stanton while a member of the Cabinet; but that does not raise any question as to the veracity of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania charged me with perverting the sessions of the House——

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. During the course of the remarks just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania he referred to members of this House who were in session here last Friday evening as "conspirators." [Laughter.] I desire to say with reference to that matter that no order which this House can make can limit the operations and the performance of duty on the part of members at any other session of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is a matter of privilege.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is. It is a part of my explanation with reference to this matter. I desire to show that the gentleman was in error when he made the charge that those gentlemen were "conspirators."

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is a matter of privilege.

Mr. HEPBURN. Not a question of privilege when members have been charged upon the floor of the House with being "conspirators!"

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Iowa was proceeding not to answer that charge but to argue the question as to what the House had a right to do.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have risen to answer that charge; that is what I desire to do—to answer that charge, and to show the error of the gentleman; that there were no "conspirators" here that evening; that what we did was in pursuance of the order of this House; that we were here in the discharge of duties which can not be limited by the House.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] makes a point of order, as the Chair understands, against the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I will hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MORRISON. I yield a moment to the gentleman from——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois to rise to a point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to occupy ten minutes to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House will please take their seats and preserve order. The Chair will suspend business until order is restored. [A pause].

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. There is a question of privilege already before the House. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], supposing he rose to make a point of order; but no point of order has been made.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make this point against the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has made this charge: The members of this House of Representatives who were in session here last Friday night, although they may have been but a "baker's dozen," had every power that this House can have at any time. If this is not true, then there is no action of this House at any of those sessions that has not been absolutely nugatory and invalid. At such a session we have the power of legislation. We do legislate; we exercise the highest powers it is possible for members of the House to exercise, and there is no power to prevent any sort of legitimate legislative action that may occur. We could pass an appropriation bill at one of those sessions. In contemplation of the rules and the law there was at that time a full session of three hundred and twenty-five members, and the House, I insist, had the right to give the gentleman from Alabama leave to proceed and make his address.

I want to say further that the gentleman from Alabama, in my humble judgment, was strictly in order. He began to address the House upon a question that was then pending. He proceeded to make his remarks, and I do not know of any power that the House has to limit the character of discussion that a gentleman may indulge in, unless a point of order is then and there made. I am opposed to expunging this speech of the gentleman from the RECORD. I believe he had an absolute right to make it. I do not agree with the sentiments in which he indulged. I do not propose to indorse any one of them; and at the proper time I want to have something to say about the subject-matter of his remarks. But I am not willing to punish him, to put upon him an indignity when he was at the most, in my humble judgment, violating good taste, history—possibly truth [laughter], but none of the rules of this House. Therefore I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to expunge that speech from the RECORD. I want it to stay there.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] has the floor, except——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has intimated this matter is not one of privilege, but no point of order has been made and the Chair is reluctant to intervene.

Mr. MORRISON. I raise that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this discussion as to the right of the gentleman to make a speech is not a matter of privilege. It is a matter which arises out of the resolution, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] on that subject.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to illustrate the question of personal privilege. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Iowa is discussing the merits of the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. HEPBURN. In reference to the question of privilege I am doing as well as I can. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. To discuss the merits of the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not a matter of privilege.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. During the morning hour the gentleman from Pennsylvania charged me as a member of this House——

Mr. MORRISON. That has been ruled upon as being no question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has charged me, as a member of this House, with having perverted the session of the House, with having slandered a man that is dead, and with having stated to the House that which might possibly be regarded as an infringement of the truth.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania also stated that certain "captions" of my speech are unwarranted. I wish to say those captions were not made by myself or the reporters. They were put in by the printers without any authority. [A murmur on the Republican side.]

I wish also to say that since I have been a member of this House I have taken great care to conform to its rules at all times, and on no occasion have I perverted its session in any way whatever. I regretted very much to see the printers have placed "Edwin M. Stanton's" name at the head of my speech, which does not belong there. I regretted also that the printers put in the words "the House having under consideration the Private Calendar." Those words were put there without the sanction of myself, and without the sanction of the Official Reporter of the House.

Now, sir, my speech was made as a defense against the unjust attacks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and was not intended to be an attack upon Mr. Stanton.

The RECORD states I used the words——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I rise, Mr. Speaker——. [Cries on the Republican side of "No!" "No!" "Let him go on!" "Down!" and much confusion].

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not stating a case of personal privilege, but on the contrary is only arguing his case over again. [Cries on the Republican side "Go on!"]

Mr. WHEELER. I am correcting what——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not stating a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MORRISON. That is right; I wish you would set him down; I have not been able to do it. [Laughter].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama is not stating any question of privilege to the House [cries of "Withdraw it!" from the Republican side], but simply answering the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. WHEELER. I want to state——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks in accordance with the ruling made a few moments ago, unless the gentleman from Alabama can point out some statement in the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania which imputes to him some improper or some corrupt motive, or some false statement, knowingly made, or some attempt to deceive and impose on the House, it presents no question of personal privilege, and that the only matter before the House is simply the merits of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to expunge from the RECORD a certain speech.

The Chair will also state, in his opinion, when a motion is under consideration which implies in any degree the censure of a member of the House there must necessarily be allowed more latitude of expression in reference to that matter than in the ordinary discussion of a matter of legislation pending before the House. Otherwise a charge against a member could never be properly prosecuted on the floor of the House. The discussion of such matters, when it is confined legitimately to the merits of the proposition actually before the House, can not present questions of privilege of which the member whose conduct is assailed can avail himself. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized and will proceed.

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. MORRISON both rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise for this purpose, Mr. Speaker: I agree that, in the way the Speaker puts it, the ruling is correct; but the Chair forgets evidently that the gentleman from Pennsylvania charged the gentleman from Alabama with willfully and deliberately falsifying; with using villainous diatribes, with slandering, and other such epithets which he applied to him, making personally as bitter a charge against the gentleman from Alabama as he could possibly have framed in language.

Now, it does not seem that the gentleman from Alabama should be required to sit quietly and patiently under such language as that and have no privilege of responding.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did undoubtedly charge that the statements contained in the speech of the gentleman from Alabama were slanders upon the memory of Mr. Stanton; and he gave that as one of the reasons why the speech, under the circumstances, should be expunged from the RECORD. But the Chair thinks, as has just been stated, that when a charge is made against the conduct of a member, or a motion to expunge some matter from the RECORD, the statement of the reasons why that should be done, if pertinent to the motion, does not present a question of privilege; otherwise there would be no end to the discussion of the proposition either on a motion to censure or to expel or to expunge matter from the RECORD; for every statement made, although absolutely necessary in order to inform the House what the charge really was, would involve a question of privilege, to which the member could respond as a matter of right, and he could continue to exercise this right throughout the whole discussion any time the charge, or the reasons for it, should be repeated.

Mr. WHEELER. Out of my respect for you, Mr. Speaker, and for the House I shall not insist further upon the matter.

Mr. McCOMAS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to know whether it is not in order as a privileged motion to move the appointment of a committee to ascertain who, at the Public Printing Office, added captions or interpolated mottoes for the purpose of extending the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama?

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Maryland or any other gentleman obtains the floor in his own right he can move to amend the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by providing for the appointment of a committee for the purpose to which he has referred, or referring the matter to a committee already existing, or make any other proper parliamentary motion with reference to the subject before the House.

Mr. McCOMAS. I give notice that I shall make that motion at the proper time.

Mr. MORRISON. Of the time to which I am entitled I propose to yield a very few minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, who, as the presiding officer of the House at the evening session to which reference is made in the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, desires to read from the RECORD of the proceedings under what circumstances the speech in question was made.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall trespass upon the time of the House but for a very few moments in the time yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON]—not for the purpose of going at length into the discussion of this question as to the merits of the resolution pending, or as to ex-Secretary Stanton and his acts. His life is extinct, and I shall not go back to that. His history is made and is before the country. But I wish to state the circumstances under which the gentleman from Alabama obtained the floor, and under which the remarks of the gentleman were made, that the House may see that there is no cause for the complaint made here. It happened that I was presiding as chairman of the Committee of the Whole House when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] sought the floor on last Friday evening one week ago. At that time he attempted to make some remarks, and the point of order was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that his speech was not in order on that night.

The gentleman from Alabama, after some discussion on the point of order, stated, if I remember correctly, that he did not wish to interfere with the pension business of the session that night, the Chair having admonished him that it was not within the scope of the special order; and he stated that after the business of the night should have been completed, if the Chair and House would indulge him he would like to be heard. There was no objection to the request; but when the close of the evening session came the following remark was made by the gentleman. Mr. MATSON having moved to reconsider the various votes by which the bills were passed, Mr. WHEELER rose and said:

Gentlemen kindly consented to allow me to submit some remarks this evening, but as the hour is late I am unwilling to detain gentlemen; and therefore I ask the same permission to be extended to me for next Friday evening.

Mr. MORRILL replied:

After the regular pension business has been disposed of.

After which—

Mr. TAULBEE moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. I would like to call the attention of my friend from Tennessee to one fact also in this connection. When the gentleman from Alabama took the floor on the first evening we were in Committee of the Whole and discussing a pension bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. WILLIS. We were not in the House at all.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I would like to ask a question. Was it not a fact which became apparent from the appearance of the pile of manuscript that the gentleman from Alabama had before him that he was going to take an hour at least of the time of the House to be devoted to pensions, and was not the House practically coerced into granting this privilege at some future time when such business was not before it?

Mr. McMILLIN. It is very hard to determine from a man's manuscript how long his wind may last. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think you can tell with reference to the gentlemen from Alabama.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], I was Speaker pro tempore when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] made his speech last Friday night. I will have read, sir, from the RECORD an extract showing the manner in which the gentleman obtained the floor on this second Friday night, but will state before doing so that it will be observed the Chair ruled that not only the gentleman must obtain the floor by unanimous consent, but would retain it only by unanimous consent. So that it was in the power of any man in this House to object at any moment and stop the proceeding. All who were here on that occasion will bear testimony to the fact that there were many more gentlemen remaining, when that proceeding was carried on, on the Republican side of the House than on this side. So much for that particular feature of it.

When the point of order was made, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] got up and said it would be wrong under the circumstances to prevent the gentleman from speaking.

Mr. Speaker, if there has been a violation of the rules of the House, which I emphatically deny, it was not confined to the gentleman from Alabama or to this side of the House. For immediately after the gentleman from Alabama concluded the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] obtained the floor and got unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some remarks in response to the gentleman from Alabama.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed from the RECORD that not a single Democrat, not a single Southern man, made a suggestion in favor of the gentleman going on, but that the urgency came from that side. Those who were present will not deny the fact that when objection was made by a gentleman on the Republican side, members from that side went and got him to withdraw his objection and let the speech proceed.

If this is a "conspiracy," then there are gentlemen as good as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]—although I esteem him highly—there are gentlemen as good as any in the country who have engaged in the conspiracy. The gentleman's own side of the House is not blameless if there be blame. When the regular business of the evening was ended, then and not till then did the gentleman from Alabama obtain the floor. He had said before that he did not wish to stand in the way of any pension claim. Now I will ask the Clerk to read the portion of the RECORD which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I was unwilling to occupy the time of the House while pension bills were being passed, but as that business is entirely finished for the evening, and as some gentlemen have kindly consented to hear what I have to say, I shall now, with the permission of the House, proceed in continuation of my remarks which I began last Friday evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that no remarks are in order now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing is in order at this evening session but the consideration of pension bills, and although there may have been a tacit understanding to the contrary last Friday evening, the Chair holds that that understanding can not be permitted to contravene the order under which the House assembles. The Chair therefore holds that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] can obtain or retain the floor only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HERMANN. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the understanding will be carried out.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As an agreement had been arrived at by unanimous consent upon last Friday evening, and also this evening, in Committee of the Whole, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] should have an opportunity to deliver his speech, does not that agreement render unnecessary unanimous consent at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is having the record examined and will answer the gentleman's inquiry when report is made upon the record of last Friday night.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Alabama will be heard.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. Unless further objection is made the gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

There was no objection.

[Mr. WHEELER withholds his remarks for revision, and they will appear hereafter.]

Mr. WINANS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. HEPBURN. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some remarks which I desire to make in reply to the gentleman from Alabama.

A MEMBER. Speak them now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa, as was stated by the Chair to the gentleman from Alabama, that no recognition could be had except by unanimous consent on any matter not coming within the special order. The Chair, however, will put the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope it will be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some remarks in reply to those which have been made by the gentleman from Alabama.

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that unanimous consent was asked by a gentleman on the other side of the House to do the very thing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania says was the carrying out of a "conspiracy."

For, Mr. Speaker, I state what the RECORD shows when I say that after the gentleman from Alabama had spoken for an hour and he was no longer entitled to the floor, and the Chair had rapped him down, unanimous consent was asked by a Republican, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR], that his time be extended, and that was done. Gentlemen on the other side were here and not objecting to the debate, but seemed to want it.

I now yield the floor back to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say a word in response—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. MORRISON. I yield the gentleman from Kansas two minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish, in view of the prominence that has been given to this matter, to make a brief statement. On the previous Friday evening, when I was not present, and as I understood it, unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Alabama to make some remarks. On last Friday evening it was then stated that that unanimous consent had been given, and it was presented as a matter of good faith. It was stated that withholding the consent for the gentleman to proceed would be a breach of faith in the committee. I knew nothing whatever of the subject on which the gentleman from Alabama was to speak, nor did I know on what subject he was speaking till some time after his remarks had begun, of which I heard but a small portion.

I wish to say further that in the latitude of debate always allowed in the Committee of the Whole, and especially at the sessions for the consideration of pension bills, it has been understood that a gentleman might discuss one of those bills as long as he saw fit and in any manner. Consequently the gentleman from Alabama would have had the right on any one of those pension bills to present such remarks as he saw fit. He consented not to use the time of the pension session, but to allow the committee to pass the pension bills, in view of which the gentlemen present on a previous night when I was not present, and on last Friday night when I was present, gave consent under the circumstances that the gentleman from Alabama should make his remarks. Probably very few of them knew anything of the exact subject he would discuss, and I certainly did not.

There was no conspiracy about it. It was simply the execution in good faith of an agreement among gentlemen upon both sides of the House who may differ immensely not only in the present year, but who for twenty-five years have differed on numerous subjects. No man esteems the patriotism of Stanton more highly than do I. And for any gentlemen on this floor to attempt to place on those members who were present at that session last Friday night, or the previous Friday night, the brand of a conspirator is something, Mr. Speaker, which strikes me as being quite uncalled-for and quite reprehensible. [Applause.]

The gentlemen who were then present or who have been in the habit of attending those Friday night meetings for the purpose of passing pension bills are gentlemen who have as deep an interest in this Union, and who show it by their course on this pension business, and who have shown it by their actions years ago—as deep an interest in this Union as the gentlemen who have staid away. And to brand them as conspirators is something that appears to me entirely gratuitous. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, many things occurred in Mr. Stanton's time about which all good men were not and are not of one opinion. He and his acts have gone into history; both are likely in the future to be discussed and talked about sometimes with blame, sometimes with praise.

The matter now before the House concerns its orderly proceeding under its rules. I therefore move that the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] be referred to the Committee on Rules, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask the gentleman to allow me to have read for information an amendment which I propose to offer, and see if he will not allow it to be pending.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to its being read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of the resolution as follows:

"Resolved also, That the unanimous consent of the House to Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa, to publish in the RECORD a reply to said speech of Mr. WHEELER is hereby revoked.

"Resolved further, That for the present the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] be withheld from the RECORD, and that the Committee on Rules shall inquire and report what parts of his said remarks were applicable to the time when and circumstances in which the speech of the gentleman from Alabama was made; and that only such parts of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] as were so applicable shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman allow that amendment to be pending?

Mr. MORRISON. I must decline, Mr. Speaker. I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to refer the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to the Committee on Rules, and on that he demands the previous question.

A division was called for.

The House divided upon ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 85, noes 21.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee be instructed to report——

The SPEAKER. That can not be done. The previous question has just been ordered, which cuts off all amendment and brings the House to a direct vote upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HEPBURN. But is it not proper now to move instructions?

The SPEAKER. This is not a motion to recommit. This is an original proposition offered in the House, simply a proposition to refer the pending resolution to one of the committees of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. There seems to be an impression among some gentlemen on this side of the House that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] is pending.

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair desires to state, as a matter of justice to himself and to the House, that when the Chair announced the question put by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] the Chair was under the impression for the moment that the previous question had been ordered upon the resolution itself. The previous question was simply ordered upon the motion to refer, and the Chair thinks that as soon as that motion is disposed of, if the resolution is not referred, a motion to amend would be in order.

The question was taken on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules; and there were—ayes 73, noes 52.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as managers upon the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill of the House No. 5874, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. CRISP, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, and the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. HANBACK.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. With a view to proceeding with the appropriation bills, I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Pacific Railroads to say to the House this morning that appreciating the necessity of passing without delay the bill which the gentleman proposes to call up we do not wish to antagonize it; but that after that bill is disposed of we shall call up the bill that was under discussion on last Saturday.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 141) providing for printing the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, report that they have considered the same and recommend that the said resolution do lie upon the table, and that the following substitute be adopted, to wit:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed 35,000 copies, in cloth binding, of the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor; 26,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 9,000 copies for use of members of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $10,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

The estimated cost of said printing is $348.30 per thousand copies, or $10,500 in the aggregate.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The committee reports a substitute.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not this resolution go to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is subject to the point of order that it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The original resolution provides for printing for the use not only of the two Houses but also of the Secretary of the Interior, which fact will take the resolution to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if the point of order is made.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered now.

Mr. RANDALL. I have made no point of order, but only directed the attention of the House to the fact that the resolution is subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RANDALL. My object was to call the attention of the House to this subject of printing generally and the large sums of money involved.

Mr. LONG. I hope that unanimous consent will be given for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I desire to offer an amendment, providing simply for the printing of copies for the use of the Department of the Interior, as the substitute reported by the committee provides only for copies for the use of the Senate and House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "thirty," in line 3 of section 1, and insert in lieu thereof "fifty."

After the word "Senate," in line 7 of section 1, insert the following:

"And 15,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Labor, the latter number to be wrapped for mailing in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct."

Strike out, in line 1 of section 2, "$10,500" and insert "$15,725."

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute as amended was adopted.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OATES. I desire leave to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill of great importance.

Mr. RANDALL. I must call for the regular order. It is necessary that we proceed with the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. OATES. I think the gentleman when he understands what this bill is will recognize its importance.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the bill which the gentleman from Alabama desires to report will take but a moment I hope it may be allowed to come in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the importance of disposing of this bill at an early moment, I trust that the general debate on it will be confined to this day. I have not thought it proper until some debate has occurred to press a proposition limiting the time for discussion. I propose to occupy a very few minutes in calling the attention of the Committee of the Whole to a few matters which seem to be pertinent.

This bill, as all gentlemen will recognize, ought to go to the Senate at the earliest possible moment. It embraces a very large number of items. There are some changes made in the civil list of the Government and some propositions submitted which may give rise to some debate. The interests of the Government would be greatly embarrassed by the failure of this bill to become a law before the expiration of the current fiscal year. The importance of this must be manifest to every gentleman, not only as a matter of convenience to the Departments, but from the additional expense which would be entailed upon the Government if it should become necessary to extend the provisions of the law for the current year into the coming fiscal year.

This bill, appropriating for the civil list of the great Departments of the Government almost exclusively, involves $20,560,119.42. The appropriations made for the same service for the present fiscal year amount to $21,371,605.05, showing a reduction in this bill upon the law of the present year of $811,485.63. This, while a large sum in itself, is comparatively small when you consider the many millions involved in the bill; and it is a reduction which I hope this House will consent shall be made. In order to press upon the attention of the committee the propriety of this section, inasmuch as many gentlemen here are affected in their constituency and friends more or less by this reduction in the civil list, I wish to call attention to the startling rapidity with which the expenses of this Government are being increased; and in no field of expenditure is this increase more apparent and striking than in the civil list of the Government. I have before me a statement of the appropriations since the Forty-second Congress. I have commenced with that Congress, because then the charges resulting from the incidents of the war, except pensions and the public debt, had been measurably satisfied.

I have not sought in this statement to distinguish year by year the increase or decease of the appropriations made on account of pensions. But I admit that to the appropriations for pensions deduction ought to be made, the other war charge, interest on the public debt, not being covered by the appropriation bills of Congress but by permanent appropriations. The appropriations for pensions, however, should be deducted, so as to indicate the growth of the current ordinary expenses of the Government. The following table indicates the appropriations made each session of Congress since 1872.

Annual appropriations by Congress from 1873 to 1886, inclusive.

Forty-second Congress	1873	$175,300,533 73
	1874	197,919,297 38
Forty-third Congress	1875	183,685,002 16
	1876	179,166,833 90
Forty-fourth Congress	1877	154,553,639 64
	1878	144,392,149 23
Forty-fifth Congress	1879	171,187,349 68
	1880	192,870,137 17
Forty-sixth Congress	1881	189,474,559 49
	1882	218,358,057 25
Forty-seventh Congress	1883	297,561,602 29
	1884	231,993,647 63
Forty-eighth Congress	1885	195,710,588 09
	1886	219,595,283 18

In 1877 the appropriations made by the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress were reduced, it will be seen, to $154,553,639.64, a reduction of $24,613,194.26 from the preceding year. The next following session of the Forty-fourth Congress they were reduced to $144,392,149.23, being $10,161,490.41 less than the preceding year.

It is very proper for me to say that the very extraordinary reduction between the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses is not to be attributed so much to the independent action of Congress as to the manifest demand of the country for a large reduction in the expenses of government, a public protest against the large charges made upon the people, and a demand that the expenses of the Government should be reduced. It was a period of unusual public vigilance.

These reductions were made by the Forty-fourth Congress in harmony with the public demand everywhere expressed.

Great as these reductions were, the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman, referring to these reductions, afterward said in substance that a "reduction of public expenditure of ten million more could have been made without impairing the efficiency of the public service." And speaking with that degree of impartiality a member of Congress may be presumed to possess, intending to be absolutely impartial, I do not believe that the public service has ever been more efficient than during these two years.

Since then, however, Mr. Chairman, there has been very large increase of appropriations, beginning with the year 1879, as shown by the foregoing table, reaching in 1883 the enormous sum of $297,561,602.29, materially affected by the pension list, I admit.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does my friend from Indiana show in his statement where and how this increase occurred and for what purpose? Has he any such detail as will enable us to learn as in reference to these points?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not sought to consider the matter from the standpoint of details. I simply wish to show the gradual growth of the expenses of Government in the aggregate. But I will go somewhat more in detail. Take the several years I have mentioned and in reference to the appropriations made by a single bill, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill alone, we find that the result is the same. It is expressed in the following table, commencing with the year 1873. This table indicates how steadily all the other expenditures of the Government go up with the enlargement of the civil list.

Appropriations made by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bills from 1873 to 1886.

Forty-second Congress...	1873	$18,671,785 74
	1874	17,120,496 60
Forty-third Congress.....	1875	20,783,900 80
	1876	18,902,236 99
Forty-fourth Congress...	1877	14,963,373 30
	1878	15,459,345 39
Forty-fifth Congress	1879	15,438,881 30
	1880	16,287,457 73
Forty-sixth Congress	1881	16,274,223 59
	1882	17,677,679 49
Forty-seventh Congress	1883	20,038,000 65
	1884	20,454,246 22
Forty-eighth Congress...	1885	21,393,141 85
	1886	21,371,605 05

In this table the reductions in the appropriations for 1877 and 1878 correspond with the aggregate reduction, and the increase from $14,963,373.30 in 1877 to $21,371,605.05 in 1886 indicates the general growth.

See how this compares with the expenses of the Senate and House, and although I take but two periods to illustrate it, the expenses of the Senate and House indicate the steady and sometimes rapid increase of the expenses of the Government—the appropriations for the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, 1878, and second session Forty-eighth Congress, 1884.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What year?

Mr. HOLMAN. Eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, second session Forty-fourth Congress. The appropriation for the employés of House and Senate at those periods are indicated by the following table.

Number of officers and employés of the House and Senate and aggregate amount of their salaries for the fiscal years 1878 and 1886, being for the first session of the Forty-fifth and Forty-ninth Congresses, respectively.

	Salaries.	Number.

*Includes employés and salaries provided for in the sundry civil and deficiency acts for the first session Forty-fifth Congress.

I have taken those periods for the reason that it has been only eight years since the first period; and I have accordingly selected a comparatively recent date for this comparison. The law for the present year provides for three hundred and five employés of the House, or an increase of eighty-one employés in the service of the House alone in eight years.

Now, I admit that eighty-one employés is not a very large number; but the increase as to percentage is simply enormous, when you remember that it has run up from two hundred and twenty-four to three hundred and five in the brief period of eight years. The increased expenditure is still more when you remember that in 1878 the expenses of the force employed by the House was $287,402.53.

For the present year we appropriated $391,013.45, showing an increase of $103,610.92 in the expenses of the House for its current employés alone; that is to say, its current and contingent expenses; showing an increase of more than 33 per cent., with a corresponding result in the Senate.

Now, I admit, sir, that while some effort has been made, little is proposed in the direction of reducing the expenses of the House of Representatives by the pending bill. A few officers and employés clearly not necessary have been dispensed with, a few salaries have been somewhat reduced, but in the main the employés of the House and the Senate and the contingent expenses proposed to be appropriated are the same for the coming as for the present year. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the action of the committee and House in regard to these reductions in the interest of economy recommended in this connection will be such as to instruct the Committees on Appropriations hereafter in making a more thorough revision of the expenditures for the offices and employments immediately around us as well as everywhere else in the interest of fair economy.

Having said this much for the purpose of pointing out in a general way the rate at which the expenses of the Government are being increased, I only wish to say a few words in addition on the general subject of economy in governmental affairs. I find in looking over the public records no expression on the subject by statesmen who have gone before us more forcible than the utterance of a great Senator of the United States, Mr. Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, not only a typical representative of the statesmanship of the last generation, but of the generation which preceded it in our history.

Mr. Benton, in his Thirty Years' View, had occasion to discuss the subject, and I trust the importance of bearing in mind and occasionally reviewing the tendencies in our Government toward increased expenditures will be a sufficient apology for quoting his views. They certainly are entitled to high consideration, since providing for the raising and expending of revenue is in a large degree the business of Congress. It seems to be in time of peace the principal object of legislation. This, I think, will justify me in calling the attention of the committee to the views of that distinguished statesman on that subject. He says:

> At no point does the working of the Government more seriously claim the attention of statesmen than at that of its expenses. It is the tendency of all governments to increase their expenses, and it should be the care of all statesmen to restrain them within the limits of a judicious economy. This obligation was felt as a duty in the early periods of our history, and the doctrine of economy became a principle in the political faith of the party, which, whether called Republican as formerly, or Democratic as now, is still the same, and was incorporated in its creed. Mr. Jefferson largely rested the character of his administration upon it, and deservedly; for even in the last year of his administration, and after the enlargement of our territory by the acquisition of Louisiana, three millions and a half of dollars. At the end of Mr. Monroe's administration, sixteen years later, they had risen to about seven millions; and in the last year of Mr. Van Buren's (sixteen years more) they had risen to about thirteen millions.

Mr. Benton then goes on to call attention to certain of our appropriation bills, and adds as follows:

> The evils of extravagance in the Government are great. Besides the burden upon the people, it leads to corruption in the Government and to a janissary horde of office-holders to live upon the people, while polluting their elections and legislation and poisoning the fountains of public information in molding public opinion to their own purposes.

It seems to me that at the very inception of this legislation it is proper that I should ask the attention of this committee to this remarkable statement, confirmed as I have suggested by the fact that when we reduced the expenditures over $24,000,000 in 1878 the efficiency of the Government was not impaired in the least, and a distinguished Secretary of the Treasury informed Congress that a greater reduction might have been made without embarrassment to any department of the Government.

Mr. Benton says:

> At the same time it is the opinion of this writer that a practical man, acquainted with the object for which the Federal Government was created, and familiar with its financial working from the time its fathers put it into operation, could take his pen and cross out nearly the one-half of these seventy-odd millions and leave the Government in full vigor for all its proper objects, and more pure, by reducing the number of those who live upon the substance of the people.

I have quoted from page 199 of the second volume.

I think, sir, that no sounder sentiment was ever uttered. And yet one trouble in the House of Representatives, and it is the same I presume in the Senate, is this: This legislative bill and most of the others are composed of a great multitude of items. Most of the appropriations for our Government are in comparatively small sums. The details of Government go down into minute items. It is difficult for us to bring our minds to the conclusion that we ought to deal with these details. The details of the small sums, aggregating ultimately millions of dollars, do not arrest our attention. We appropriate this item which is unimportant in itself, and that item which is unimportant in itself. We increase this salary and that salary, create an office here and there, each quite unimportant; but in the aggregate, when the great budget is made up, of small items which scarcely arrest the attention of either the House or Senate, they have swollen into millions of dollars.

Gentlemen always appeal to committees of the House—we are all, I presume, equally subject to the censure, if it be a censure—on behalf of an item because it is unimportant or small. Such an appeal comes to us in the House or is made in the Senate; and yet that is the basis on which the enormous fabric of hundreds of millions is built up.

Let me revert to one other matter in connection with that subject, and I will not further weary the attention of the committee.

It might be said, and said fairly, that if this growth of expenditures of our Government was on the basis of an increase of population, there would be no just ground of complaint. And up to 1878 it could be said with fairness that the expenses incident to the war, the necessary extravagance resulting from a state of great public disorder, the impossibility of legislators in the midst of a great struggle coming down to the mere details of expenditure, made it difficult to cut down from the high standard of expenditures to the absolute wants of the Government, especially in the number of civil employés. But permit me to remark two things: First, that during the war period, from the meeting of Congress on the 4th of July, 1861, to the termination of that internal disorder, there was no tendency toward the increase of the expenditures in the civil list beyond the growth in the number of persons required to be employed in the various Departments of the Government; and more than once in this House at the very beginning of the session a resolution was introduced declaring that no civil salary should be increased; so that, notwithstanding the unexampled increase of responsibility thrown on the heads of Departments and the heads of bureaus, not a salary, according to my recollection, was increased.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. While there was a decrease in the value of money.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; there was, of course, a decrease in the value of money all the time. From a high sense of patriotic duty, looking the interests of Government full in the face in view of the condition of our affairs, I think not a salary was increased, so that it was not till after 1865, and in the main as late as 1873, that the high impulses of that period gave way, extravagance began, salaries everywhere were increased, new offices created; and then there was a recoil which produced the remarkable result I have mentioned in 1877 and 1878, but originating in 1874, which, at the demand of the people, reduced the expenses of the Government to the vast extent I have named. And yet at the same time the country saw no public interest impaired, no Department of Government embarrassed.

But the other point to which I want to call attention is this, that the growth of our expenditure as well as of the revenue goes far beyond the growth of our population. If taxation rested on wealth alone there would not be so much to regret if it did weaken the Government. But it does not. It can not in the nature of things. Labor in all the fields of human industry must of necessity feel the effects of taxation, and you can not impose your tax in any form, unless it be in one single form which I shall not stop to discuss, in which it will not reach in a greater or less degree every industry throughout the whole land. That applies just as well to your internal-revenue system confined to a few items as to the customs system extending to multitudes.

The following table illustrates the growth of our revenue and expenditure, and ought to command attention.

W. S. ROSECRANS, Register.

REGISTER'S OFFICE,
United States Treasury Department, April 20, 1886.

Let us see in this table the burden the country is bearing per capita in comparison with a comparatively short time ago. I take the year 1850 as the beginning point. In that year the revenues per capita averged $1.88, the expenditure $1.71. I come down to the year 1860, immediately preceding the war. In that year the revenues had not increased; they had slightly decreased, being $1.78. The expenditure was slightly increased on that very considerable period of time, being only $2.01 per capita, while upon the basis of revenue and expenditure during the last year the remarkable fact is presented that as to revenue our people paid $5.68 per capita and the expenditure was $4.74 per capita. With vast sums of money lying idle in your Treasury, I think there is no instance in the history of a government well established like our own, with the necessities for expenditure incident to public peril not rapidly increasing, where there is presented so remarkable a spectacle of the growth of burdens upon the one hand and of expenditures upon the other.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that our expenditures increase over three times as fast as our population? I mean the expenditures of the General Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. Now, we sometimes think it strange that in a government possessed of such extraordinary elements of prosperity as ours, with a new and vigorous population, there should be disorders in our midst; that the chasm between the wealth of our people and the poverty of our people, between the comparatively few who are wealthy and the great mass of the people, is already so wide and deep; but it is absolutely certain that the most powerful agent in centralizing the wealth of a country, in depressing its industries, in depressing its laboring people, and increasing the number of those who are helplessly impoverished, is oppressive taxation, and that this taxation can not be borne on the basis upon which our people now pay taxes without its results being disastrous in the early future must I think be manifest to all.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other subject to which I wish to invite attention for a few moments. There are provisions in the bill to which I think gentlemen who desire to engage in the general debate will wish me to refer.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman says that the burdens of taxation are increasing very much faster than population. I want to ask him if it is not also true that the wealth of the country and the comforts of the people are increasing much faster than population?

Mr. HOLMAN. The first proposition I concede, that the wealth of the country has rapidly increased. In no other country has wealth increased so rapidly as in ours. But, Mr. Chairman, is it true that it is beneficial to a government like ours, a Republic, that wealth should increase unless it increases through those agencies which naturally diffuse it? Does not my friend bear in mind that the chief growth in wealth is to be found in those large interests which enter into and involve the fortunes and estates of comparatively few individuals? Take, for instance, a few great corporations that have been created within our period; a large proportion of our accumulated wealth is in their hands, while the number of our people who are impoverished, people who have not the comforts of life and are cramped for the bare necessities of life, people who can barely keep the wolf from the door and whose children are growing up without encouragement or a hopeful future, is increasing every day in the year.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that while our wealth does increase somewhat faster than our population the percentage is only a small one, and at the same time the cost of the Government increases at a rate more than three times as rapid as the increase of population, and if you consider the whole Government of the country four times as fast?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my friend, if he examines the subject, will find this to be the state of the case: At the close of the war we had a vast region of unopened country, vast resources which had not yet been touched, and the policy twenty or twenty-five years ago was, through the instrumentality and power of the Government, to rapidly open up those sources of wealth. As a consequence of that policy the development of wealth in our country within this period has been absolutely unexampled in the history of the world; but it has exhausted the resources of the nation in the creation of great estates.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is true that our wealth has doubled in twenty years, although it has taken thirty years to double our population; but the expenses of Government have increased fourfold in the same time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to is this, that from 1860 to 1880, according to the best estimates I can get, the wealth of this country increased from $14,000,000,000 to $40,000,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am conceding the extraordinary growth of wealth, and had it been fairly diffused, which never occurs under the artificial power of government grants and subsidies, it would have been a blessing, but otherwise it is a misfortune.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I agree also with the gentleman that wealth, like the snow, when it is piled up does harm; but I do not believe that it can do harm if it is properly diffused; and if the gentleman will observe the increased savings in the portions of the country to which he refers, where these great corporations exist, and if he will also go through the country itself and look at the comforts which surround the farmers, I think he will come to the conclusion that this wealth is diffused pretty widely.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If the gentleman from Maine would examine the mortgages on the farms he would reach a different conclusion.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not think there would be many to examine in my part of the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are some localities in this country where wealth is better diffused than in others; but I think, taking the whole country together, there has been a fearful concentration of wealth and the diffusion has been very slight. Mr. Chairman, until now the experiment has never been tried of a wealthy people maintaining republican institutions. We are now making the first trial of that kind. It has been doubted in all ages whether a country of great wealth could at the same time be a republic. It is absolutely certain that the mere element of wealth, which in itself would be calculated to give increased opportunities of happiness to the people, would not be an element of weakness, but on the contrary a source of great strength, provided the wealth were diffused.

The misfortune in all other countries, and the misfortune we have now to encounter, is that this wealth is in the hands of very few, while a corresponding state of impoverishment is the fate of the many. Here is the trouble. It is very clear that a corrupt government can not exist as a republic. A republic can not continue if the foundations are corrupt. It has been the belief of those men who have studied this problem most carefully that it is possible this Government should be carried on as an economical, frugal government, notwithstanding the great mass of accumulated wealth throughout the land, just as it was in the former years when the whole of our people were comparatively poor. But the danger is that our Government, instead of representing the whole people, the great mass of those who are in comparatively moderate circumstances, will come to represent the wealth of the country rather than the people themselves—will put on the qualities and characteristics of the few, not of the many.

It is for this reason above all others that economy in this Government should be sought for as the only absolute mode of securing the perpetuation of our institutions. We must adopt the one basis or the other. Ours will be a frugal republic, plain and simple, just as it was in former years, or else it will go to the other extreme, a costly and splendid government and an impoverished people. There is no middle ground. In the one instance it would represent the people in moderate circumstances and with prosperous homes—it would represent the manhood of the nation; in the other case it would represent its wealth.

Mr. Chairman, the other subject to which I wish to invite attention for a moment, for I had no intention of occupying so much time, is in regard to three provisions of this bill. One is in reference to the appropriation of money to carry on the Civil Service Commission. This bill appropriates for the Civil Service Commission for the coming year the same sum that was appropriated for the present year, $21,400, and adds the following proviso, which will be found on page 19:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

There are two rules alone of the Civil Service Commission affected by this provision. The provision is not new legislation, but simply a limitation upon the expenditure of this appropriation—a condition on which it may be expended. Those two rules are, first, that under which, when a Department or officer of the Government having the power to make an appointment desires to make an appointment, four names are furnished by the commissioners, and from those four a selection is made. The other rule is that, with the exception of those who served in the Union Army, no person shall be eligible to examination under the civil-service regulations who shall have passed the age of forty-five.

Mr. FINDLAY. The proposition, of course, is divisible; we could vote first on one and then on the other.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two separate propositions. Now, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say the Civil Service Commission was experimental. The measure which established that commission was scarcely debated in this House. The bill organizing the commission came from the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform of this House, of which Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, was chairman, was reported back, and on motion, I think, of Mr. COX, of New York, Mr. Kasson yielding for that motion, the previous question was called and sustained, the yeas and nays were ordered, and the question was taken at once.

Mr. COX. Was it not discussed for half an hour, several speeches being made?

Mr. HOLMAN. If such was the fact the discussion was so brief it had escaped my recollection.

A MEMBER. What was the vote?

Mr. HOLMAN. There was a very small negative vote. My recollection was that the subject was not discussed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Would not half an hour of discussion have been in order after the previous question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not recall the fact that the rule to which the gentleman refers was in operation at that time. If it was, and I now remember it was, then debate for half an hour occurred. I know that the debate, if any, was so brief that it left no impression upon my mind. No opportunity for amendment was given. The measure had to be passed just as it came to the House or it had to be defeated. It had been believed by both sides of the House, and by neither side more strongly than by gentlemen around me on this side, that our civil service required very important reforms, and that it would scarcely be consistent with what was understood to be the drift of public opinion and the expressions of the platforms of the great national parties upon that subject that a measure which promised even in the remotest degree to reform and purify our civil service should be ignored when the subject was presented, even if no opportunity for debate or amendment was offered.

Mr. FINDLAY. Are not the two provisions which are to be affected by the changes proposed by the committee matters of regulation, and not matters of law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly they are matters of regulation. I have spoken of them as rules; I do not mean rules laid down by law.

Mr. FINDLAY. They were not in the law?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, of course not. They are rules laid down by the commission. I am not denying the power of the Commissioners to make those rules with the approval of the President. I have said what I have in regard to the circumstances under which that bill passed and became a law for the reason that had this House had an opportunity of considering the matter and of adopting amendments—had the measure passed in the regular course of legislation like most other measures—it would have been regarded as a more deliberate expression of the judgment of gentlemen who gave it their support. As an experiment in a field where reform was imperatively demanded few gentlemen could hesitate as to what action was proper when the measure was thus presented.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman whether he says this does not change existing law? And whether he says also this provision in regard to sending names to the appointing power is a regulation made in pursuance of law?

Mr. HOLMAN. It changes the rules of the commission by limitation on the expenditure.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Wait a moment. If you change this statute that the Civil Service Board without the approval of the President can not make such regulation, does not that change the law?

Mr. HOLMAN. No. Not law except as to the incident of the power of the Commission.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It only applies the reasoning power of $21,000 to them; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not insisting these rules are in violation of law.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not passing judgment on them.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not discussing anything obnoxious to the rules of the House or any point of order which may be made. What I say is this, and I admit it, that the Civil Service Commission, with the approval of the President, had the power to make certain rules, and did make a regulation requiring only four names to be forwarded to the appointing officer, whoever he may be, and withholding from all persons, with limited exceptions, public employment. If this provision becomes a law the commission, under the will of Congress, must change the rules I have named.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The Commissioners will make the change under the reasoning of $21,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman puts the case stronger than I do. I am not claiming these rules are in violation of law. I am not discussing that point at all. If Congress think those rules should be repealed certainly it has the power to repeal them. When the point of order shall come up I think it will not be found to affect the law-making power of this House, notwithstanding it may affect the law itself. For, sir, the House has not by any of its rules been deprived of the power when appropriating money to provide that it shall be expended in a specific manner and for a specific purpose. The House has not by its rules abandoned the power to legislate. It has not deprived itself of that power. That the House has still retained; it would be a strange thing indeed if the House had not retained the power of putting proper limitations on money which it votes in appropriation bills from the public Treasury.

Mr. LONG. If your bill becomes a law will not the Civil Service Commission be compelled to send up all the names?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. Under the present law are they compelled to do so?

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems not.

Mr. LONG. Is not that then a change of law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am conceding the fact; but suppose it is a change of law, am I taking extreme ground even in insisting on that?

Mr. LONG. Then it has no place in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. This House, Congress, has never abandoned the power to annex a condition to the expenditure of public money.

Mr. LONG. The rule says you shall not appropriate money with any change of law, and yet you say it does change the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman misapprehends the rule of the House. The House, I repeat, has never parted with its power under any rule so that when it comes to appropriate money it has not the right and power in appropriating that money to impose proper limitations on its expenditure. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts say it is not proper when an appropriation is made to provide that none of this money shall be paid for the purpose of salary unless, as in this bill, in full for that salary? This question of limitation on this bill involves several hundreds of thousands of dollars beyond what it appropriates unless you put some limitation like that upon the amounts which are given. You can not abandon the power to limit the expenditures.

Mr. LONG. But your change must not go so far as to raise any change of existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would be a change of law in paying that salary on the basis of a less sum than the permanent law provides. I concede to that. It is an incident of legislation.

I am willing for one, in view of the importance of improving the civil service, that a commission shall exist to ascertain the fitness of applicants for clerical positions, their qualifications for official employment. I mean applicants for employment in the classified civil service.

I do not believe that any commission, however able—and the present commission is composed of able men—can be found efficient in selecting through a technical examination persons to fill the great body of the public employments of the country outside of clerical duties. To that extent therefore this would be a reform in our former system; and to that extent it may also be said that in years past some persons have been indicated in the Departments and prior to the organization of the Civil Service Commission to examine the fitness of those applying for specific appointments. And it is undoubtedly in the interest of the public service that fitness for the special duties to be performed should be ascertained in advance of the appointment.

But, sir, I could go much further than that. Can our people consent to the creation of a power in this country through a commission or otherwise which shall have in charge the entire control of all employments in the public service? It is entirely averse to all our institutions and not in harmony with our system of popular government. The commission as a means for ascertaining qualification and fitness for clerical services will be found valuable; beyond that the country will move prudently.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me interrupt the gentleman just there. Does not this provision, if adopted, in effect absolutely and unqualifiedly nullify the most important provision of the civil-service law as it exists now, in that it simply provides that every applicant from a State who passes the examination required by the rule, however low that examination may be rated, shall have his name sent up; and that the selection for the vacancy must be made from the entire list? Is not that now simply a means of enabling the appointing power to select its party friends?

A MEMBER. Yes; that is just the object of it.

Mr. MORRISON. It would not have meant that if I had drawn it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio emphatically, no. It does not do any such thing. It does not nullify the most important feature of the law.

Mr. LONG. Then the gentleman from Indiana differs with the gentleman from Illinois, who intimates that to be the operation of the law as drawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. The most important duty which this commission is called upon to perform is to ascertain the qualifications of the various applicants for official duties in the classified civil service of the Government——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But that could have been done in the Departments, as was formerly the case.

Mr. HOLMAN. All that is required is that the list shall be sent up of all of those who have passed the proper examination, and not permit the selection of a small number to be made on the part of the commission. All persons found qualified upon the examination to enter the list shall have their names sent to the officer having the appointing power. By this arrangement you gain all that is available in the Civil Service Commission system when you have provided for examining the applicants for appointments in the classified service, and then required that the whole list of those found competent shall be sent up, so that the appointing power may have the selection and not the commission. This makes the commission an examining board as to qualification, and the system a method of appointment only, in which the qualification of the citizen for a particular public service is the main factor in securing his appointment.

Mr. WILLIS. Wherein does that differ from the examinations for appointments to specific positions prior to the passage of what is known as the civil-service law?

Mr. SPRINGER. But there was no basis of classification at all.

Mr. WILLIS. But an examination was required.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; as I have said, there was an examination for specific appointments, but there was no uniformity in the system.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him a moment, as I understand the practical working of this plan prior to the passage of the civil-service law, the examination related alone to the Treasury Department.

Mr. HITT. No; it applied to the other Departments.

Mr. HOLMAN. It applied to various Departments, but there was no standard nor any uniformity in the examinations.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am quite sure that appointments were had in the other Departments now included in the classified civil service without examination.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no general examination for appointments in the various Departments; the examinations applied only to particular positions to be filled and to the qualifications of the candidate for the particular office. Now, the difference between that plan and this commission is that the commission makes the general examination not for a particular duty, but the general qualifications of the candidate for the classified clerical service of the Government.

Mr. LONG. Please state what your purpose is in making this change?

Mr. HOLMAN. As far as I am individually concerned—I do not speak for the committee.

Mr. LONG. But you speak for your party.

Mr. FINDLAY. Let me ask the gentleman a question right here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me answer the gentleman from Massachusetts first.

I do not speak for my committee or my party; but for myself there are sufficient reasons which commend themselves to me, and one of the most important is this: The examinations are all made on a general basis. An arbitrary standard is fixed by the commission which a candidate may reach with the necessary attainments; 100 is fixed as the maximum in proficiency. The applicant who reaches that number on the average of all the various subjects of examination—reading, writing, geography, and history, and often more technical—reaches the highest point, then down to 65; and all who fall below 65 are rejected. Now, how does it operate under the present system? The commission will send up the names of four persons who have obtained the highest numbers for appointment—just four. What is the result in practice?

I illustrate by a single case which came within my observation. A young man just entering upon life who had had no particular opportunities for education reaches a grade of 66. A gentleman coming from a school where he had presided as a teacher for many years, and especially qualified to answer the various questions that would be submitted but not as accomplished a penman as the younger man, graded up to 80. His name is sent in at an early day. But it is clear that the young man with his number at 66 would never have his name sent to a Department for an appointment, as the number of those having higher grade was so great that the chances were he would wait indefinitely, and yet for clerical duty, the service required, he might stand higher than any competitor.

Mr. LONG. He could have another examination.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is unjust to the Government, in depriving it of the best service and unjust to the applicant. It will be found that where the names all go before the proper appointing power, the head of a Department or the head of a bureau having the right to appoint a clerk, if it is a copyist that is to be employed, penmanship especially is a matter of consideration, and other matters which have controlled the grading by the commission are of no consequence to the public service. Penmanship is of the highest moment. And here the head of a Department must take a person not so well adapted, and one whose grade is comparatively low, with the accumulations of applicants that must occur in every State, would never have his name go to the Department at all.

I submit the case I put shows an injustice both to the applicant and to the Government. The case is so clear, there should be some remedy.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It is a very direct question, and I know the gentleman from Indiana will answer it with his accustomed candor. My question is this: Is not the main object of this provision to provide for the employment of a greater proportion of Democrats to office?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would have to answer that in a general way in the negative—I mean so far as motives are concerned.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to answer that question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say however, in further reply to the gentleman's question with entire frankness, that if it had that effect, if it admitted members of the party now largely excluded from clerical employment, if it had incidentally the result of increasing the number of appointees from that party, I do not think either the gentleman from Ohio or anybody else could rightfully complain. I should not object to that result, especially in the present state of the classified clerical service of the Departments. But that would be an incident only to a just rule.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do not complain; but what I complain of is that you give reasons that are not the reasons.

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am perfectly content that the result mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] shall follow. But my motive is justice to the applicant for appointment and justice to the Government by a reasonable latitude being given in making selections.

Mr. FINDLAY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended to give me the opportunity of asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am so anxious to close the debate that I do not want an extension of time. But if allowed I will answer the question of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana be allowed to proceed for ten minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Or longer if he wants to.

There being no objection, Mr. HOLMAN'S time was extended for ten minutes.

Mr. FINDLAY. The gentleman from Indiana yields to me for the purpose of asking a question. I think the question asked by my friend from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] was a little too blunt and brusque a question and put too hardly to my friend from Indiana. It appears to me that I could ameliorate the question a little, soften it down and mitigate its asperities.

Mr. HOLMAN. You have not asked your question yet.

Mr. FINDLAY. I ask the gentleman whether the object of his amendment is not to enlarge the scope of choice for a political purpose?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is to enlarge the scope of choice, I admit.

Mr. FINDLAY. For a political purpose?

Mr. HOLMAN. For a governmental purpose and for purposes of even-handed justice.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me first ask my friend from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] a question. Does he think it a proper thing in a Government like ours that a citizen with fair qualifications having passed an examination shall at the age of forty-five be ineligible for appointment?

Mr. FINDLAY. In so far as the forty-five provision is concerned, I am with you. I think a man should be allowed to serve his country, although over forty-five years of age. But the other proposition you are discussing is an entirely different thing. I am opposed to certifying all these eligibles, so as to give the appointing officer the chance of selecting his own partisan.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are you in favor of that for political purposes?

Mr. FINDLAY. Does the gentleman refer to my saying that there should be no limit on the age at which a man should serve his country? I am in favor of that for patriotic purposes.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let me ask the gentleman from Maryland a question. Are you not in favor of Democrats holding office under a Democratic administration?

Mr. FINDLAY. I am in favor of this Government being conducted on the highest principles of honor and honesty, without regard to party.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to explain what I know about this. I ask for order, and then I desire to be heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] for his question.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois had no right to cover a retreat in this way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. I ask that gentlemen resume their seats.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Our friends upon the other side seem to fear that the Democratic majority in this House is seeking some advantage under this civil service law. I think they ought to concede one thing to the Democratic party. Before they accuse us of undue partisanship I think they should be willing to divide the classified service equally with Democrats now that we are in power, and until the classified service is composed to the extent of one half of Democrats, I think they ought to keep perfectly quiet on this subject of civil-service reform. The civil-service law existed for several years before the Democratic party came into control of the National Government, and my observation of its working was that, except in a very few cases, it always resulted in putting Republicans into office.

A MEMBER. Because they had the highest averages.

Mr. SPRINGER. After twenty-five years of Republican control of every department of the Government, when the Democratic party succeeded to power it found every branch of the Government, from the Supreme Court down to the messengers in the Departments, filled with the partisans of one political party, and now I say to my friends on the other side, possess your souls in patience and yield gracefully to the inevitable course of events, which is that until one-half the classified service is given to Democrats we will continue to press you on this point.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Then that is what you are after?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have not been unduly hasty in seeking to get possession of the offices of the Government. Everybody knows that the Railway Mail Service employs several thousand clerks who could be removed at any moment by the Postmaster-General——

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPRINGER (continuing). Yet there have been no unnecessary removals in that service. No removal has been made to disturb the public service, and every removal that has been made has been for the benefit of the service.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, that is not so.

Mr. SPRINGER. I say that every removal made has been for the benefit of the service, and the head of the Department must be the judge of that fact.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Ah!

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, this civil-service law contravenes that great provision of the Constitution which says that the President and the heads of Departments shall make appointments to office, for, by the terms of the law, that power is taken out of the hands in which the Constitution places it and given to a little coterie of four individuals, withdrawn from the public eye and from the public observation, and without knowledge of the requirements of the service for which the appointees are to be selected. My observation in public affairs is that the man who can best make the appointments is the man at the head of the bureau where the service is to be rendered.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to continue that speech, for I consider that it is full of very solid truths. My point of order is that gentlemen are making so much confusion that I am unable to hear it distinctly.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The House will be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I desire to say at this time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; I yield now to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman has yielded to me, I now desire to ask him the question which I desired to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] a while ago.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman evidently wants to do indirectly what he was afraid to do directly.

Mr. TAULBEE. Oh, I am in favor of doing it directly, or indirectly, or any way it can be done. [Laughter.] I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if one object sought to be accomplished by the provisions of this bill contained in lines 440 to 447 is not that individuals over forty-five years of age may have an opportunity to enter the classified civil service if found competent.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is one of the objects.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, as I understand Rule XII of the Civil Service Commission, it prescribes the limit of age and makes age one of the conditions upon which persons may be admitted to the examinations held by that commission. My question, therefore, is: Does this provision, as explained by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], reach the object sought to be accomplished by the bill? It provides that certifications by this commission to the heads of Departments, when vacancies occur, shall be made without regard to age. The natural presumption is that these certifications shall be made from what is known as the eligible register; and under Rule XII of the Civil Service Commission no person can be placed on that register who is beyond the age of forty-five years. Therefore I ask again, Will this provision attain the desired object?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. TAULBEE. Because of the simple fact there is no provision in this bill nor in the rules of the Civil Service Commission that will admit persons to these examinations who are beyond the age of forty-five.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a mere limitation, and this appropriation is made upon the condition that the limitation shall be removed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CANNON rose and was recognized.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire under what rule we are proceeding here?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House as to general debate.

Mr. TAULBEE. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] have an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had a portion of the time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and that has expired.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. That the gentleman may not do at this time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to know under what rule we are now proceeding?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House. The Chair is observing the rules and the practice of the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Was the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] recognized before I was?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was standing waiting to be recognized. The gentleman from Illinois is a member of the committee, and the Chair is observing the practice of the House in recognizing him at this time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to know by what rule the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] when I demanded recognition first?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky had expired, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was recognized.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I was not occupying the floor in my own right, but by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence and attention of the committee during the time I shall occupy, for an appropriation bill is at best a pretty dry subject; and although I might believe myself able to give the committee some information that possibly might be of interest touching the provisions of this bill, the subject is not sufficiently attractive to make me scream in order to do so.

It is the

preparing bills which carry appropriations to conduct the Government to so frame the bills that the interests of the Government will be best subserved. This implies, of course, a knowledge not only of our form of government and of existing law, but of the policy of the Government and its wants, not only in Washington, but throughout the length and breadth of the country; and when a committee commences to prepare any of these bills, especially this one, without being prepared to look over the whole ground and without having an intention honestly to recommend such appropriations under the law as will best subserve the Government, the bill which may be presented as the result of their labors can not be entitled to much consideration.

DUE CONSIDERATION.

I have very great respect for my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations, and I am not here to abuse them now or at any other time during the course of my remarks. But I want to say at the commencement that I do not believe this bill presented by the Committee on Appropriations has received the intelligent, honest, careful, liberal consideration that it should have received before being presented to the House for its action. Having said that much, I want to call the attention of members, before I speak of the details of the bill, to its first clause. I hope I shall have attention while I read it:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—

Now, mark the words—in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed.

I have read this first clause of the bill for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that the words are words that change existing law, and are subject to a point of order under the rules which this House voluntarily adopted at this session of Congress. This is not a matter of opinion. I hold in my hand a decision of the Supreme Court made upon these identical words in a bill passed in the Forty-fourth Congress, the court holding that these words, "in full compensation," if they remain in the bill, are written into the law and fix the compensation of all the officers appropriated for in the bill for the year, although the Revised Statutes, the permanent law, may give a greater or a less salary.

"IN FULL COMPENSATION"

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has it not been the custom of the Committee on Appropriations to insert that language in all the legislative appropriation bills since 1877?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir, such has been the custom. And in each case year by year the Committee on Appropriations has legislated for the ensuing year that the amounts appropriated as salary in the bill should be the legal salary. For instance, take the Auditors in the Treasury Department. The Revised Statutes fix their salaries at $4,000 a year. In this bill $3,600 is appropriated as such salary, and such has been the appropriation in similar bills since 1877. Still the law remains the same, except for one year.

Now, I do not say that I stand here to make a point of order against these words, "in full compensation." But I call the attention of the House to what the bill does, and to the fact that if any gentleman does make the point of order upon these three words which constitute a change of law, then he should follow that point of order with a motion to increase or decrease the salaries of officers to the amounts fixed by the Revised Statutes. Otherwise each officer could go into the Court of Claims and recover the salary provided by permanent law not appropriated in the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does my friend want the words stricken out in order that those officers whose salaries are reduced may go to the Court of Claims?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all; but as the chairman of the subcommittee did not explain the bill in some respects, it is my duty, as I am upon that committee, although in the minority, to explain this bill so far as these various changes of law are concerned, for it is only at this session of Congress that it has been written into your rules that there should be no legislation upon this or any other appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will examine the report presented along with this bill, he will see it was unnecessary for the gentleman from Indiana to touch upon this subject, as every change of existing law embraced in the bill is noted in that report.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman point out—I have read the report—where the words "in full compensation" are included in this report?

Mr. HOLMAN. Every change in the appropriation bill is in that report.

Mr. RANDALL. Under the heading of every department.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. The specific changes from the salaries provided by the current appropriation act are pointed out in the report, but nowhere in the report is the attention of the House called to the change of existing law made in the bill by the insertion of words referred to in the first clause.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish further to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois in his speech, and I only did so for the purpose of calling attention to that fact.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; and you call attention to a fact I am not speaking about. Now the fact I was speaking about is that this legislation "in full compensation" is not referred to in the report at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that a new provision, that it was necessary to call attention to it?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois said that whoever made the point of order on these words would have to follow the bill and make a motion to change and correct it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And restore the salaries which have been reduced.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and to restore the salaries. Now I wish to call attention to the fact there has been no concealment, for it is set forth in each case in the report.

Mr. CANNON. I have been exceedingly unfortunate in making myself understood or my friend from Pennsylvania is not as bright as he is on most occasions.

Mr. RANDALL. Perhaps the latter reason is the right one.

Mr. CANNON. The report does state changes so far as salaries are concerned where they differ from the salary fixed in the appropriation act for the year 1886 ending June of that year, but does not call attention to changes contemplated from salaries fixed by permanent law.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is, over the last law.

Mr. CANNON. This bill, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said, recommends a reduction in appropriations of $811,455.63 under a similar appropriation act for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

There are a good many CHANGES OF SALARIES

in it, notwithstanding the rule of the House. Some are put up and some are put down, and in amount the increases and decreases are substantially equal. There are as many increased as decreased.

Now, the next is the

expiring on the 4th of March, 1887, and there is not so much money needed for the coming fiscal year for the Senate and House as during the present long session. The reduction in the Senate is $35,421.

Senators' clerks are omitted also. You remember the contests we have had over that item for a good many sessions of Congress. Each Senator not chairman of a committee has a clerk payable from the appropriations for this fiscal year. The House has always made the fight against that provision and has not having the courage to demand for itself what it concedes to a coordinate branch of the Legislature. True, we have dropped this item out of the bill for the Senate, but some time between this and the adjournment my Brother HOLMAN will get up and say, after some travail and a great many conferences, the Senate insisted on the item of clerks for Senators and the House was compelled to recede. Sir, with yourself and other members of the House I will get up here and vote to recede, and thus we will tend to make a distinction between the Senate and the House which the Constitution does not make.

The net reduction in the House of Representatives is $27,000 in round numbers. There are some slight increases of salaries in this overburdened House that my friend from Indiana spoke of, and it has to be remembered that there are than there ever were before since the organization of the Government. The bill recommends a decrease of salaries of a few of the House employés. The tally clerk of the House receives this year $3,000, and is cut down by this bill to $2,500. The newspaper clerk is cut down to $1,440, I believe, from $2,000, and two or three other employés are cut down. Then two or three or four are put up a little. Well, what will be the result? Why, when we reach these provisions in the bill those who are put up a little will remain as recommended. We will then by amendment restore the salary of those who are cut down by the bill. But in the mean time it will have gone to the country that my friend from Indiana, Judge HOLMAN, acting for the Committee on Appropriations, has reported a bill to the House of Representatives which contains a reduction of salary of $500 for the tally clerk and $560 for the newspaper clerk, and then we will all be happy. [Laughter.] They who have had their salaries put up will not be sorry, the Committee on Appropriations will not be sorry, because they will have had the credit of making a reduction in the expenditures of the Government, and those who have been reduced in salary will not be sorry, because they will, by amendment, get just as much as they had before. And this is statesmanship! Now, it takes some service on the Committee on Appropriations to learn how to do such things, and as I do not want this committee to be a close corporation I tell you about it.

The next item is expenses and

SALARIES OF COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

The reduction there is $50,000, and that is right. It might have been, I think, possibly $20,000 more. The expenditures for 1885 for collectors of internal revenue were $20,000 less than is recommended in this bill for the coming year. In other words, after you make this reduction of $50,000 for the collectors of internal revenue you still have $20,000 recommended by this bill more than was expended in 1885.

Then the next item of reduction in appropriation is the salary and expenses of gaugers and storekeepers $50,000. The committee might have reduced this item $87,000 more and then it would not have been any less than was expended in the last fiscal year. So these reductions are well enough as there is plenty of margin there.

Again, reductions by transfer to the sundry civil bill on page 50 of this bill of papers, binding, &c., $20,000. Now here comes another reduction: Mint at Philadelphia—for wages of workmen and adjusters and contingent expenses, $75,000. Then for the mint at Carson, wages, workmen, and contingent expenses is stricken out entirely, $114,550. Now, gentlemen, this reduction is not going to do any hurt; and the only wonder to me is that the Committee on Appropriations did not report at least $100,000 more reduction, and I will explain why. You recollect the law that we passed several years ago authorizing the coinage of silver dollars; it contained a permanent appropriation for the coinage of the silver dollar; and whenever this appropriation for coinage falls short the Department resorts to the permanent appropriation, which stands one year after another without reference to our action, and make up the remainder. True, we Republicans in the Forty-seventh Congress had an idea that it was proper to appropriate outright for this purpose, so as to let the country see what amount was expended; but it makes no difference in the amount that will be expended.

The next item of reduction is in the expense of the Utah Commission, $5,000. The committee had as to the propriety of that reduction. Another reduction is in the Quartermaster-General's Office, the agents and clerks, which you will find at page 64 of the bill, $42,020.

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of agents in the Quartermaster-General's Office on account of settlement of claims, there is a decrease of $18,000; quite a large reduction; and right enough, too, for the reason that this is the force that work on the so-called 4th of July claims. You understand what they are. They are nearly all disposed of. For three or four years past we have been reducing this force rapidly, and I hope within a year or two at furthest that business can be entirely closed up.

PENSION OFFICE.

Another decrease is in the salaries of the Pension Office—in the aggregate $145,650; decrease of the per diem and traveling expenses for one hundred and fifty special agents and clerks detailed (page 10 of the report), $70,000; making over $210,000 decrease in the Pension Office. This decrease is explained in the report. In the law for this year making an appropriation for this force it was provided that the places of the first one hundred and fifty clerks that were removed or dropped out of the service in the Pension Office should not be filled. That was made permanent law.

Now, I want to say another thing about this

PENSION OFFICE FORCE.

In the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, in 1882, in the law making appropriation for 1883, we made an appropriation for the force of this Pension Office, increasing it from $900,000 in round numbers to nearly $2,000,000 on an estimate, which I have in my hand, submitted by the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, that if we gave that additional force, multiplying the force by two, doubling it, and half as much more—that in three years the office could dispose of the accumulation of pension cases, and that then the force could be reduced to less than it was before we increased it, namely, a force involving an expenditure of $900,000, Well, the three years—yes, four years—have passed, and this bill recommends an appropriation for the Pension Office for the fifth year, and the only reduction is $210,000 in round numbers. And that is put on in this bill because the law absolutely directed it should be put on. Otherwise it would not have been here, because the estimates for clerical force from the Pension Office come fully up and are a little more than they ever were.

For one I shall not move to

TO DECREASE THE CLERICAL FORCE

in the Pension Office until the Commissioner of Pensions and Secretary of the Interior submit an estimate for decrease, or until a committee of this House makes a thorough inquiry and reports that such decrease can be made without delaying the allowance of pension claims. But while I say that, I want to be exactly fair and to give you my opinion that if this appropriation for clerical force was for any bureau other than the Pension Office the appropriation would be decreased at this session of Congress by at least a million dollars.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. I agree with the gentleman we should be very cautious about reducing the force in the Pension Office. But I will ask him this question, if he does not think we could consistently with the best interests of the Pension Office dispense with the assistant chiefs of divisions, twenty-four of whom are enumerated on page 82 of the bill at $1,800 each?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend from Kentucky, as I said a moment ago, I am not going to move to cut this pension force down until the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior recommend the decrease or until there is an inquiry by Congress intelligent and thorough that shows a decrease could be made and ought to be made. In further answer to the gentleman's question I say that the estimates for the Pension Office ask for an increase rather than a decrease of clerks.

Mr. Chairman, before I pass to the consideration of other matters I feel it my duty to call the attention of the House, as I have heretofore done at this session of Congress, that it is costing in the Pension Office and kindred offices at the rate of and over to transact the business in connection with the allowance and payment of pensions, most of which is spent in assisting or obstructing claimants in the allowance of their claims. The trouble is that we justly owe a great many soldiers of the late war pensions who can not make the technical proof required by the Pension Office to establish their claims.

$5,000,000 PER ANNUM

Sir, it is time for Congress to intervene and by positive enactment clear away the technicalities and obstructions created by the practice of the Pension Office which keep so many men who deserve pensions off the pension-roll. In my opinion no Commissioner of Pensions likely to be appointed will materially modify the regulations and practice, and I fear the tendency on the part of some of the employés of the office is and has been to obstruct or postpone the allowance of claims, for the moment this business is disposed of their occupation is gone and they would have to find other employment. I am calling attention to this matter not to unduly criticise the Commissioner of Pensions or the force under his control, but that this House may understand the responsibility is upon it if this condition of affairs continues.

The Senate of the United States has performed its duty by passing a bill which provides that of the late war who saw three-months' service and was honorably discharged and is or shall become disabled from any cause and is dependent upon his own exertions for support, or upon the contributions of others not legally bound to support him, shall have his name written upon the pension-roll.

The responsibility is upon the House. The Republican side of the House is ready and anxious to pass the bill, and I say to the Democratic side of the House you are in the saddle, you have the majority, and if you fail to pass this bill or assist us to pass it, in my opinion you will and ought to receive the condemnation of the country. If we pass this bill we can in the Pension Office, which now constitutes in one sense a civil pension-list, and pay the money to the men who are entitled to it.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Would not that impose more labor on the Pension Office?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Why not?

Mr. CANNON. Because the proposed act contemplates the placing of every soldier coming within its provisions upon the pension-roll without further proof as to the origin of his disability.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. How much would it cost?

Mr. CANNON. My best information is that it would cost about $10,000,000 a year. Covering about one hundred thousand cases, and averaging the pension at $8 a month, which is about the average of those now on the roll, the amount would be somewhat less than $10,000,000. However, I did not intend to discuss that matter now, and I merely touch it incidentally in passing.

Mr. STEELE. The minimum pension is $4.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, but I am averaging it for the purpose of answering the query of the gentleman from New York.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL.

There is a large reduction made in the office of the Surveyor-General, $45,812. This is the appropriation for survey of the public lands. You gentlemen from the Territories and the newer States will know whether that is wise or not. The committee took the estimate of the Commissioner of the Land Office, who recommended this reduction, and wrote it bodily into the bill.

The assay office at Saint Louis is dropped out entirely $6,500. The contingent of the Treasury Department is reduced $18,000, properly, I think, because for the fiscal year 1885 they did not spend more than the amount recommended in the bill.

In the office of the publications of the Records of the Rebellion there is a reduction of $9,200, which I presume is proper, as that work is well under way.

BUREAU OF LABOR.

I wish now to refer to one or two matters in which I think there ought to be an increase of appropriation. One is the Labor Bureau. As gentlemen know, that bureau is organized this year for the first time. The first report of the Commissioner has just been ordered to be printed, and those who have seen advance sheets speak very highly of it. Gentlemen all understand who the Commissioner of Labor is, a man of national reputation, formerly at the head of the labor bureau in the State of Massachusetts. I have met him occasionally, and I want to say that I believe he is the right man in the right place. What we want of the Labor Bureau is not this man's theories or that man's theories, but facts. We can make our own theories, but we require facts, and this gentleman I think is intelligently, earnestly, and industriously engaged in collecting facts. This year for the first time he submits an estimate for a force and an appropriation. His estimate in round numbers is for about $90,000. The committee recommend less than half that sum. The chief of the Labor Bureau was before us and made a wonderfully clear and effective statement of what he intended to do.

LETTER FROM COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

And I send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the letter written by him to the Secretary of the Interior, which outlines the work that he proposes to do during the next fiscal year if the money recommended to be appropriated in the supplemental estimates of the Secretary of the Interior, which I can not this instant lay my hand upon, should be voted by Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF LABOR.
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend the following investigations for the second annual report of this bureau:

1. An investigation into the number, causes, duration, results, and other features of all strikes occurring in the United States since and including the year 1881.

2. An investigation into the hours of labor, wages paid, method of payment, tours of duty, the condition, &c., of railway employés on all railroad systems in the United States.

3. An investigation as to the kind and the amount of work performed in the penal institutions of the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, the methods under which convicts are or may be employed in such institutions, and as to all the facts pertaining to convict labor and its influence upon the industries of the country.

4. An investigation into the distribution of products, the cost of producing and distributing such products, so far as the leading articles of consumption are concerned, tracing each article from its production to its consumption, and gathering all the facts as to cost and methods of distribution.

5. An investigation into the employment, wages, condition, &c., of the women workers of great cities.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CARROLL D. WRIGHT, Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. CANNON. Members who have given attention to the reading of that letter will see that the investigation which this Commissioner proposes to make with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior is a broad one.

Mr. ROMEIS. Why do you cut down that estimate?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Ohio asks why we cut that down. Is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in the House? [Laughter.] Well, suffice it to say that the majority of the Committee on Appropriations refused to allow the amount of the estimate, and cut it down over one-half. I think, without mentioning any names, that the view of some statesmen upon that committee is that it is well, where they do not agree as to the policy of the law, to regulate it by refusing appropriations or giving small appropriations. Now, I do not say there is any member of that committee who does not recognize the value of the work of this Bureau of Labor; but I do say that the majority of that committee, after full discussion in the subcommittee and in the full committee, so far as I am allowed to refer to the matter, refused to increase the appropriation beyond that named in the bill. I gave notice then, as I give notice now, that when this item is reached in Committee of the Whole, I shall move to

APPROPRIATE THE FULL AMOUNT

of the estimate; because, I say again, what we want is facts. Various questions are pressing upon us with great force for solution. The country, with its population of 60,000,000 or 65,000,000, is rapidly growing; our industries are diversified; we have half of the railroads in the world; our wageworkers are increasing by hundreds and thousands every year; and as matters growing out of these industries press for solution there must be action by Congress, action by State Legislatures, action by the force of public opinion. And what we want is education, not only for the laboring men but for the men who do not labor. We want the facts honestly gathered and intelligently collated, so that we may have reliable data, and when we come to legislate, when we come to form public opinion, which is higher and greater than legislation, legislation can be had and public opinion formed in the light of facts which are unquestioned; and these facts we must gather ourselves if we would obtain them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman allow me to inquire whether the attention of the committee was called fully to the objects and necessity of this proposed investigation?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman so far as it is proper for me to do so without stating what took place in the committee-room. The Commissioner, Mr. Wright, was before the subcommittee, and we had a long sitting and a very interesting one.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If he was before the committee, I have no doubt the objects and purposes and necessity of this investigation were fully laid before the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And after they had been so laid before the committee the majority cut down the estimate?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say the amount reported in the bill is a little less than one-half the estimate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want the country to know that. That is all.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think the majority of the House, when this amendment is offered in Committee of the Whole, will agree to appropriate the amount of the estimate. I intend to give the House a chance to do it by offering the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If you do not, I will.

NULLIFICATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE LAW.

Mr. CANNON. I come now to speak of the provision in this bill changing the civil-service law. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore against the rule. Our Democratic committee insert the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission and then put a limitation on the use of the money.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In other words, they boycott the law.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; that is it. The clause referred to appropriates the money for the salaries and expense of the Civil Service Commission, and then follows the proviso. It is in these words:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only when the rules of the Civil Service Commission are so framed as that the names of all applicants for official appointment from any one State, found duly qualified on examination, and without regard to age, shall be sent to the head of a Department or other officer charged with making an appointment.

Now, before the money appropriated can be used for the support of the Civil Service Commission, the President must, under this proviso, modify their rules so as to send in the names of all those who have passed an examination, without reference to age.

The gentleman from Indiana claims that these rules have not the binding force of law. That claim can not be successfully made. Let gentlemen refer to section 2 of the civil-service act, where it is provided that—

It shall be the duty of said commissioners to aid the President as he may request in preparing suitable rules for carrying this act into effect.

I will not read it all.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Indiana proposes to induce the commissioners to change their rule by presenting to them the argument that if they do not change it they will get no money.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is only arguing with them; that is all.

Mr. CANNON. It is pretty much such an argument as was addressed to me by my schoolmaster when I was a little fellow and wanted to play hooky. He said to me, "Young man, go in or you will do without your dinner." I went in. [Laughter.] It was a little forcible persuasion, that is all; but it was effective. And in reply to the gentleman from Maine I will say I have no doubt this Civil Service Commission, if this law be passed as recommended by the committee, will modify their rules and take their salaries, or rather the President will modify the rules.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. They are human.

Mr. CANNON. There are two sections of the statutes which authorize the President to make these rules, and under the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States in reference to the Army regulations, where the power is not so clear as the power conferred upon the President to make the rules here, all gentlemen understand those Army regluations have been declared to have the force and effect of law by the courts. So, then, if this provision is written into this appropriation bill by this House of Representatives it will be because you do it in defiance of the rule which prohibits riders on appropriation bills.

Mr. Chairman, at the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, in 1883, when both the House and Senate were Republican, was passed in the Senate under the lead of Senator Pendleton, and we passed it with a rush through the House, the Democratic side of the House, under the lead of Mr. Cox, of New York, supporting it with great fervor.

THIS CIVIL-SERVICE LAW

President Arthur appointed the commission and the law was put in force. The object was give a more certain tenure to those employés in the service holding clerical positions, and to select persons for appointment in such public service according to merit from the different States, and without regard to the politics of the appointees. The rules were adopted in good faith to put the law in force by President Arthur. One of these rules provides that where there is a vacancy, the head of the Department shall notify the Civil Service Commission, whereupon the commission shall send the names of four persons who passed the highest examination from the State entitled to the appointment, from which one shall be selected by the head of the Department for appointment. It was contemplated by the law and regulations that the politics of the applicants should not be known and should not be considered in making the appointments, and will not be if the law is executed in good faith.

The Civil Service Commission states in its report made last January that the law has been fairly enforced. I am satisfied in the main this is true and that it will be found wherever it is not true that it has been under the operation of some special rule not in harmony with the system of rules.

DEMOCRATS DO NOT APPROVE OF CIVIL SERVICE.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that Democrats generally do not approve of the civil-service law, or its enforcement, and that generally Democratic Representatives want the law so enforced or changed that Democrats will be appointed to these positions to the exclusion of all others, and that too without regard to comparative merit. To give force to that sentiment the provision under consideration is to be placed as a rider upon the appropriation of money for the salary of the civil-service commissioners. So that when there is an appointment to be made, and the Civil Service Commission is notified, it shall send up forty, fifty, or a hundred names, all the names it has on the list from the State entitled, from which list the selection of one is made for appointment, and then information can be given as to which is the Democrat in the list that is agreeable to the Democratic member or Senator and he can be appointed.

This would be a nullification, a destruction of the law, and much worse than its direct repeal.

This is not a matter of speculation. I have the direct proof at hand that such would be the case. For several years past we have authorized the appointment of one hundred and fifty special pension examiners, the law providing each year they should be authorized and appointed only for that year, the expectation being each year that they would finish their work and go out of the service, but so far that expectation has not been realized. In practice from year to year these special examiners have been reappointed.

POLITICS A QUALIFICATION.

My fellow-townsman and constituent, General Black, was appointed Commissioner of Pensions last year, and I notice it is reported in the papers that in the investigation before the Senate committee he testified that out of seventy-four or seventy-five new appointees designated by him this fiscal year all but three or four were Democrats and that he did not know the politics of the three or four. Now this could not happen under the rule we have been discussing, but I find that the appointments of special examiners were not made under that rule, but under a special rule substantially the same as is proposed to make universal by the rider on this bill.

The names of all the applicants who had passed the examination were sent to the Commissioner of Pensions, thus giving him the chance to select Democrats only for appointment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If the whole list is sent up, and other things are equal, and the administration can get a good man and one of its own friends, what objection can the gentleman have to that one being appointed?

Mr. CANNON. I will give an answer to the gentleman from Iowa, and after a while I will treat the question more fully. It is because your party almost unanimously helped enact this civil-service law, and so long as it remains upon the statute-book let it be fairly and fully enforced as every officer takes an oath to support it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The object of the civil-service law was not, as I understand, to appoint either Republicans or Democrats.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It was not to divide the appointments between members of the two parties and has no reference to politics whatever.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I say, then, if other things are equal, what objection can there be to the administration appointing its own friends from among the number of those who have passed a suitable examination?

Mr. CANNON. I will say that a fair construction of this law and the rules made under it as long as it remains upon the statute-books prevents any officer of the Government from inquiring the politics of any man who comes for appointment. Now, I wish to give the gentleman a broader answer than that, and I can do it.

You elected in 1884 a President——

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. You mean in 1876.

Mr. CANNON. Oh; well, if the gentleman wants to go back to 1876, so be it. I am discussing this proposed legislation; and if the gentleman does not want to fairly discuss it, and wants to switch off to a political question and discuss that all along the line, I will be with him, if he will yield me some of his time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have not intended to switch the gentleman off, but I want an answer to that question.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will decline to be interrupted for the present, say for the next five minutes, while I answer the gentleman's question.

You elected a President in 1884 upon a civil-service platform. He is the head of your party, and I am inclined to think the most popular man with the country in your party. However, that is not saying a great deal for him; and however much I may regard him and you personally, I have a poor opinion of you all politically. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEACH. There is no love lost.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. You know from your own experience how mean politics are.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire to be interrupted for the present. Soon after Mr. Cleveland's election, and before he was inaugurated, this letter was addressed to him by George William Curtiss and others:

LETTER FROM GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS AND OTHERS.

NATIONAL CIVIL SERVICE REFORM LEAGUE,
OFFICE, NO. 4 PINE STREET.
New York, December 20, 1884.

SIR: We have the honor to address you on behalf of the National Civil Service Reform League, an association composed of citizens of all parties, whose sole purpose is indicated by its name, and which takes no part whatever in any party controversy.

The vast increase in the number of persons engaged in the civil service and the grave mischief and danger arising from the general proscription in the service which for half a century has followed the change of party control of the national administration have produced so profound an impression upon the public mind that the first effective steps toward reform were taken with the co-operation of both parties in the passage of the reform act of January 16, 1883.

The abuses which that act seeks to correct, however, are so strongly entrenched in the tradition and usage of both parties that there is naturally widespread anxiety lest the party change in the national Executive, effected by the late election, should show them to be insuperable. But, believing as we do, that the reform system can not be held to be securely established until it has safely passed the ordeal of such a party change, and recalling with satisfaction and confidence your public expressions favorable to reform, and your official acts as the chief executive of the State of New York, we confidently commend this cause to your patriotic care in the exercise of the great power with which the American people have intrusted you.

Respectfully yours,

HON. GROVER CLEVELAND.

A few days after, Mr. Cleveland addressed this letter in reply:

ALBANY, December 25, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Your communication, dated December 20, addressed to me on behalf of the National Civil Service Reform League, has been received.

That a practical reform in the civil service is demanded is abundantly established by the fact that a statute, referred to in your communication, to secure such a result has been passed in Congress with the assent of both political parties, and by the further fact that a sentiment is generally prevalent among patriotic people calling for the fair and honest enforcement of the law which has thus been enacted. I regard myself pledged to this because my conception of true Democratic faith and public duty requires that this and all other statutes should be in good faith and without evasion enforced, and because in my utterances made prior to my election as President, approved by the party to which I belong and which I have no disposition to disclaim, I have in effect promised the people that this should be done.

I am not unmindful of the fact to which you refer, that many of our citizens fear that the recent party change in the national Executive may demonstrate that the abuses which have grown up in the civil service are ineradicable. I know that they are deeply rooted, and that the spoils system has been supposed to be intimately related to success in the maintenance of party organization, and I am not sure that all those who profess to be the friends of this reform will stand firmly among its advocates when they find it obstructing their way to patronage and place.

But fully appreciating the trust committed to my charge, no such consideration shall cause a relaxation on my part of an earnest effort to enforce this law.

There is a class of Government positions which are not within the letter of the civil-service statute, but which are so disconnected with the policy of an administration that the removal therefrom of present incumbents, in my opinion, should not be made during the terms for which they were appointed solely on partisan grounds and for the purpose of putting in their places those who are in political accord with the appointing power.

But many now holding such positions have forfeited all just claims to retention because they have used their places for party purposes in disregard of their duty to the people, and because instead of being decent public servants they have proved themselves offensive partisans and unscrupulous manipulators of local party management.

The lessons of the past should be unlearned, and such officials, as well as their successors, should be taught that efficiency, fitness, and devotion to public duty are the conditions of their continuance in public place, and that the quiet and unobtrusive exercise of individual political rights is the reasonable measure of their party service.

If I were addressing none but party friends I should deem it entirely proper to remind them that, though the coming administration is to be Democratic, a due regard for the people's interest does not permit faithful party work to be always rewarded by appointment to office, and to say to them that while Democrats may expect all proper consideration, selections for office not embraced within the civil-service rules will be based upon sufficient inquiry as to fitness, instituted by those charged with that duty, rather than upon persistent importunity or self-solicited recommendations on behalf of candidates for appointment.

Yours, very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

HON. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, President, &c.

Afterward he was inaugurated, and there were more expressions of devotion to the civil-service act. Not only was the civil-service law to be enforced in good faith, but its vitality and spirit was to pervade the policy of the President as to other offices not in the letter of the civil-service act and regulations. Yet, Mr. Chairman, two months did not pass by until one of the members of his Cabinet issued a circular, not in open day to let the full, bright noonday light shine upon it, but "confidentially," in which he invited Democrats who wanted office, and that took in pretty much all the party [laughter], to make charges of offensive partisanship or other charges against such persons as they wanted to get out of office, and in proof of same file ex parte affidavits, secretly obtained, which since that time have been zealously guarded, so that they should not see the light of day so far as the public is concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. There is only one mistake about that letter and that was the word "confidential."

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the gentleman that was not commendable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. In regard to the time I would like to say——

Mr. RANDALL. I would not let a public officer do anything that the light of day could not see, or which was not permitted every man to see the next day in the public press.

Mr. CANNON. I agree with my friend from Pennsylvania in that. It was not fair dealing; it went upon its mission in secrecy.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be given additional time.

Mr. RANDALL. Give the gentleman from Illinois all the time he wants, say thirty minutes. There will be no difficulty about the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I will yield to my friend presently. I want to complete my answer to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. Chairman, that confidential circular that was ashamed to look fair men in the face was, in my opinion, intended to bring such charges of offensive partisanship and other charges against officials as would enable the Postmaster-General to turn them out without giving them a chance to be heard and at the same time not offend the independent friends of the President or embarrass the President on account of the letter he had written to them in December previous. The result was, in almost every town, village, and hamlet the smut machines were set in motion, and the product that was ground out served as a basis for action and is now concealed in the files of the Departments. I trust the time will come when the files will be cleansed and disinfected.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understand that no honorable Democrat has taken advantage of that order. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. "No honorable Democrat," but all the rest did. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. HENLEY. That is equivalent to saying that nobody has taken notice of it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The law can not take any notice of so small a list.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, keeping in view the civil-service law, the letters and messages of the President, and the confidential circular of the Postmaster-General, what next do we find? We find General Black, Commissioner of Pensions, by his own testimony apparently keeping within the letter of the civil-service law in the designation of special pension examiners, deliberately disregarding and violating the law in spirit. "The letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive."

What is the President to do? Nothing?

Mr. STEELE. He gets married. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. And goes a-fishing.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Do you or do you not call getting married nothing? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the operation of this special rule in the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions produces partisan appointments in the classified civil service. The Democratic Committee on Appropriations, by the provision—the rider—on this bill, proposes to make that special rule, producing such results, the general rule touching all appointments under the civil-service law. Does the Democratic House feel called upon to enact this provision so as to relieve the President from embarrassment—that President who so far has made no protest against the nullification of the civil-service law by his Commissioner of Pensions or Secretary of the Interior?

Is this provision placed upon the bill at the request of the President? Are these appointments made under the care of General Black—the President's subordinate—in pursuance of the President's pledge in his letter to Mr. Curtis and others, "that this and all other statutes should be in good faith and without evasion enforced?"

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask my friend from Illinois if General Black, Commissioner of Pensions. has appointed any special examiner not certified to him by the Civil Service Commission? Does he not in every instance, when there is an office to be filled, call upon that commission and they certify the names?

Mr. CANNON. I said, if the gentleman had done me the honor to listen to my remarks, that the appointments are professedly under the civil-service act. But all the names were sent up, and as the result of those appointments the Commissioner of Pensions testifies himself, as reported in the papers, that seventy out of seventy-four were Democrats.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me ask my colleague——

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish this matter and then I will yield. I am not here attacking General Black personally. I am here attacking him for his official action in connection with the enforcement of the civil-service law; and I am here to call attention to the declarations of the President of the United States, and to show how the President of the United States stands quietly by saying, "Good Lord, help me to enforce this act," all the while asseverating that he is enforcing it in good faith, while he permits his subordinate to drive through it with a four-horse team, and then back again, in full light of the noonday sun.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Illinois this question. Among all the special examiners found in the service when the present Commissioner of Pensions took office will the gentleman name a single one who was a Democrat? In other words, is it not the fact that all the special examiners selected under this pretended civil-service reform law were Republicans—not a single Democrat among them?

Mr. CANNON. I answer my friend, so far as I have knowledge, in the negative. I understand that a portion of them were Democrats.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Among the special examiners?

Mr. CANNON. I so understand.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand there was not a single Democrat among the special examiners.

Mr. CANNON. I am assured by gentlemen all around me that there were. But I do not care whether there were or not. My friend, as usual, when I attempt in good faith to discuss a question of national policy showing what the law is and what is the practice under that law, resorts to his ordinary tactics of attempting to show the Republican party or somebody else did something as bad as the matter to which attention is being called. That does not prove anything. If that was true as regards the Republican party under this law it was wrong. But does their wrong action justify his administration in doing wrong, especially when it is so zealous in pretension?

Mr. SPRINGER. Did my colleague [Mr. CANNON] condemn it when his party were doing the wrong?

Mr. MORRISON. Oh! we are expected to be better. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. One word in conclusion touching this civil-service matter. I am asked if I object that you, being in the majority, feel it is your duty to repeal this civil-service law and to go back to the old system. You are the judges. But I want you to march up like men and vote to repeal that act. Do not undertake to do it surreptitiously. Do not undertake to nullify it. Do not undertake to put a rider on an appropriation bill and starve it to death; that is not the manly way to do it. Have the courage of your convictions. Do not attempt to say to the Civil Service Commission, "Unless you nullify the law you shall not have the money." Bring in your bill and repeal the law, if you have votes enough. That is the manly way to do it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will answer the question I proposed to him a while ago.

Mr. CANNON. I will if I have time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Trusting that the House may be as indulgent to me, I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend has spoken about the appropriation for the Labor Bureau.

Mr. CANNON. I would rather that my friend would let me finish this matter of the civil service, and then I will come back to the Labor Bureau.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman can put this where he pleases. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that the appropriation for that bureau for the present year was $40,000, while the appropriation for the coming year is $53,220; $13,220 more than the appropriation of the current year. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes. I stated all that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understood the gentleman to say that we had cut down the estimates one-half.

Mr. CANNON. Substantially one-half.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Therefore, I think it is very proper that the gentleman from Indiana should show that we have increased the amount.

Mr. CANNON. This Labor Bureau has never been in existence before this year, and this is the first year that it has presented any estimate. The bureau comes now, at the end of its first year, as directed by us, and tells us that it requires $90,000, and you refuse it and give only about half as much.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to call the attention of my associate [Mr. CANNON] to the fact that Mr. Wright, the Labor Commissioner, came before the committee, in view of the disturbed condition of the country presenting new subjects for investigation, and presented a supplemental estimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. We appropriated $25,000 to begin with, and then $15,000——

Mr. CANNON. Now I want to be fair about this civil-service act. I was in Congress at the time it passed, and I voted for it. I had very grave doubts whether it would result in good; but it was the sense of a majority of the Republicans, and of the other side of the House almost unanimously, that the experiment ought to be tried, and I voted for it. I want to say, further, that this act applies substantially to but fourteen thousand of the one hundred and twenty thousand officials in this country—those fourteen thousand being nearly all engaged in clerical service. I know there is a general impression throughout the length and breadth of the country that it applies to all the offices, and I know a great many gentlemen find it easy when their constituents come to them (now that they have come into their kingdom) for offices, and when there is not more than one office for every two hundred applicants—I know, I say, that they find it easy to sit back and damn the civil-service law. [Laughter.] That is the easiest way to get out of it. Still the fact remains that the law applies to only from 12 to 15 per cent. of the offices, though undoubtedly much of its unpopularity with Democratic office-seekers results from the belief that it controls substantially all the offices.

I want to say further that I have been agreeably surprised at the operation of this civil-service act, applied as it has been merely to the people holding clerical positions. We all understand what it means to hold a position of that kind in one of the Departments here at Washington or in the great offices of the Government. A man falls into a groove, he is isolated from his home, if he has a profession he forgets it, if he has not he very rarely gets one, he goes around in the tread-mill month after month and year after year. If I had a boy I would rather he should work at $10 a month than come here and take one of these positions—I was going to say I would rather see him dead. In a short time most of these employés get so that they have no politics.

The experience has been that a large percentage of the clerical force has changed politics almost as quickly as the administration has changed. Yet these clerks in the main perform their work well. Many of them have first-rate ability for the work they have to do. Now, if this law was properly backed up and supplemented by an honest effort to improve it, I believe that in the end it would do great good; but has there been any investigation made with a view to improving it? No. With this law upon the statute-book, with the clerks and employés in the great offices of the Government to which they were formerly subject under all parties, and holding their places so long as they give satisfaction, they can afford to do better work and for a less price than was formerly paid them; and, after considerable investigation of the subject, having for six years assisted in the preparation of the legislative appropriation bill, I state it as my deliberate opinion that if the Committee on Appropriations, intending in good faith to carry out this civil-service law, had commenced in December last inquiring all along the line as to the wants of the public service and had discovered where salaries could be decreased because of the permanency of the positions and relief from assessments heretofore imposed, the character of the service in the Departments and the great offices of the Government might have been improved and at the same time the cost reduced fully 25 per cent. But has there been any disposition to make that kind of an investigation? No. On the contrary a disposition has been manifested to indirectly repeal this law, without the House having the courage to do it directly. I do not believe the law will be repealed. I believe it should not be repealed.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you believe that all persons who wish to enter the postal service of the United States, which is classified, should be excluded on the ground of age if they are over thirty-five years old, or that persons desiring to enter the customs service should be excluded if they are over forty-five?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that the railway-mail service is not under the civil-service law.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that under the regulations as to the "classified postal service" a man is excluded if he is over thirty-five years of age.

Mr. PETERS. A man over that age can not stand the work.

Mr. RANDALL. Without regard to mental or physical capacity, he is not allowed to be examined for that service.

Mr. CANNON. The railway-postal service is not under the operation of the civil-service law, and never was. If there be a regulation of the Post-Office Department on this subject which is objectionable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, let him go to the Postmaster-General and get the rule modified. The law is silent as to age.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will permit, I will have the rule read.

Mr. PETERS. The experience of the Post-Office Department has demonstrated that an applicant for such a position if over thirty-five years of age is not available—can not stand the work.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the rule be read.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. No one shall be examined for admission to the classified postal service if under sixteen or over thirty-five years of age, excepting messengers, stampers, and other junior assistants, who must not be under fourteen years of age; or to the classified customs service, or to the classified departmental service, if under eighteen or over forty-five years of age; but no one shall be examined for appointment to any place in the classified customs service, except that of clerk or mrssenger, who is under twenty-one years of age; but these limitations of age shall not apply to persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the country, who are otherwise duly qualified.

Mr. RANDALL. Those rules with regard to the "classified postal service" apply, as I understand, to all offices where the employés exceed fifty.

Mr. CANNON. So I understand.

Mr. RANDALL. There is as to that "classified postal service" this disqualification: No man who is over thirty-five, whatever may be his mental or physical capacities, can enter the service in any of the post-offices of the country where there are more than fifty employés.

A MEMBER. Except those who have served in the Army.

Mr. RANDALL. They are excepted, of course, and properly so.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would remind him that he is now talking about an entirely different service from that which he spoke of in the first instance.

Mr. RANDALL. I am talking about applicants for office and about the regulations which disqualify for these places a large body of American citizens, without reference to their mental capacity or physical strength.

Mr. CANNON. The rule, as he says, applies to clerks in post-offices where there are more than fifty employés. It does not apply to railway postal clerks.

Mr. RANDALL. I never said that it did. I know that it applies in the post-office in my city.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say again that if these rules need modification let a Democratic President, who professes to have a regard for the law and is in harmony with the other side of the House, modify them. I wish to repeat, as I said a moment ago, that an honest enforcement of this law, re-enforced by an intelligent appropriation, would, I am satisfied, enable us to decrease the cost of the service 25 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman, but I asked him whether he was in favor of this restriction as to age. He has not answered that question, but has referred it to Mr. Cleveland as the Chief Executive of the country.

Mr. CANNON. I will reply to the gentleman. There are some men over thirty-five who are perfectly competent for clerkships; there are some men over sixty and some over seventy who would make good clerks. But there should be some general rule, and all rules work a hardship in some cases. Perhaps the age of thirty-five is too young to be fixed as the limit. The President has full power to change the rule in this or any other respect.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman think that such a provision, when applied to men such as I have named, who are entirely qualified, is indefensible?

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will allow me, I would like to suggest that if my observation is correct the civil-service law has not affected very seriously the post-office in the city of my colleague, Philadelphia——

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BAYNE. Wait one moment. The fact, as I understand, is that since the nomination and appointment of the Democratic postmaster at Philadelphia, Mr. Harrity, there have been about sixty changes made in that post-office under the civil-service law; and, if the public prints are correct in their statement of the affair, every one of the sixty who passed the examination and was accepted into that office under the civil-service law was a Democrat.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever the gentleman relies on his own knowledge and states it as fact I will answer him. But he must not take up the statements of a partisan press and retail them here as facts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say without equivocation that I am advised Mr. Harrity has in no instance avoided or disregarded the civil-service law. Nor has he in any way acted except in harmony with that law.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not say that Mr. Harrity has, but it is a remarkable conjuncture of circumstances. My colleague has no reason to complain of the civil-service law as affecting his district. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have the men who have grown up in the doctrines of the Democratic cause considered when applications for office come up. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has expired.

Mr. McCOMAS. The country has experienced fifteen months of Democratic rule. Congress has been in session six months. The party in power is not agreed on any question in which the people take a rational interest. On questions of currency, the coinage, the civil-service law, the internal revenue, the remedy for illiteracy, interstate commerce, the tariff, there is open antagonism in the ranks of the administration party. To this discord and the utter helplessness of the party in power is due much of the discontent and depression in the country.

All legislation may—the most important, the raising of the revenue, the appropriation of money, must, originate in this House.

The Democratic party controlling this House and the Presidency are responsible to the people for what is done and left undone. With no fixed policy on current questions and a fatal facility for taking the wrong side of new questions, the experiment of trusting it with power is a failure. It has not risen to the responsibility of a governing party.

The President appears to lack confidence in his party. The majority in this House in many ways has shown that it does not trust the President. Heretofore it repudiated his sound recommendation about coinage.

The bill we are considering has a rider which will abrogate the civil-service law which he commends.

This proviso to the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission is contrived to starve that commission into a surrender to the spoilsmen. Instead of sending to the appointing power from the list of any State the four highest names with the right to select one, hereafter the commission must send all the names of all the applicants who passed examination with the right to select one. If the Commissioners refuse to nullify the law, they can not draw their pay.

You propose to starve out competitive examinations and substitute pass examinations, and by attaching the rider to this bill you declare that you are ready to starve out the executive, judicial, and legislative functionaries of the Government, to nullify the civil-service law. Of course from the twelve hundred names now on the lists only Democrats urged by Senators, Members, and powerful Democratic leaders would be selected. Influence, not merit, would determine all appointments. Twelve thousand Democrats would soon be on the lists. Only Democrats need then apply. When my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOLMAN] who has charge of this bill discloses his purpose to equalize the offices between the parties he plans to have none but Democrats appointed. When he announces that politics, not merit, must control, it is hypocrisy to retain the forms of the law. It would be more manly to attack the law openly. If this proviso be carried the spoils system is thereby restored in all the Departments. The civil-service rules now cover only one-eighth of the offices. The Democrats all over the country are rapidly, steadily getting all the rest. Pass this proviso, and the machinery of the commission becomes a useless expense. Let my colleague as a true economist follow up his advantage. Let him abolish the commission and their clerks, for their offices will be sinecures.

Let us go back to the passing of this law under a Republican administration.

When that able and sagacious statesman and diplomat, Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, presented the civil-service bill as it had passed the Senate, Democrats incontinently trod on each other's robes as they rushed to prostrate themselves before the new idol of civil-service reform.

I read from the RECORD:

> Mr. COX, of New York. Now I propose in good faith to my friend from Iowa [Mr. Kasson], inasmuch as there has been already an extended debate on this bill in the Senate, that we may forego the debate in this House and at once put the bill on its passage.
> Members on both sides of the House. That is right. ["Vote!" "Vote!"]

Why do you desert the colors now? Why do you now say, "give us a clean sweep, and away with the Mugwumps?"

Mr. NEECE. I do assert that the rule is wrong that gives any preference to any one class of the people over another; that would put in a lot of school-teachers and exclude others.

Mr. McCOMAS. I say if there be a discrimination in favor of intelligence and against mere party service, if there be a discrimination in favor of capacity as against mere obligation to leaders here or elsewhere, that discrimination is far less objectionable and far better for the country. If the gentleman objects that the most of the school-teachers are in my party, so much the better for the Republican party.

What an extraordinary spectacle! Within sixty days the President transmitted to Congress the third report of this commission, approving its suggestions to extend the civil-service rules to additional offices, and commended the system to the liberal care and jealous protection of Congress. To-day his party friends are trying to starve out the commission by a rider on this appropriation bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McCOMAS. I will yield for a question only.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Where do you find any such change as you assert? Point out, if you can, wherein this provision of law changes the present civil-service rules so far as the qualifications are concerned; and that is the chief point in it.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why, that is just the very thinnest pretense, and I say it with all respect, that I have ever heard on this floor. This proviso substitutes pass examinations for competitive examinations, and the competitive feature is the essence of the law.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Will you answer the question?

Mr. McCOMAS. The gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill has said that if the effect of this is to be an equalization of the offices and put in more Democrats he will be glad. That is the real purpose of the proviso, to put in Democrats only, and that will be its effect.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I am sorry the gentleman from Maryland feels called upon to come to this side of the House for his authority. I did not apply to the gentleman from Indiana for information, but to him.

Mr. McCOMAS. Why, this says that after a mere pass examination to get on the list the appointing power may select at will every Democrat of the whole number who worked for my friend in New York, every one who aided in circulating the placards of Burchard's speech all over the State to help elect Mr. Cleveland President, who worked for the party in New York in that campaign; every one of these Democrats who has sufficient intelligence to pass the examination may be put upon the rolls to displace that many Republicans.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Would the civil-service board pass them?

Mr. McCOMAS. They would be compelled to pass if qualified, and the names of Democrats only would swell the list of eligibles and would be sent in by the thousands to the appointing power from the list for my friend's State. No, Mr. Chairman, it is too plain. The sole purpose of this proviso is to nullify the civil-service rules.

I speak not for the Republicans in office. They are rapidly decreasing. While they remain in place they are of no benefit to their party. I have no concern for those who, to keep their places, have abjured their party faith. For my party's sake it were far better if all Republicans were turned out of office in a day. But this question rises above party. I plead for the civil-service rules under all administrations in the interest of the people. When honestly enforced these rules have worked admirably in their limited scope. When ignored bad results have followed.

In my own State in all parties there is a growing sentiment in favor of this reform. Under this administration, in Maryland as elsewhere, it has been weakened, evaded, perverted, abused, but these very failures demonstrate its vitality.

Mr. COMPTON. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COMPTON. Will my colleague be good enough to tell us when and where the civil-service law has been evaded in the State of Maryland, and by whom?

Mr. McCOMAS. I will say to my colleague that the question which he puts to me in all kindness shows he himself was so engrossed in the occupations with which he is busied, and the cares for an anxious constituency who throng the corridors seeking office, that he has not had time to read the account of the meeting at Baltimore the other day, and how the late postmaster at Baltimore, in personal character and efficiency in office worthy of high praise, was charged publicly by the Civil Service Society in that city, in the presence of Mr. Lyman, one of the Civil-Service Board, with having called for the whole list of eligibles for the purpose of appointing Democrats only under the civil-service rules; and the late postmaster is reported in the Democratic press to have confessed he had made quite a clean sweep of Republicans, and appeared proud to have left his successor an office nearly Democratic. Every one at that meeting, and the press, Republican and Democratic, concluded there had been an evasion of the civil-service law. The best of the Democrats admitted it; that it had been beautifully worked so that the Democrats should get in and nobody else.

Mr. COMPTON rose.

Mr. McCOMAS. Not yet. I say again to my colleague with all respect if he will go with me from those mountains which I love, and wherein the President now lingers, through our whole State and down to Worcester to the sands of the ocean, I will on the journey overwhelm him with Democrats who will complain that the administration of the civil service with its Higginses and Thomases, and its evasions of the spirit and letter of the law, is such that they have come to regard it as a mere farce to talk about the civil service reform of this country. Now what is my colleague's further question?

Mr. COMPTON. The gentleman has by no means given a square answer to my question.

Mr. McCOMAS. What is the second question? I have specifically answered your first question.

Mr. COMPTON. I do not propose to ask a second question. I wish to say this in reply to what my colleague has said about the evasion of the civil-service-reform law in Maryland. As to the Higginses and Thomases, they are not civil-service officers and have nothing to do with this question.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is not a question, but an argument. I yielded for a question.

Mr. COMPTON. I think the gentleman will find if he will turn to the columns of the Baltimore Sun, in which the investigation to which he has referred is reported, he will there find, not by a Democratic, but by an independent, fearless paper, the declaration clearly made that Mr. Veazie was not sat down upon by the Civil Service Commission, but, on the contrary, maintained himself, and his conduct as postmaster of Baltimore, to the entire satisfaction of all the fair-minded people of that city.

Mr. McCOMAS. I yielded only that my colleague might ask his question, and that I might state what civil-service reform in Maryland amounts to. My friend has heard much of that. He has heard it right and left in that State. But this system, having been so abused there and elsewhere, is still in the hearts of the people, gaining force and strength for the business administration of the offices of this Government.

Here and there in this bill we are asked to drop clerks within civil service grades and to provide clerks below the civil service grades of salary, not to save money, but to make more Democratic patronage.

Another proviso is more frank. Two years ago the Democratic majority here by an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, offered by the distinguished chairman [Mr. RANDALL] and supported by my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOLMAN], insisted that the one hundred and fifty special pension examiners we then provided should be selected under the civil-service rules, to prevent the Republican Commissioner of Pensions from appointing his party favorites as political agents.

Under a Republican administration I voted to extend the civil-service law to these new offices. The House passed it, the Republican Senate adopted it, the Republican President signed it, the Republican Commissioner of Pensions followed strictly the law; but the administration has changed. To-day the same Democratic leaders provide by another rider on the same bill that the same one hundred and fifty special pension examiners shall no longer be selected by competitive examination, but by the Democratic Commissioner of Pensions, from their party friends just in time to become active emissaries in every Congressional district this fall. They have reversed themselves. They are for civil service or spoils just as they are in or out. It does not content them to know that their zealous partisan Commissioner of Pensions has already so adroitly evaded the law as to put in nearly all Democrats. The majority here want a clean sweep.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me a word right there?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe I have a right to say what I said in the committee. If the gentleman was present he will recollect——

Mr. McCOMAS. I was not.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, those who were there will remember that when the matter was recently under discussion I said that there was, perhaps, more occasion for a thorough civil-service examination in connection with these offices than with any other offices under the Government.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to say that he believes this proviso ought to be struck out.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe this, that these examiners who are here provided for would be more properly subjected to a civil-service examination than any other officers of the Government—necessarily so because of the character of the matters which they are called upon to investigate.

But I am free to say that the administration of the civil-service law, through the regulations made by the Commissioners, have a good deal tempered and cooled my admiration of the law. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. But will the ardor of the distinguished chairman of the committee go with me far enough to vote to strike out this proviso?

Mr. RANDALL. You will see when the vote is taken. [Laughter.] I have not changed my mind on that, and I do not know that I shall change my vote.

Mr. McCOMAS. But my honored friend on the subcommittee, the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. HOLMAN], was at that time, when the civil-service rules were applied to these special examiners, in the forefront of the battle to shorten debate and press the House to a vote on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment. He at that time distinguished himself by putting these very officers under the civil-service rules, but to-day I find him, not recanting his civil-service zeal, but bitterly fighting civil service. Has not your partisan Commissioner of Pensions done the best he could? Has he not appointed more than half Democrats? Do you want the whole earth? Yes, you want a "clean sweep."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to say that the administration of the civil-service law since he made these remarks in 1884 has dampened his ardor.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, I don't believe the civil-service law has been honestly administered by the Republican party.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I supposed you referred to the administration that has been in power since you quote these remarks in 1884.

Mr. RANDALL. I was of that opinion, and in the light of more history and greater time spent in studying the subject, I am still of the same opinion.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have already reminded you of the very case in point, where members of a Democratic House, along with Republicans here, voted in 1884 to put under the civil-service rules officers whose appointment was provided for under a bill then pending; and a Republican Senate accepted that proposition, a Republican President signed the bill, and a Republican Commissioner of Pensions put it in force.

Mr. RANDALL. And it has been asserted here to-day, and not contradicted, that not a single Democrat secured office under the terms of that act.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was flatly contradicted.

Mr. McCOMAS. I too deny it. I could produce the names of a number of Democrats who were appointed under that law, and under a Republican Commissioner of Pensions after civil-service examination.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not asserting the fact myself; I say it has been asserted here to-day.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And you said it was not contradicted, which is not accurate.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not hear anybody contradict it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, there were at least a dozen.

Mr. McCOMAS. Now I wish to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he would have us believe we are now under a wise Democratic administration; and an expression of his which I was about to read has very great pertinence. On May 29, 1884, said Mr. RANDALL:

> This proviso here removes these appointments [the special pension examiners] from the civil-service rules. Therefore, to test the sense of the committee, I move to strike out the first proviso. Let me ask the gentleman if the best way to judge of the capacity of applicants for this service is not by following the rules of the Civil Service Commission?

Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the best way to judge of the capacity of applicants for this service is not by following the rules of the Civil Service Commission to-day under Cleveland as he believed it under Arthur?

Mr. RANDALL. The clause of the civil-service regulations which makes this distinction as to age I consider in the light of a rotten branch upon a healthy tree; and I, for one, propose directly to take whatever hatchet I may find near at hand and chop it off. [Applause.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes, I believe the gentleman will proceed directly; but the committee indirectly means to grub up the whole tree. [Laughter and applause.] That is the purpose of this proviso.

But to resume. You made that pledge in 1876, in 1880, and in 1884; and now when a Democratic reform administration has the chance to administer civil-service reform in all its purity and efficiency, you turn your back upon that pledge of your platform to civil service.

The Democratic politicians may decry it; the people do not. I believe that the great mass of the generous and enlightened people I represent, without distinction of party, believe that their Government has a right to the service of trained, honest, and capable officials; believe that the minor offices of the Government should not be filled by the favorites of a few party leaders; believe that these places should be open to the whole people, the poor as well as the influential, by competition of merit.

In 1876, in 1880, in 1884, to get power you pledged your party by its platforms to civil-service reform. Now that you are in possession of the Government you would throw off the mask and array your party against it. But the reform will survive. It has come to stay.

ONE PLEDGE REDEEMED.

Candor compels me to admit that you have kept one pledge of your platform of 1884. I refer to its declaration "that change is necessary is proved by an existing surplus of more than $100,000,000."

The last Democratic President had left the Treasury empty, worse than empty. So the platform pithily pledged the party to do it again, to get rid of the surplus. Apparently you have redeemed that pledge. Without repealing a tax, without taking off a customs duty, without lifting a single burden from the people, in a single year you have wiped out as with a sponge the surplus revenue.

Said President Garfield on this floor:

There are two committees of this House that stand, if I may so speak, with their backs to each other and facing in opposite directions. One is the Committee of Ways and Means. That committee faces out upon all the business of this country from which a revenue can be had. They ask the nation this one question, Where can we get a revenue to supply the machinery of this Government, to fill the Treasury as it ought to be filled? And they apply to all of the people of this country, to all its wealth, to all its trade, to all its commerce, and ask what contributions shall be gathered and how they shall be gathered from the people.

But that committee wants one thing before they start out upon this inquiry—they want the figures, the sum total. And they turn to the other committee which stands back to back to them, the Committee on Appropriations, and inquire of that committee how much money must we give you to run this Government for the coming year? And they get the figures from the Committee on Appropriations. That committee says to them, we will require so many millions of dollars.

The first scene in this spirited drama is presented to-day and there is a new meaning in it. We behold the eminent chairman of the Ways and Means [Mr. MORRISON] and the eminent chairman of the Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] standing to-day with their backs to each other. They are indeed literally facing in opposite directions on the tariff.

The other scene, the fruit of Garfield's long experience on this floor, is omitted. The Ways and Means Committee do not turn to all the Committees of Appropriation and ask how much money must we give you to run this Government for the coming year. "The eye can not say to the hand, I have no need of thee." Had they turned and examined they might have withheld a tariff-revision bill based on an assumed enormous surplus revenue. Let this House then turn and look the other way, after six months of session, to see whether the revenue will indeed exceed the appropriations for the coming year.

THE SURPLUS EXPENDED.

The report of the committee on the new Morrison tariff bill says:

The expenditures for the fiscal year 1885, including pensions and the legal requirements of the public debt, were $305,830,970.54. Neither "the actual needs of an economical administration of the Government nor the patriotic expectations of the people justify any increase of this enormous annual expenditure, and we may safely estimate the annual surplus to exceed $30,000,000."

Upon this estimated surplus, by enlarging the free-list and reducing duties it is hoped to reduce the customs revenue more than $25,000,000 annually.

This legislation is based upon the results of 1885; but the estimates of expenditure by the administration for the year 1887 largely exceed the actual expenditure for 1885.

The first Democratic President since Buchanan in his first message to Congress, for the first time since the war reported that there was an estimated deficiency for 1887.

Secretary Manning reported that as compared with the last year of Republican rule the receipts had fallen off nearly $25,000,000 ($24,829,163.54), while expenditures had increased more than $16,000,000 ($16,100,690.78). For the year 1887 he estimated the expenditures at $339,589,552.34, and estimated ordinary receipts at $315,000,000, whereas the Ways and Means Committee assume a surplus of $30,000,000. The highest fiscal authority of the Government reports an estimated deficit for 1887 of $24,589,552.34. Instead of one hundred millions surplus there is fear, just fear, of a large deficit.

Now turn to the appropriation bills already passed or reported to this House. They will increase this apprehension. The agricultural, the Army, the Military Academy, the District of Columbia, the Indian bills as they passed this House, show slight reductions as compared with the current law for 1886; the consular and diplomatic and the Post-Office bills a marked increase, exceeding the reduction made in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill now before the House as compared with the current law for 1886:

The amount of regular annual appropriations made at the last session were for 1886	$219,595,283 18
The permanent annual appropriations as reported by the Treasury amount for 1886 to	118,154,728 69
Making the total appropriations for 1886	337,750,011 87
The pension appropriation law for 1887 is an increase over 1886 of	15,751,200 00
The river and harbor bill for 1887 is an increase over 1886 (when none was passed) of	15,142,100 00
On the basis of 1886 the aggregate appropriations which have already passed this House for 1887 and those to come will show	368,646,311 87
The Navy bill as reported is $11,849,858.70, and the naval construction bill as reported is $6,425,000, aggregating $18,274,858.70, in excess of the law for 1886, which was $15,070,837.95, in the sum for 1887 of	3,204,020 75
The coast and harbor fortifications bill may readily increase that of 1886 for 1887 more than	4,000,000 00
The deficiency bills for 1887 will exceed those for 1886 more than	4,000,000 00
The public buildings and all miscellaneous appropriations will show an increase over 1886 for 1887 of more than	5,000,000 00
The total appropriations for 1887 will therefore exceed	384,850,332 62
To meet this enormous appropriation we find the amount of estimated revenue for 1887	315,000,000 00
And the amount of estimated postal revenues for 1887	47,542,252 00
The total estimated revenue being for 1887 only	362,542,252 00

TARIFF REVISION THEREBY IMPOSSIBLE NOW.

With a deficit of twenty-two millions between estimated revenues for 1887 and the actual appropriations for 1887 what a mockery of the prostrate business, the distress of the people, the unemployed labor of this country is it for the tariff tinkers to cry for a cutting down of surplus revenue. With such a deficiency what excuse is there for the eloquent gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] saying that the problem before us is to reduce these excessive revenues? That problem has been solved by this Congress. The surplus has been squandered by the extravagance within this Hall and has shrunken with the shrinkage in business outside. To-day and for the next year we need the present tariff for revenue. In this year of depression our highest duty is to secure and maintain for the American people the advantages resulting from highly paid labor.

In a year when labor is crying out for fewer hours and higher wages you dare not overwhelm our people with the products from abroad of labor at half wages and twelve or fourteen hours per day. At a time when the crops of the farmers bring the lowest prices known during the century, when the dairy industry cries out for relief against olemargarine, and the wool-clip has steadily fallen in value, you say to the farmer you will take away his home market, you will filibuster on this floor against a bill to save the cows and milk and butter of his farm in order to befriend the oleo manufacturers, and you will ruin the sheep husbandry of the nation.

We could not if we would reduce the tariff revenue now, and the project of tariff reform is as futile and hollow as your treatment of civil-service reform.

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM ALSO A FAILURE.

What then of your third great campaign pledge of administrative reform? The people heard your cry "turn the rascals out," and let you in to look at the books. You control every Department. You have put in the heads of every bureau and the chiefs of every division. You have steadily turned out experienced men to put in new men wherever the civil-service law permitted or could be evaded. You have ignored the laws protecting Union soldiers in office.

The new Secretaries, the new Commissioners, the new assistants and deputies, the new Comptrollers, the new Auditors, the new heads and chiefs reported promptly that the books were correct to a penny, and they now report the estimates for appropriation to run the Government during the next year. It is true there was a proclamation of economy at the outset.

The Executive Mansion set the example. Three clerks were cut off, but one of them is put back on this bill at an increased salary, and the appropriation for the White House will this year greatly exceed that of last year. The carriages, horses, and drivers were put away with ostentation, but already some of these have been restored, and nearly every Department clamors for a larger contingent fund, which is the sure temptation to extravagance. There was a loudly-advertised reduction of the number and salaries of all custodians of public buildings throughout the land. Much clamor was made in the press about 30 per cent. reduction herein. But quietly the old number of men and the same salaries were restored, and the difference will be paid in the deficiency bill this year. The administration received the credit of this reform, the chance to fill the places anew, and spent as much money, and for the next year quietly demand more than 30 per cent. more money than the Republican administration ever expended for this purpose.

In these and many like instances those early spasms of economy now quietly swell the deficiency bills.

You taught the honest Democrats to believe that the offices were overcrowded with useless employés at high salaries, and that the mission of your party, returning to power, was to decrease the offices and reduce the salaries. But the very agents you put in place to do this work report that your cry of "retrenchment and reform" was campaign thunder, and the Democratic administration demands more men and higher salaries.

Take these estimates I hold in my hand at random. The whole book is a surprising tribute to the efficiency of Republican rule.

Turn to the Navy Department. Here they want an assistant Secretary at a handsome salary, an increase of the salary of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, an increase of the salary of the draughtsman, the assistant draughtsman, and the assistant messenger; they want three additional draughtsmen. All this when they had to spend $25,000 in England for a plan of a single ship by an Englishman. They call for more than thirty-five millions of dollars for the Navy.

Here we find the Commissioner of Pensions demanding that all the salaries of all the chiefs of all his divisions be increased, and insists that an increased force is necessary in the War Office for searches of records.

The Commissioner of Patents calls for one hundred and two additional employés. He appeals for increases of salaries all along the line—$500 more for the assistant commissioner, $250 more for the chief clerk, $500 more for the law clerk, $500 more for the financial clerk, and an increase of $100 more for all the model attendants. He wants an additional tribunal of appeals in the Patent Office, with three judges at adequate salaries.

Turn to the United States Treasurer, who asks an increase of the salaries of some of his subordinates and insists that their compensation is not commensurate with the work done. He protests that the salaries paid under Republican rule are less than salaries paid for like services by private establishments with much less responsibility.

The Secretary of War asks an increase of salary of $250 for his chief clerk, of $400 for his disbursing clerk, of $400 for each of his three chiefs of divisions, and of $200 for each of three assistants to them.

This cry for increase of salary runs along every line of administration.

To administer the executive, legislative, and judicial offices of the Government the new adminstration demand fifty-three more offices than under the Republican administration were provided for the last year, and they require more money than last year, although, if we regard the decrease of interest on the public debt, the last year was the most expensive since the war.

But I will not weary the House with a recapitulation of all the calls for new offices and higher salaries made by the new administration.

It is fair to state that the bill before us by the economy of the committee, and the reduction in the Treasury mainly by the decrease of employés in the internal-revenue service to accord with decreased business in that branch, the decrease in the Quartermaster-General's Office by decrease of war claims, and closing unnecessary mints and assay offices, makes substantial reductions. But this same bill grants many of the increases of employés and some of the salaries.

Taking all of them together, the estimates of the new administration to run all the Departments of the Government for 1887 exceed the appropriations for 1886 more than $56,000,000.

Omit the river and harbor bill, for whose extravagance this House is responsible, and still we find the new heads of the Government, with professions of "retrenchment and reform," demanding for the next year more officers than the Republicans and forty millions of money more than was appropriated last year.

What a splendid tribute to Republican management, or what a fraud was the cry of Democratic economy!

Never was a general call for higher salaries in every Department more unexpected, more indefensible. When we are at peace, when the business of the internal revenue and the customs service have shrunken with the depression of the country, when a dollar is harder to earn and will buy more than at any time since the Government was founded, I protest against any general increase of salaries, fixed incomes to be paid out of the declining wages of labor and cheapening products of the farm and mill and mine.

But after the extravagance of this House at this session you gentlemen of the majority are hardly the persons to turn and rebuke the new heads of the administration for the extraordinary discrepancy between their and your loud professions and protestations of economy and reform in the public service, and the enormous increase of expenditures proposed for 1887 in running the Government. Alas, administrative reform too is a failure!

The efforts of the chairman of appropriations [Mr. RANDALL], aided by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], can not stem the tide of extravagance here. The passionate protests of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] against the reckless waste here go unheeded. The oft-repeated warnings of the chairman of the Ways and Means [Mr. MORRISON] that the majority were not sent here to spend more money and make more offices than the Republicans had, grow more and more pathetic as he saw his followers sweep away the surplus and begin upon a deficit.

If you who are the majority are convinced that you are as dangerous to the country as your leaders say you are, and if you believe the country is fast finding it out, you should pass the appropriation bills and go home. You are forced to abandon all pretense of being as economical as the Republicans were. You postpone great questions to consider small ones. You waste the people's time and money. There is a fleck of war cloud on our Northeastern horizon. Take back, therefore, some of the money you have just voted to waste on obscure bayous and creeks, that with it we may begin to fortify our defenseless coasts on the lakes, oceans, and gulfs.

Watch the flock of public building bills now fluttering over our heads. Already this session $4,167,737.50 have been appropriated in one House or the other for these purposes, and as much more will be fought for if this session be prolonged. I beg you to save that sum to build up the Navy.

Remember that the pensions justly due the defenders of the nation, their widows and orphans are a sacred obligation. Keep the money we will need for these debts of honor safe from the tramp of the army of schemes crowding the Calendar, coming with "the Constitution and an appropriation."

If you remain all summer there is no hope that you may pass the educational bill, for the majority here are deaf to the warning that the tide of illiteracy rising in this country, higher and higher in the South, is the greatest danger of the Republic. They do not accept the saying of Martin Luther:

Ignorance is more dangerous for a people than the armies of an enemy.

But there is danger that you may embrace that eminently American, that truly constitutional scheme, the Tehauntepec Canal, with its enormous demand for $37,000,000.

You have returned to our father's house hungry and thirsty and reckless as an erring prodigal son. You have grievously disappointed the great body of the people, both the Republicans and the sincere Democrats, all the citizens who desire under all administrations an economical, honest, and capable Government. [Great applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the general debate on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill be closed at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HISCOCK and others objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest that the debate shall be closed in so many hours, because the whole time before the hour fixed for to-morrow may be taken up by other business.

Mr. HOLMAN. Say then in three hours.

Objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will try then to-morrow to arrange the time.

POLYGAMY.

Mr. OATES. I ask by unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], chairman of the committee, prepared the report, but being necessarily absent suggested to me to make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to polygamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882.

Mr. OATES. I am directed to report a substitute for that bill.

Mr. CAINE. I object to the presentation of that report. I do not mean any disrespect to the gentleman.

Mr. OATES. Does not the objection come too late?

The SPEAKER. The Chair said the report will be sent up and will be received if there be no objection. The gentleman could not know what the report is until the title of the bill is read. The Chair supposes, therefore, if the gentleman has a right to object at all, he has a right to object now. There is some doubt whether the gentleman from Utah, being a Delegate and not a Member, has the right to object.

Mr. OATES. I make that point.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose the Chair would like to look into that point before deciding it.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. It may be a very important one in the proceedings of the House.

Mr. OATES. I only want to have the report go upon the House Calendar and be printed.

The SPEAKER. It is desirable to have this point decided, because at some time it may become an important question.

Mr. RANDALL. And lead to difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hold the question under consideration until to-morrow morning.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2971) granting a pension to Francis Deming;

A bill (H. R. 2968) granting a pension to Harriet Peak;

A bill (S. 206) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Zanesville, Ohio;

A bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich;

A bill (S. 763) for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1016) granting an increase of pension to Abel Comstock;

A bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny;

A bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to Robert Halsey;

A bill (S. 1382) for the relief of Lydia O. Hutchings;

A bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Harriet Welch;

A bill (S. 1400) granting a pension to William H. Beck;

A bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith;

A bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Smith;

A bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage; and

A bill (S. 2025) granting a pension to James Butler.

The hour of 5 p. m. having arrived, the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: Petition of 9 citizens of Dexter, Cook County, Texas, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886 for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after three months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein—to the same committee.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Abraham McGee, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WINANS: Petition of William H. Pullen and 50 others, soldiers and citizens of Fowlerville and vicinity, Livingston County, Michigan, praying for the passage of the Mexican pension bill—to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 9, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received yesterday from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 1391) to provide for the erection of a public building in Springfield, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 1983) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Reading, Pa.

The bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] has had another terrible family affliction, which will detain him from the Senate for some time. I therefore ask for him a leave of absence from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina present requests a leave of absence for his colleague, who is absent on account of sickness in his family. An indefinite leave of absence will be granted, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CALL. I present petitions from workingmen in the navy-yards at Brooklyn, New York, Norfolk or Portsmouth, and Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2268) to grant leaves of absence to employés in the United States navy-yards. The bill provides that any employé of a United States navy-yard who may be injured in the performance of his duty shall be allowed leave of absence with pay during the period of sickness in consequence of such inquiry. The Committee on Education and Labor have authorized me to report the bill this morning, and I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I present the following dispatch, with a view of having it referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

We, citizens of Spartanburg city, S. C., respectfully request the Senators from South Carolina to use your influence in defeating the oleomargarine bill. We believe it is protection of the worst type and unfair. If it is the policy of the Government to encourage rather than stifle all industries which are injurious to the country, let the people buy oleomargarine as they would another article of food.

The dispatch is signed by Joseph Walker, mayor, B. F. Shookley, a leading merchant, and a large number of other merchants and business men of the city of Spartanburg.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the telegraphic dispatch will be received as a memorial, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by Friendship Assembly, Knights of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the bill proposing to place a tax upon oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the petition of Fairbanks & Co., of Baltimore, Md., praying for the supplying of the scale known as "Fairbanks' infallible American gold and silver coin scale and counterfeit coin detector" to the Government Departments and offices where coin is received or disbursed; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Albert Greenleaf, praying to be allowed compensation for service on the coasts of California and Mexico during the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1212) for the further protection of property from fire and safety of lives in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred four admendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported them severally without amendment, and moved their reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The amendments relate to specific cases of public buildings?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the amendments be stated from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the necessity for reading the amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has asked that they be read.

The proposed amendments were read, as follows:

To enlarge and complete the public building at Harrisonburg, Va., as recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the custom-house, at the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon; and plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $350,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Oregon shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

For the purchase of land in New Bedford, Mass., adjoining and additional to the lot of land the purchase whereof is provided for by the act approved February 20, 1885, for the post-office in said city, not exceeding $30,000.

For construction of a public building at La Crosse, Wis., in addition to the $100,000 heretofore appropriated for the purpose, $75,000.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. 2240) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Concord, State of New Hampshire;

A bill (H. R. 7735) making an appropriation to complete the public building at Hannibal, Mo., in accordance with the original plan of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and to make the same fire-proof;

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2627) to regulate the pay of the officers of the Army and Navy who refuse or neglect to provide for the support of their families; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON introduced bill (S. 2628) granting a pension to Joshua Parker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2629) granting a pension to Jane Brown Dunn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2630) for the relief of Miriam D. Brandt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EUSTIS introduced a bill (S. 2631) to donate the United States marine hospital at New Orleans, La., to the city of New Orleans for educational purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EUSTIS. With the bill I send to the desk a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana asking that Congress pass the bill. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JOHN H. KINKEAD AND OTHERS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I submit an amendment which I intend to propose to the bill (S. 1353) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claim of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood, which was called yesterday on the Calendar, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table.

WILLIAM J. MARTIN.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate full and complete copies of all papers, affidavits, and other evidence on file in his Department relating to the claim of William J. Martin, of Oregon, for a balance alleged to be due and owing him under an alleged contract for beef-cattle made with Lieut. G. W. Hawkins in June, 1849, and for the alleged delivery of beef-cattle under such alleged contract for the use of the Army, together with copies of any orders or adjudications made by the Department in reference to the same.

JUDICIAL CIRCUITS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Some time ago the Senate passed the bill (S. 1286) to change the limits of certain judicial circuits, to establish a new judicial circuit, and for the appointment of a judge for the same. After the passage of the bill I entered a motion to reconsider. I should like to have the bill taken up for the purpose of withdrawing the motion, in order that the bill may stand passed and go to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill referred to will be considered as pending with a view to allowing the Senator from Iowa to withdraw the motion to reconsider. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa proposes to withdraw the motion to reconsider. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill stands passed.

MARY F. POTTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. While I was unavoidably out of the Senate Chamber a few days ago Order of Business 226, being the bill (S. 244) for the relief of Mary F. Potts, was passed by the Senate, extending a patent right. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed, and I ask to let it lie until the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] returns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote by which a certain bill was passed. The bill having gone to the other House, an order will have to be made for its return.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that an order be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the usual order will be made to recall the bill.

FORECLOSURES OF MORTGAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the fact that Order of Business No. 236 was passed during his absence, after which he entered a motion to reconsider. The bill will be read by its title, and the occupant of the Chair will ask to have it recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 984) to regulate the foreclosure of mortgages and deeds of trust in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the motion to reconsider will be regarded as agreed to, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Chair hears no objection.

EXECUTRIX OF WILLIAM WARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first business on the Calendar will now be stated.

The bill (S. 1150) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to pay to P. L. Ward, executrix of William Ward, deceased, of Norfolk, Va., $2,075.13, in full satisfaction of all claim for beef and vegetables furnished by William Ward to the United States Navy and in full satisfaction for hay sold to the quartermaster of the United States Army.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. PIKE March 10, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1150) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, beg leave to offer the following report:

Bills for the same claim as the present one passed the Senate at the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses, but each time failed of consideration in the House.

At the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress Senator HARRIS, for the Committee on Claims, made a report on this claim, which embodied clearly and fully all the facts in the case.

The Committee on Claims of the Forty-seventh Congress, and again of the Forty-eighth Congress, adopted that report.

Your committee adopt the same report, annexing hereto a copy, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 428, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 879) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, have examined the same, and report thereon as follows:

This claim was presented to the Senate during the Forty-sixth Congress by the petition of said executrix, which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and assigned to Mr. HARRIS, a member of the committee, for examination and report.

On the 11th day of February, 1880, the claim was favorably reported to the Senate by Mr. HARRIS. The following is a copy of the report:

The petition states that petitioner is the widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased. That in June, 1860, William Ward entered into a written contract with the United States for supplying fresh beef and vegetables to the Navy at the Norfolk (Va.) station, and that under said contract her late husband and testator on or about the 21st of January, 1861, supplied the United States ship Plymouth with the articles named to the amount of $275.13, for which no payment was ever made, and she refers to the records of the Navy Department for the proof. The committee sent the petition to the Navy Department with a request for such information in respect to this claim as the records of that Department could furnish, and received from the Secretary the following reply:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 5, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the petition of Mrs. P. L. Ward, asking for payment of $275.13, on account of fresh beef and vegetables supplied by her late husband, William Ward, of Norfolk, Va., for the use of the United States Navy, which petition was referred to this Department by the honorable Secretary of War, in compliance with your request of the 15th ultimo.

The account of the late Mr. Ward is correct as shown by the records of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing in this Department, with the exception that the fresh beef and vegetables referred to were delivered to the United States steamer Brooklyn instead of the United States steamer Plymouth as stated in the petition.

Very respectfully,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. I. G. HARRIS, United States Senate.

From which the committee is satisfied that the articles were furnished under contract as stated in the petition, and have never been paid for, and that the amount, $275.13, is justly due the claimant and should be paid.

The petitioner also states that in the month of August, 1863, her testator entered into a verbal contract with Capt. Edwin Ludlow, of the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, in the presence of the Hon. L. H. Chandler, United States attorney for that district, and one other witness, for the purchase of 60 tons of hay, at $30 per ton, which was delivered by her said testator to the said Ludlow and used by the Army of the United States. That shortly after the delivery said Ludlow left that locality without paying for the hay, though often having promised so to do.

On the 12th December, 1866, her late husband and testator addressed a letter to the Quartermaster-General asking payment for this hay so furnished, reciting the facts of the contract and delivery of the hay, and the fact that no voucher was given, because Captain Ludlow said it was not necessary to give a voucher, as he would pay for the hay as soon as he received funds, which he was daily expecting; but he left there without paying, and without giving any voucher for the 60 tons of hay, and that upon diligent inqury he had never been able to ascertain the residence of Captain Ludlow since that time.

This letter is indorsed on the back as follows:

"I most unhesitatingly indorse the within statement.

"L. H. CHANDLER,
"United States District Attorney for Virginia.
"J. T. DANIELS."

On the 16th of January, 1867, this account was made out upon the regular printed form furnished by the Department, upon which the sale, delivery, and value of the hay, amounting to $1,800, and the loyalty of the claimant are proved by the affidavits of the then claimants, William Ward, L. H. Chandler, and J. R. Hunter; and the respectability and loyalty of the said Ward, Chandler, and Hunter are respectively certified to by John E. Doyle, justice of the peace; and the respectability and loyalty of William Ward is also certified to by William W. Wing, postmaster.

The oath of allegiance to the United States of William Ward is also exhibited, and Henry M. Bowden, clerk of the corporation court, certifies to the citizenship, respectability, and loyalty of William Ward, and to the official character of John E. Doyle as a justice of the peace for said county.

The letter above referred to, addressed by William Ward to the Quartermaster-General, and the proof above referred to were sent to the committee by the War Department in answer to a letter from the committee asking for such information as the records of that Department could furnish as to the justice of this claim. The following is the letter from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 30, 1880.

SIR: Acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, referring for information memorial of Mrs. P. L. Ward for pay for certain quartermaster stores and beef delivered by her deceased husband, William Ward, in 1860 and 1863 to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army and the naval station at Norfolk, Va., respectively, I have the honor in reply to inclose herewith a letter from Mr. Ward, dated December 12, 1866, submitting his claim to the Quartermaster-General, paper which contains all the information on the subject the records of this Department afford.
